80. She receives him with wonderfull good words, and when (as it ſeems) he refuſed to light from his Horſe, cauſed ſome drink to be given, but when the Cup was at his Mouth one of her Servants privately before inſtructed to ſtab him with a Poniard. He exceedingly affrighted with ſuch unexpected kindneſs, put Spurs to his Horſe and fled as faſt as he could towards his Company, but the Wound being Mortal, ſpent with loſs of bloud he fell to the ground, and having one foot in the Stirrop was dragged through by-ways and trac'd by his bloud by thoſe ſhe ſent after him, who brought back the dead Body, and they buried it without Honour at Werham. Here they imagined they had buried his Memory as well as his Body, but the place of his Sepulture (it's ſaid) grew famous for Miracles, whereupon Duke Elſer that had an hand in his Death, interred it Royally at Shepton or Shaftsbury. Yet notwithſtanding this amends, as he thought he had made, did he die ſhortly after eaten up of Lice. Elfrida was ſo convinced of her wickedneſs that from her Courtly and Delicate courſe of life ſhe betook her ſelf to a very ſevere Penance; wearing Haircloth, ſleeping on the ground without a Pillow, and

Who is ſtab'd.

Malmesb.

and herein ſhe continued all her life. But ſo periſhed Edward after he had born the Name of King three years and an half; for his Innocency and the Miracles wrought after his death, obtained the Sirname of the Martyr, which opinion of his Sanctity was more confirmed by other great Miſeries which ſhortly after fell upon the Land, which the People did verily believe were inflicted on them for his Murther. The place of the Murther (which Hoveden calls Corſegate) was Corſe Caſtle (as Mr. Cambden affirms) in Dorſetſhire, in the Iſle of Purbeck; which for a great part of it is an Heath, and (Foreſt like) in his time was furniſhed both with Red and Fallow Deer. Shaftsbury is alſo a Town in that County.

And ſucceeded by Ethelred.

81. Ethelred the ſecond Son of King Edgar by Elfrida ſucceeded his murthered Brother in the third year of Baſilius Junior Emperour of the Eaſt, and the ſeventh of Otho Junior Emperour of the Weſt, A. D. DCCCCLXXIX. Malmesbury gives us this ſhort Character of him and his Reign. That he rather beſieged than governed the Kingdom for ſeven and thirty years. That the courſe of his life was cruel at the beginning, miſerable in the middle, and diſhonourable in the concluſion. To cruelty he attributes the death of his Brother, which he approved becauſe he did not puniſh; he was infamous for his Cowardiſe and Idleneſs, and miſerable in reſpect of his Death. His ſluggiſhneſs was predicted by Dunſtan from his * bewraying the Font at his Baptiſm; ſuch a Story as is told of Conſtantinus Copronymus Emperour of Conſtantinople. Yet is not that a ſign of ill nature which the Monk adds concerning him, that being then but a Child of ten years old, when he heard of his Brother's death he wept moſt bitterly, which drove his Mother into ſuch a fury, that having not a Rod at hand ſhe beat him with Wax Candles that lay in her way till he was half dead, which cauſed in him ſuch an averſion to them that he could never endure any ſuch Lights to be brought in before him. But to come to the material points of his Reign, his Mother, after ſhe had done her Feat upon Edward, aſſembled the Nobility together for his Coronation, which was to be performed by Dunſtan the Archbiſhop. His work it was, and he did it though with great Reluctancy, not thinking it convenient to ſet any other Pretender up. But as he put the Crown upon his Head he could not contain himſelf, but broke out into theſe Expreſſions. Becauſe thou haſt aſpired to the Kingdom by the death of thy Brother, Thus ſaith the Lord God, the ſin of thine Ignominious Mother ſhall not be expiated, neither the ſin of thoſe that were her Counſellours, but by great bloudſhed of thy miſerable People, for ſuch miſeries ſhall come upon England as it never underwent ſince it had that Name. Not long after, ſome three years, came to the Port of Hampton near to Wincheſter, ſeven ſhips of Pirates, and waſting the Maritime Coaſts again departed; which (ſaith the Monk) I paſs not over, becauſe amongſt the Engliſh there is great diſcourſe concerning theſe Ships.

* Alii de mingendo ſolum loquuntur ut Huntingdon. his verbis: Minxit namque cum baptizaretur in Sacro fonte.

Who is Crowned by Dunſtan.

82. About the time of the Coronation which was ſolemnized at Kingſton, one Midnight, a Cloud ſometimes bloudy ſometimes fiery appeared all over the Land, portending the return of the dreadfull Daniſh Tempeſt which had long ſurceaſt. Theſe barbarous and inhumane Rovers underſtanding what the Eſtate of England muſt needs be under the Government of a Child, in the third year of his Reign arrived at Southampton (as Malmesbury hints) and from ſeven great Ships took the Town, plundered and ſpoiled the Countrey taking away with them great Booty. Thence they went to the Iſle of Tanet which they waſted, when about the ſame time others from Norway did the ſame by the Countrey lying about Cheſter. The following year theſe Pirates that had done ſo much miſchief at Southampton haraſſed again the Maritime parts of Devonſhire and Cornwall, and in that which followed three other Veſſels arrived and very much indamaged the Coaſts about Portland, to which Miſchiefs this was added, that the City of London was burnt, by what Accident is not diſcovered; in the year of our Lord DCCCCLXXXI. The Diſorders hereby raiſed in the Land were increaſed by Domeſtick Troubles. For a difference aroſe betwixt the King himſelf and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, it's uncertain upon what occaſion, but the King laid Siege unto the City. Dunſtan the Archbiſhop ſent him an affrighting Meſſage, that he had beſt take heed how he provoked St. Andrew the Patron of the Place; who as he was very kind and favourable to ſuch as well deſerved at his hands, ſo terrible in his Vengeance upon ſuch as incurred his diſpleaſure. But though the King was little more than a Child he could not be removed with ſuch Scarecrows, he continued his Siege till Dunſtan was fain to purchaſe his removal with an Hundred Pounds, which ſo affected the Biſhop as to put him into another Prophetical fit. " He ſent him word, that be-

England infeſted with Pirates in ſeveral places.

Hoveden.

Domeſtick Troubles.

“ cauſe he had preferred Silver before God himſelf, Money before an Apoſtle, and “ Covetouſneſs before him; the Calamities formerly related ſhould ſpeedily come “ upon him, but he the Biſhop ſhould firſt be dead. And within two years he died, his death being uſhered in with ſtrange Fevers upon Men, and Fluxes upon Cattel.

St. Dunſtan dies.

Febres hominum & lues animalium quæ Anglicè Scytha nominatur, Latinè autem fluxus Interaneorum dici poteſt. Hoveden.

83. Immediately followed theſe Miſchiefs, which one leſs than a Prophet might foreſee, the Danes, having got a meaſure of the preſent weak eſtate of the Nation through the King's ſloath and want of Spirit. But they themſelves had at this time a Prince of a quite contrary Diſpoſition, one Suene or Suene-Otto, as Adam Bremenſis calls him, the Son of Harald the Great, one ſo undutifully active as to deprive his Father of his Kingdom. He made uſe of ſome whom Harald had conſtrained to profeſs Chriſtian Religion, which now abjuring they renounced their Faith and Allegiance both together ſetting up Suene againſt his Father, and declaring War againſt the old Man, who had therein the fortune to miſcarry, and flying to a City of the Sclavi called Jamne there died of his Wounds. Suene now rid of his Father perſecutes Chriſtians, and breaths revenge againſt the Sclavi; againſt whom making War he is twice taken Priſoner by them, and redeemed with vaſt Treaſure. After this Heric King of the Swedes takes occaſion to quarrel with him, and ingaging with him in ſeveral Sea Fights has the better of him, and at length outs him of his Kingdom which he quietly enjoys all his life. Thus juſtly rewarded for his horrid Crimes, he wanders up and down without relief. Thrucco the Son of Haco then Prince of the Normans rejected him as a Pagan, and Ethelred the Son of Edgar (he calls him Adalread) remembring what miſchiefs the Danes had brought on this Iſland, with ſcorn repells him. At length he is entertained by the King of the Scots, who taking compaſſion of him gave him free Quarter for fourteen years together. But ſo inraged was he at the repulſe given him by the King of England, that ever after he made it his ſtudy how to plague and afflict the Countrey, ſometime by his own peculiar Forces, and ſometime by the aſſiſtence of others, as we ſhall ſee. How true this Story is we cannot aſſert, the Affairs of the Northern Nations as to thoſe times being involved in ſo great obſcurity. However we thought it not amiſs to relate it as ſuiting with the Fortunes and Inclinations of this man, which proved ſo great a Plague to this our Countrey that he ſeems to have been acted by ſome extraordinary paſſion, whether of Revenge or Ambition or both together.

Suene deprives his Father of the Kingdom of the Danes.

But is afterwards outed by Heric King of the Swedes.

Who being repulſed elſewhere is entertained by the Scotiſh King.

84. Not long after the death of Dunſtan the Danes invaded the Maritime parts of Devonſhire, againſt whom one Goda Lieutenant of that County, and Stremewold a moſt valiant Souldier, made head and put them to flight, but died themſelves in the Combat. For two years we hear no more of them, but in the third they infeſted again the Eaſtern Parts and ſpoiled the Town of Ipſwich (then and long after called Gippſwich, from the River Gipping) their Leaders being one Juſtin and Guthmund the Son of Steitan. They were oppoſed by Bricthnoth the moſt valiant Duke of the Eaſt Saxons, who fought with them at Maldon, where a great Multitude on both ſides were ſlain, but the diſadvantage fell to the Engliſh by reaſon of the loſs of their Captain. Now were all Havens, all convenient places of Landing filled with the Danes who ſwarmed in ſuch Numbers into the Land, that it could not be known where moſt conveniently they might be met with. The readieſt courſe, doubtleſs, had been for the King to imitate his Father in manning out a ſtout Fleet to ſcour the Seas. But he was too lazy to follow his example, and as generally the humour of a Prince makes a ſtrong impreſſion upon the minds of his People, eſpecially the Nobility and thoſe near about him, as he lay idle and uſeleſs, ſo they contracted a great Ruſt; and reſolved it was by the Advice of Siricius the Succeſſour of Dunſtan in the See of Canterbury, and of two Dukes Ethelward and Alfric, that thoſe who could not be beaten with Iron ſhould be bribed with Gold, of which ten thouſand Pounds were given them on condition to quit the Countrey, and no more infeſt the Coaſt. An Infamous Example (ſaith Malmesbury) and unworthy of men, to redeem their Liberty with Money, which no violence can wreſt from an unconquer'd mind.

Hoveden ad Ann. 991.

The Danes invadingall parts are bought off.

85. This ſtopt their mouths for a year or thereabouts, but then their appetite was more exaſperated by what they had already taſted, being taught the way how to come by more. They land again in the North, and ſet upon Bebbanburh, now Bamborow an ancient Town in Northumberland, built by King Ida of which we have formerly ſpoken, which having taken they Plunder, and then directing their courſe to the Mouth of Humber, they waſte the Countrey on both ſides the River, Lindſey and Yorkſhire, burning all the Houſes, killing all the Men, Women and Children, and gather together vaſt Booty. The Countrey Men in an haſty and diſcompoſed manner made oppoſition, but coming to fight, three of their Leaders, Frana, Frithegiſt and Godwin being all of them Danes by the Father's ſide, betrayed them, and procured their defeat. At the ſame time no leſs treachery was practiſed at Sea, not upon the account of Conſanguinity, but Revenge. It was now thought fit to Man out a Fleet to intercept thoſe Rovers before they could land, the Conduct whereof was committed to Alfric the Son of Elſter, Duke of Mercia; and another Nobleman called Torold. This Alfric, the King for ſome offence had formerly Baniſhed, but now recalled, yet the affront had ſo inflamed him with malice, that being ſent from London to ſurprize the Danes in ſome place of diſadvantage, over-night he gave them Intelligence, and then fled to them, as writes Florent of Worceſter, which his Fleet perceiving purſued him, and took the Ship wherein he fled, yet he by ſome other convenience eſcaped from them, but by chance falling upon the Eaſt Angles they killed and drowned many of them. But Huntingdon ſays, that the Danes being forewarned by Alfric, not onely all eſcaped, but afterward with greater number of Ships ſetting upon the King's Navy killed many of the Londoners, and led away in triumph many of their Ships, together with Alfric the Conſul, as he calls him.

Simeon Dunelmenſ. ad An. Dccccxciii.

They return.

Huntingdon. ad Ann. 13. Regis Edelredi. Florent. Wigorn.

Waſting Eaſt England and other Parts.

86. By this time was Swene King of Danemark arrived, who had brought to his Aſſiſtence Anlaf (or as ſome call him, Olaf the Son of Thrucco) King of Norwey, and with a Fleet of nine Gallies entred the Thames. On the day of the Nativity of the Bleſſed Virgin they ſet upon London, endeavouring to break into and Burn it when it was ſcarcely rebuilt, but the Citizens ſo ſtrenuouſly behaved themſelves that by the aſſiſtence of God and the Virgin, as the Monks write, they forced them with great loſs to retire from the Siege. Exaſperated by this repulſe, they invade Eſſex and Kent, which they waſte with Fire and Sword, eſpecially the Sea-coaſts, and then paſs into Suſſex and the Province of Southampton, where they burn the Villages, ſpoil the Fields, and without reſpect to either Sex, rage with all cruelty againſt Mankind and inrich themſelves with great plunder. At length they horſe their Foot, and then through many Countries make their outrageous progreſs, where they commit the ſame violence ſparing neither Sex nor Age. To put a ſtop to their march by any force no preparation was made, the ſluggiſh King and his as drowzie Counſellours implore again the aid of money, which by his Embaſſadours he offers to them to take them off from their furious courſes. The ſumm agreed on was ſixteen thouſand pounds, in expectation of which they retire to their Ships and paſs to Southampton, where they winter. This being a time for Complements rather than Action, Anlaf the Norwegian King received Hoſtages for his ſafety, and accepted of Ethelred's invitation to his Court which then was at Andover. Being royally entertained and adopted the King's Son at Confirmation (or Baptiſm) as alſo nobly preſented, he ingaged to depart the Land and moleſt the Kingdom no more; and accordingly returning to his own Countrey he kept his word.

Swene with Anlaf King of Norway makes another Invaſion.

Simeon Dunelm. ad. Ann. Dccccxciv.

Anlaf bought off.

87. This was no ill advice given to Ethelred, to take off from Swene ſo powerfull an Aſſiſtent. But as Arms ſignifie little abroad except there be good Council at home, ſo in caſes of Hoſtility, Invaſions eſpecially, Conſultations without ſtrokes will not avail to remove a warlike, unfaithfull and pertinacious Enemy. The influence of the late Tribute or Bribe operated but for three years, or ſcarcely ſo much, and then the Danes that had Wintred at Southampton and ſtaid in England, fetching a compaſs about Weſt Saxony, entred the Mouth of the River Severn where paſſing they waſted North Wales, Cornwall and Devonſhire, and burning very many Towns killed multitudes of poor People, which done they fetcht another compaſs about Devonſhire and Cornwall, where having acted the ſame Hoſtilities at laſt they came to Taveſtock and there Wintred. The next year they ſailed to the Mouth of the River Frome, and waſted the greateſt part of Dorſetſhire, which done they made many Incurſions into the Iſle of Wight, and thence often returned into Dorſetſhire ſo long as they continued in the Iſland receiving Proviſions out of Suſſex and Hamſhire. The Engliſh ſeveral times made Head againſt them, but ſtill as they were going to fight were hindred either by treachery or ſome other misfortune, and turned tail againſt their Enemies. The year that followed they had the confidence to come nearer to London, paſſing through the Mouth of Thames to the River Medway, up which they advance to Rocheſter, and laid Siege to it. The Kentiſh Men took the Alarm and gave them a ſharp Encounter, wherein many fell on both ſides, but the Danes remained Maſters of the Field. Now they horſed their Foot, and ſpoiled in a manner all the Weſ-tern Coaſt of Kent, which things at laſt rouzed Ethelred and his Counſellours, ſo that they prepared both a Fleet and Land Army conſiſting moſt of Foot. But King and Commanders being all alike, they delayed their march from day to day, and oppreſſed the Countrey where they lodged. Neither the one nor the other Army, did any thing at all tending to the publick good, but burthened the People, waſted the publick Treaſure, and by their ridiculous and effeminate carriage more imboldened the Enemy to proceed, who the year following paſſing over into Normandy, upon what account we know not, at their return did more miſchief than before,

Other Hoſtilities acted by the Danes.

Simeon Dunelm. ad Ann. Dccccxcvii. & Dccccxcviii. &c.

Idem ad An. M.

Another invaſion of the Danes.

88. King Ethelred and his Officers dare peep out when there is none left to hurt them, and are grown ſo valiant, that who is he that dare oppoſe them. They not onely threaten the abſent Enemy, but go to ſeek ſome out in Cumberland, where and in the Iſle of Man the Danes of the old ſtanding, lived as quietly as did the Natives. Theſe unarmed People they ſet upon, haraſs all the Countrey with a Land Army, the Fleet being ordered to ſail about and meet them, which hindred by contrary winds, it could not doe but thoſe that were therein ſhipt, ſaw there was no danger of Foes in the Iſle of Man, and therefore landed and overran it. But the Danes the next year returning out of Normandy, entred the Mouth of the River Exe, and preſently laid ſiege to Exeter, the wall of which they battered, reſolving to ſtorm it; yet did the Inhabitants receive them ſo warmly, that not liking their entertainment they thought fit to retire,and vent all their malice on the poor Countrey which went ſadly to wreck, having none but helpleſs People to defend it, which were murthered in great multitudes, after the loſs of their Goods and Houſes. At length thoſe of Devonſhire and Somerſetſhire aſſembled themſelves together, and made ſome reſiſtence at a place called Penho, but being overpowered in Numbers were repelled with great ſlaughter. This both incouraged and inraged the inſolent Enemy, who now horſing all his men, did greater miſchief in Devonſhire than ever, and ſo returned to his ſhips, wherein he paſſed to the Iſle of Wight, and ſometimes in it, and other whiles in Hamſhire and Dorſetſhire, without any reſiſtence followed his ordinary courſe of Life, doing ſuch Execution by the Sword againſt Men, and by fire againſt Villages, that he affrighted every thing called Engliſh, from medling with him either at Sea or Land. The King good man, was not a little troubled,he and his People bemoaned one another with one Finger in the Eye, and another in the Mouth.

A third Summ paid to purchaſe Peace, and the departure of the Danes.

An Alliance betwixt Ethelred and Richard Duke of Normand.

89. At length they ſhake their Pockets, where finding ſomething ſtill rattle, they are again ſuddenly comforted, and a gay and effeminate Courtier called Leoff, by advice of the Nobility with great Vapours, but fitter to eat than fight, except in the Combats of Venus, is ſent to offer to the Danes a bountifull Preſent from the King who, brave Soul (they muſt know) did it out of his Munificence not any neceſſity that he or his had to court them. A third Tribute, for ſo it muſt be called is accepted but the ſumm inhaunc'd to twenty four thouſand Pound, which paid down, the Danes abſtained till the next time from all Hoſtility. The Meſſenger Leoff, while the buſineſs was tranſacting, baſely killed another Nobleman as valiant as himſelf, one Eaſic one of the King's beſt Officers, for which he underwent the pains of Baniſhment. Ethelred having done ſo great a work as to buy off his Enemy, in the ſtrength of Reputation gained thereby, reſolves to make a new Alliance. He had formerly had a quarrel with Richard Duke of Normandy, the firſt of that Name about his entertaining and protecting certain dangerous Perſons that had fled the Kingdom, and it aroſe to ſo high terms, that Pope John the Fifth, whoſe Letter is extant in Malmesbury's Hiſtory, was fain to interpoſe and diſpatch his Legate into England, by whoſe mediation the King was wrought to ſend his Commiſſioners to Roven, where a piece was happily concluded. Now though we cannot ſay, that the falling out of Lovers here, proved the renewing of Love, yet their falling out proved the occaſion at length of Love-matters. For after about ten years the Wife of Ethelred being dead, he asked and obtained the Daughter of Richard in marriage, which having now gallantly freed himſelf from all ſolicitudes, he had time and opportunity to ſolemnize. A great Train of the chief of his Nobles is ſent to fetch the Lady, more being found ready to goe upon this errand, than to fight againſt the Danes, and into England they bring her with wonderfull magnificence. Her name was Emma called by the Engliſh Elgina a Lady of admirable beauty, whereupon ſhe was ſtyled the Flower and Pearl of Normandy. Her Mothers name was Gunnor, deſcended from an eminent Daniſh Family, and therefore did the King enter upon this great Deſign, out of greater reaſons of State. For it was hoped, that her intereſt might be able to work upon the unreaſonable Danes, and ſo ſave him both blows and money.

90. Such was the great Plot when he entred at firſt upon the treaty of marriage, the full advantage yet of which he did not then thoroughly underſtand. But having fully perceived the ſtrength of his Alliance, he ſcorned now to buy a peace, he would by his actions command one, and make the Barbarians pay dear for all the Extravagancies they had committed within his Kingdom. One would now think he would rouze up himſelf, take the Field, provide himſelf by Land, of ſtout and experienced Souldiers, by Sea of skilfull Mariners ſuch as knew how and durſt effect ſuch gallant Orders as he ſhould ſend them. The Danes had by the Sword done much miſchief, and by the Sword indeed he reſolved they ſhould be puniſhed, they had broken many Leagues and Treaties, and it was no crime to deceive the Deceiver. But this muſt be done, not in the Field but at their private Houſes, not by a fair Enemy but through ſurpriſe, not by a fight, but in a Maſſacre, Letters being ſent into all Countries, commanding all the King's Subjects upon a certain day (the ninth of July) to ſet upon them, and without mercy to deſtroy them all. The pretence was (as no Maſſacre but has ſuch kind of excuſe) that they had a Deſign to deprive him of his Kingdom and Life, and to deſtroy all the Nobility, that ſo they might bring the whole Iſland into their own Dominion. The Command was executed, and the Danes thereby, who by a League ſolemnly ſworn had been admitted to inhabit quietly amongſt the Engliſh, were moſt ſhamefully and barbarouſly murthered. No Sex or Age eſcaped. The Women were butchered as well as the men, and the Brains of Children daſhed againſt the walls. At London, when execution was to be done, many of them fled into a certain Church of that City, but ſo ſacred a place was no ſecurity, for they were all without pity murthered as they ſtood by, and embraced the Altars. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon informs us, that when he was a Child he heard ſome very old men who lived at that time, report that the King ſent private Letters into every City, wherein Order was given to ſet on the Danes unawares, and either kill them by the Sword, or burn them to death. But they found out other Devices when they perceived themſelves Maſters of their Game. They were ſo barbarous in their revenge, that they digged holes in the ground, and therein ſet the Daniſh Women up to the middle, which done they ſet fierce Maſtives upon them, which cruelly tore off their Breaſts.

A bloudy Maſſacre of the Danes here in England.

Matth. Weſtmonaſt.

Lib. 6. ad An. 1002.

Inhumane Cruelties.

Walſingham in Hypodig. Neuſtriæ.

91. A Popular fury, eſpecially, when backed by Authority knows no bounds, nor Authority it ſelf, when it has broken the bounds of publick Juſtice. There were ſeveral Perſons of great Quality in the Land, received upon the publick Faith as Hoſtages, to ratifie the Peace lately accorded. Among the reſt a Princeſs called Gunildis, the Siſter of King Swane, and Wife to a Count whoſe Name was Paling. She had ſeveral years before this come into England with her Family, where ſhe received the Chriſtian Faith. She was a Woman of great prudence and temper, had often interpoſed to make Peace between the Nations, and now lately had given up her ſelf, her Husband and her onely Son as Hoſtages to King Ethelred. Duke Edric, to whoſe care ſhe was committed, cauſed her Husband and her Son before her Face to be pierced through with four Lances, and after that her ſelf to be beheaded. She moſt gallantly and undauntedly took her death, not the leaſt fear or change of colour appearing in her Face, but aſſured the Murtherer, that her bloud would coſt England very dear; which ſhe might eaſily ſay without gift of Prophecy, ſcarcely ever any Maſſacre having happened, which procured not to the Actours much farther trouble. But that day that the Order was executed at London, where lay in the Streets vaſt heaps of dead Bodies, ſome of our Men of the Daniſh Nation, more ſwift than their Purſuers ſeized on a Boat in the Thames, with which adventuring to Sea they paſſed over to Denmark, and there related to King Swane, the butchery of their Countreymen in England. The King hereat conceived ſuch ſorrow as was anſwerable to the matter related, and aſſembling his Princes together, acquainted them with the Tragical Act, and deſired their Advice what was to be done. Inflamed with rage and grief for the loſs of their Relations, they reſolved that Revenge was to be taken with all the force the Kingdom could make, whereupon they were ſent back into their ſeveral Countries to make Preparations, and Poſts were diſpatched to the Neighbouring Nations, to invite all ſtrangers to join with them in the Expedition, wherein they propoſed to them great hopes of vaſt Spoils and rich Poſſeſſions. King Swane, now reſolved to make another ſort of War than formerly, not like a Pirate by taking Advantages and flying here and there, but like a juſt Enemy to puſh for all, and conquer the Kingdom. And his Provocation being juſt, he proſpered accordingly.

Matth. Weſtm.

Which are related to Swane King of the Danes.

Who prepares for an Invaſion.

Walſingham ubi ſupra.

92. This

The account of the Maſſacre.

Matth. Weſtmon. ad Ann. 1002.

92. This is the Account of the Maſſacre, as it is given us by the Generality of our Hiſtorians, all who charge King Ethelred alone with it, affirming, that his heart being puffed up with pride after his ſecond Marriage upon confidence of his Alliance, on ſlight ſuſpicions he expoſed the Danes to the Revenge and Fury of the People. But the Monk of Weſtminſter, who diſagrees in the Account of ten years from the reſt, has a ſtory to tell by himſelf of one Huna General of the King's Forces, and his chief Miniſter, he taking notice of the Inſolence of the Danes, how inſupportably arrogant they were grown after the late Agreement, forcing the Wives and Daughters of the Engliſh of beſt Quality, and offering them all the Affronts imaginable, made a grievous complaint hereof to Ethelred, who conceiving from his words an implacable Indignation, by advice of the ſaid Huna, ſent his Letters aboveſaid into all the parts of the Kingdom. Whenceſoever the Suggeſtion was receiv'd the thing was done by the King's Command, and ſo much innocent bloud ſo perfidiouſly ſhed, crying for vengeance, procured him the loſs of that which by this means his pretences were for to preſerve. The Danes loſt no time, but aſſoon as the Spring opened, the frozen Seas with a powerfull Fleet invaded England. Some ſay their firſt Hoſtility was acted upon Yorkſhire, where King Swane leaving his Forces to refreſh themſelves, after their Voyage, ſailed into Normandy, and there with the Duke made a firm and perpetual League, by virtue whereof, the Normans were to have all the Spoils got in the War with England, ſold to them at reaſonable rates, in recompence for which privilege all that were ſick or maimed in the Daniſh Army ſhould have as kind entertainment in Normandy as if they had been in Denmark it ſelf. But our Authours who trace the ſteps of the Danes, make no mention of this Invaſion of Yorkſhire; and though Ethelred doubtleſs contracted great obloquy and reproach from his Neighbours by the late Maſſacre, yet can we ſcarcely believe that the Norman would join in a League againſt ſo near an Ally as the King of England.

Walſingham. Gemitic. de Duc. Norm.

The Danes land, waſting the Countrey in ſeveral places.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. M.III. Huntingd. Hoveden.

93. The firſt Impreſſion they certainly made was upon the South Weſtern Parts, where by the Folly or Treachery of Hugh a Norman Count indeed, whom Queen Emma had preferred to the Government of Devonſhire, they broke into Exeter; and having demoliſhed the City walls from the Eaſt to the Weſtern Gate, retired with great plunder to their Ships. After this they waſted Wiltſhire, where a ſtrong Body of Men, drawn partly out of that Countrey, and partly out of Hamſhire, advanced to give them Battel. But when the Armies were come within ſight of each other, Alfric the Engliſh General, whoſe Son's Eyes the King had lately put out for his Fathers betraying the Fleet unto the Danes, now it ſeems intending to be revenged upon the King, counterfeited himſelf ſick, and feigned a fit of vomiting, whereat the Army diſcouraged, inſtead of fighting every Man ſhifted for himſelf, which Swane perceiving and laughing in his ſleeve at the mad Couduct of the Engliſh Affairs, went to Wilton, which he plundered and burnt, and having dealt in the ſame manner with Salisbury, then returned to his Ships. The year following to the Coaſts of Norfolk he ſailed, where he landing, he plundred and burnt Norwich, uſing ſuch expedition, that he ſurpriſed Vlfketel the Duke of the Eaſt Angles, and a very ſtout Commander, who having no time to leavy an Army, took advice with the Nobility of his Province, and made Peace with him. But this Peace Swane perfidiouſly brake, after a Fortnight or three Weeks time ſtealing from his Ships to Thetford, which he plundred, lodged one Night in it, and the next day ſet it on fire. Vlfketel having notice of his expedition, ordered a Party to go and burn his Ships in the Harbour, which they either durſt not attempt or neglected to doe. He in the mean time with what ſecrecy and ſpeed he could gathered together his Forces, and marched courageouſly againſt the Enemy, and as they retreated to their Ships made a fierce onſet. But he was inferiour in Numbers, and therefore moſt of the beſt Quality among the Eaſtern Engliſh loſt their Lives. The Danes alſo received very great loſs, and with difficulty recovered their Fleet, which they had never done, had all the Force of Eaſt England been preſent. They confeſſed that in the Iſland they never met with ſo rough an Ingagement, as this they had with Vlfketel.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. MIV.

Then followed a Great Famine by Land.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. MV.

94. The following year happened ſo great a Famine, that it forced a Ceſſation, driving Swane back into Denmark, but ſupplied, as it were, the Place of his Sword in the Deſtruction of the poor People of England, as many of which are ſaid to have periſhed by Hunger, as formerly had done in a year by his Cruelties. Moſt dreadfull was the Eſtate of England at this time, which all ſorts of miſchiefs contended how to haraſs. A King it had ſo ſtout and warlike, that as if he had been born to ſleep, and nothing elſe, was little moved by any of its Calamities, or if at ſome time he began to awake and rouz'd himſelf upon his Elbow, yet either his own drowzineſs or his adverſe Fortune pulled him down to ſlumber again. The guilt of his Brother's Bloud lay heavy upon him. No man can well reckon how many Armies at length he raiſed, how many Fleets he rigged, how often he gave out orders to his Officers, but all this to no purpoſe. For theſe Armies wanting the Authority and Courage of a Prince to give them life, and being rude and undiſciplin'd either mouldred away before they came to Action, or elſe eaſily were overthrown when they came to it. In War the preſence of a General avails much, much his known and approved Valour, but eſpecially Exerciſe and Diſcipline, which theſe Armies wanting procured irreparable miſchiefs to the Inhabitants, and afforded matter of ſcorn and mirth to the Inſulting Enemy; a ſort of Men moſt rapacious if not reſtrained by force, but if vigorouſly oppoſed baſe and cowardly. What the ſluggiſhneſs and cowardiſe of the Prince and People effected not, the Winds and Weather procured; for when the Ships lay at Anchor upon the Coaſts for their ſecurity, ſuddenly would a Tempeſt ariſe and daſh them to pieces one againſt another. And what all theſe ſtill left unfiniſhed was completed by treachery, folly or fearfulneſs of Officers. If they met at any time in Council they never agreed in their Opinions, ſeldom did the Major part concur in any thing that was ſeaſonable and fit to be done, having ever a greater reſpect to their private animoſities than the publick good; but if it chanced at any time that they hit upon a point convenient, their Councils were ſpeedily betrayed to the Danes. For beſides Elfric the Son of Elſere who murthered the late King, there was one Edric whom the preſent had made Earl of Mercia, the dreggs of Men (ſo the Monk words it) the opprobrium of the Engliſh, a flagitious Glutton, a crafty Knave who had not been inriched by any thing received from his Anceſtours, but by his own prating and boldneſs. This Fellow being a crafty Diſſembler, and an egregious Counterfeit, as a faithfull Councellour would dive into the King's Secrets, and like a baſe Traitour diſcover them. Often was he ſent to the Enemy to mediate a Peace, and as often ſtirred them up to proſecute their former courſe of Hoſtility. Vlſketel or Vlkil (as he calls him) was the onely Man that made any conſiderable reſiſtence. At length that no ſort of miſery might be wanting, what War had left, that Famine deſtroyed; and the Enemy ſo freely and without controll ranged about the Countrey, that from any place within fifty Miles diſtance from the Sea they fetcht away all they pleaſed without the leaſt jealouſie of any Ambuſhes, or the leaſt fear of Intercepting.

Malmesb.

Tempeſts at Sea.

And the Treachery of Edric, which ruined the Nation.

95. The year following in July an innumerable multitude of Daniſh ſhips were ſeen in Sandwich Road, whence ſwarms of Rovers overran Kent and Suſſex, ſparing neither Man nor any thing elſe more than they had done formerly. King Ethelred to oppoſe them raiſed an Army out of Mercia and Weſt Saxony, but never could ingage them, for they ſhifted from place to place, not thinking it fit to hazard a Battel, and robbed as they could; ſo that till Winter they conſumed the time, and retired then with infinite Booty to the Iſle of Wight, and there ſtaid till Chriſtmas: when underſtanding that the King was in Shropſhire (where if he could not kill Enemies he could murther Subjects, procuring by means of Edric, as was thought, Alfhelm a Duke of great value to be ſlain, and the Eyes of his two Sons to be put out) they overran Hampſhire and Berkſhire as far as Reading and Wallingford, which they burnt with other places. Thence paſſed they to Aſhdown, and coming to the River Kenet, found the Inhabitants of the Countrey make head againſt them, but they ingaged and eaſily routed them, and thence without moleſtation, returned to their ſhips. The King and his Courtiers were ſufficiently tired by that Dance the Danes had led them: They thought they had done as much as reaſonably could be expected from Mortal men; no courſe remained to be taken with theſe cowardly pilfering Villains, but to give them more Money, a thing which a generous Soul values not. They ſent to them again and offer to buy them off from their Ravenous courſe, but the price is ſtill increaſed, it being as eaſie to obtain more as leſs of ſuch eaſie Enemies. The Sum is now ſix and thirty thouſand Pounds, which is raiſed of the People throughout England already ruinated by their Rapines. And if ſome tell true, whom we are not willing to believe, Ethelred in the Agreement of this year MVII, yielded to pay an Annual Tribute of thirty ſix thouſand Pounds to the Danes, for a longer continuance of the Peace. We reade indeed that he yielded to the payment, but no where do we reade or find that he did pay it and ſtood to his word. This year it was that Ethelred advanced Edric, ſirnamed Streone, to the Dukedom of the Mercians;

Another Invaſion.

Simeon Dunelm. ad An. MVI.

A fourth Sum offered to purchaſe their departure.

Idem ad Ann. MVII.

Chronic. Melcoſenſe MS in Biblioth. Cottoniana.

Sect. 10.

a Fellow who having raiſed himſelf, as we ſaid, to a great Eſtate by his cunning and a plauſible Tongue, proved ſhortly a mighty Inſtrument in the ruine of England.

A Tax for Shipping.

Simeon Dunelm. ad An. MVIII. Marianus Scotus. Hoveden. Florentius.

 Alii octo hidas habent ut Huntingdonenſis, Math. Weſtmonaſt. Math. Paris.*

96. The next year produced ſomething laudable, which ſhewed the King to have a little care of his Eſtate. He enacted, that every three hundred and ten Hides of Land ſhould ſet out a Gally, and every nine * Hides find a Corſlet and Head piece, and throughout all England he commanded ſhips apace to be built; which being made ready, he Victualled and Manned with choice Souldiers, and appointed their Rendezvous at the Port of Sandwich, to ſecure the Bounds of his Kingdom from the Irruptions of Foreigners. Now a Hide (as the Archdeacon of Huntingdon and ſeveral others tells us) was ſo much Land as a man could Till in one year with one Plough, being the ſame with Caſſata and Carucata in barbarous Latin. That it was a cuſtome to tax the richer ſort by the number of Hides in thoſe days is very evident both from the Saxon Laws and the Breviary or Notitia of England, called Doomſday Book. But as for what Huntingdon adds, that there never had been ſo great a number of ſhips before in Britain, which alſo the Saxon Annals of Abingdon do teſtify, another Notion of Hide we muſt have to make this agree with their opinion. For if Mr. Cambden's Account be good, who out of the ancient Records of that Age caſts up the number of Hides not to exceed two hundred forty three thouſand and ſix hundred, the number of ſhips muſt have amounted to no more than ſeven hundred and eighty five according to the Tax; ſo that this Navy could not have matched that of King Edgar by ſome thouſands. Others therefore there are who determine otherwiſe concerning an Hide; and moſt certain it is as a learned man obſerves, that it was very various according to the different cuſtome of Countries. Whatever the number of the ſhips was one would now have imagined that England was in a fair way to be protected, when ſuddenly Diſſention the bane of all good Deſigns, ſprung up among the Great Ones. For this very year did Brithric the brother of Duke Edric as ambitious, proud, and deceitfull almoſt as himſelf, falſly accuſe Wulnoth a great Officer of the South Saxons to the King, whereupon he judging it not ſafe to truſt his life in their Hands, who he knew would condemn him right or wrong, got him to Sea with twenty ſhips and plaid the Pirate upon the Coaſts. Upon a report raiſed that he might be eaſily taken, Brithric with eighty Gallies went in queſt of him, but when he had ſailed for ſome time, ſo grievous a Tempeſt roſe that it wrecked all the Veſſels and caſt them upon the ſhoar where Wulnoth ſoon after burnt them. This misfortune ſo diſheartened the King and his Nobles, that they fairly returned home, and the Fleet by his command came up to London. And ſo was the People taxed and troubled to no purpoſe.

Selden in mari clauſo, lib. 2. c. 11.

Which was rather a burthen than a benefit to the Kingdom.

Turkill with other Danes arrive.

Simeon Dunelm. ad An. MIX.

97. The next year after, which was the MIX of our Lord, Turkill a Daniſh Earl arrived with ſome ſhips in England, and in the Month of Auguſt was followed by an innumerable company of Daniſh Veſſels commanded by Hemming and Eilaf which landed in the Iſle of Tanet, and joyned with Turkill: To Sandwich they paſs, where landing they go and indeavour to break into Canterbury, the Inhabitants whereof with their Neighbours of the Eaſt part of Kent purchaſe their Peace by the payment of three thouſand Pounds. The Danes then going back to their ſhips ſail to the Iſle of Wight, whence paſſing to the Coaſts of Suſſex and Hamſhire, they exerciſe themſelves in their uſual Trades of plundering and burning. Ethelred was again ſo ſenſible of his Peoples miſeries as to leavy Forces throughout the Land, which he beſtowed in places near the Sea to reſtrain their Irruptions, but it was done ſo unskilfully, at leaſt ſo unſucceſsfully that they came and went ſecurely for all this, and practiſed their Rapines as before. On a certain time being gone farther than uſual from the Sea, the King ſtept betwixt them and Home, ſeizing upon the place through which they were to return with many thouſand men, and reſolved to die or overcome, as was the whole Army. But the Traitorous Duke Edric (who now might practiſe his Treaſons more colourably, having married the King's Daughter Egitha) by ſubtile Arguments urged, that as Circumſtances now ſtood, it was their Intereſt to let the Danes repaſs untouched. He perſwaded them, and the Danes got back ſafe to their ſhips with great Joy, and much contrary to their expectation. After this when Martinmaſs was now paſt they went to the Coaſt of Kent and reſolved to Winter in the Thames. They maintained themſelves by what they got out of Eſſex and other places, lying on each ſide of the River. They often alſo attempted to ſeize on London, were beaten back by the Citizens with very great loſs.

Who might have been cut off, but for the Treachery of Edric.

98. E[illegible]

Sect. 10.

98. E'er Winter was over, in the Month of January they left their Ships, and through Chiltern Wood paſſed to Oxford, which having burnt they returned by the River Thames, and waſted the Countrey on both ſides in their Paſſage. In their return they had Intelligence that a great Army was gathering together at London to intercept them, which cauſed that part of their Army which marched down the North ſide of the River to paſs over at Stanes, where joining with the other and loading with extraordinary plunder they paſſed through Surry to their Ships, in repairing of which they ſpent in Kent the Lent following. Eaſter being over they departed into Eaſt England, where near to Ipſwich they came to a place called Ringmere, having heard that Ulketel lay there with his Forces. He entertained them very warmly, and a fierce Battel was fought. But the Engliſh at Pougth gave back, a certain * Daniſh Servant, on purpoſe, ſo it ſeems, beginning the flight and loſt the Field, though the Cambridgeſhire Men as long as they could ſtood to it, and fought very manfully, † which procured them much honour ſo long as the Engliſh Kingdom ſtood. Here fell Ethelſtan the King's Son-in-Law, Oſwi a Noble man with his Sons and many other, together with a great number of the ordinary ſort. The Danes being Maſters of the Field now had Eaſt England at their diſcretion, which horſing themſelves they ſpared not no more than the moſt violent Enemy would do, ſpending three months in plundering, burning and killing all they could meet with. Having done what miſchief they could in the Fenns, they burn Thetford, and Grantebrig, or Cambridge; whence (as Huntingdon writes) going back over moſt pleaſant Hills of a delightfull place called Baleſham (now Gogmagog Hills) they killed all they could meet in their way toſſing Infants on the points of their Spears. But one man (ſaith he) there was who deſerves to be remembred for getting into a Steeple, and there defending himſelf from the whole Army. After this the Foot by Sea, and the Horſe through Eſſex, returned to the Thames, where continuing not many days again they quitted their ſhips and went through into Oxfordſhire, which firſt, and then the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford and Hertford they waſted, and having burnt the Towns, and killed Mankind, with all other living Creatures, they returned again to their ſhips as ſo many ravenous and noxious Wild Beaſts glutted with bloud to their Dens. Yet ſtill about the Feaſt of St. Andrew they burnt Northampton with all about it, as far as they pleaſed; and then paſſing to the Thames went into Weſt Saxony, where having waſted that called then Cuningamerſe, and the greater part of Wiltſhire, they returned after their accuſtomed manner to their ſhips about Chriſtmaſs.

After a Battel the Danes become Maſters of Eaſt England.

And waſte part of Weſt Saxony.

99. They were neither yet ſo wearied with travel, nor ſatisfied with wealth, but that the year following they took a larger ſcope than ever. For on the North ſide the River, with Fire and Sword they waſted all Eaſt England, Eſſex, Middleſex, Hertfordſhire, Buckinghamſhire, the Counties of Oxford, Bedford and Cambrigde, with half of Huntingdon, and the greateſt Part of that of Northampton: on the South ſide Kent, Surrey, Suſſex, with the Counties of Southampton, Wilts and Berks. After all theſe Meſſengers are ſent to ſolicite for Peace, promiſing more Money to buy them off from theſe horrid devaſtations. They give good words and accepted the Tribute, but without any intention to keep their Faith, which they preſently break, firſt by Plundering the County in ſeveral Parties, and toward Michaelmas by beſieging Canterbury, which on the twentieth day of the Siege they take by the treachery of Almere the Archdeacon, and burn part of it. Here they committed all ſorts of villanies againſt the poor Inhabitants, whereof ſome they ſlew with the ſword, others they burnt; many they threw down headlong from the Walls, and ſome they hung up by the Privy Members. The Women they drag by the Hair of their Heads through the Streets, and then caſt into the fire. Infants being ſnatched from the Breaſts of their Mother they either ſtuck upon the points of their Spears, or cruſhed to pieces by driving Carts over them. Alſege the Archbiſhop they take Priſoner, bind and contumeliouſly uſe. Almar the Abbat of St. Auſtin's they permitted to depart. Godwin Biſhop of Rocheſter, Leofruna Abbeſs of the Nunnery of St. Mildrede, Elfrede the King's Governour, with Monks and Clerks, and a vaſt number of the Common People were alſo taken; Chriſt Church they burn, Monks, Men, Women and Children are decimated, whereof nine are killed, and the tenth reſerved to a life worſe than death; ſo that of the whole multitude remained onely four Monks, and eight hundred Men. The People being ſlain, and the whole City plundred and burnt, the Archbiſhop is taken out of Priſon, driven away bound and wounded to the the Fleet, where he is kept cloſe ſeven Months together. In the mean time theſe

After more Devaſtations another ſum is offered.

Canterbury is taken and plundered.

With its Archbiſhop.

---

* Turcetil Mireneheved id eſt caput formicæ primus fugam incepit & opprobrium meruit ſempiternum. Huntingdon.

† Sic Huntingdonenſis ſed homines Grantebridgſcire viriliter obſtiterunt, unde dum Angli regnaverunt, laus Grantebrigienſis Provinciæ floruit. lib. 6. Hiſtor. ad Ann. MX.

cruel and more than barbarous Miſcreants are viſited with a Plague in their Guts, whereof two thouſand of them miſerably periſh. Thoſe that lived were ſorely afflicted with the ſame Diſeaſe, and thereupon the Chriſtians take occaſion to urge the delivery of the Archbiſhop, but they ſtill defer it.

Simeon Dunelm. ad Ann. MXII.

Who is ſlain by them.

100. As ſoon as Spring appeared, before Eaſter that traitorous Edrick Streone, and all the reſt of the Nobility of both Orders Aſſembled at London, where they held their Councils and continued ſo long till the Tribute was paid to the Danes, which now amounted to eight and forty thouſand Pounds. In the mean time Alſege the Archbiſhop had his Ranſome ſet at three thouſand Pounds, which he conſtantly refuſing to pay or procure was at laſt murthered by them when they were heated with Wine, and farther exaſperated by his prohibiting any one to offer any ſum of money for his liberty. Being brought out into their full Aſſembly, they fell upon him with Swords, Stones, Bones, and whatever came to hand, and at length one Thrum whom he had Confirmed but the day before, out of an impious ſort of Piety brained him with an Hatchet. His Body was the day following conveyed to London, and buried in the Church of St Paul. Afterward the Tribute being paid, and the Peace confirmed by Oaths on both ſides, the Daniſh Fleet was ſeparated, onely five and forty Ships remained with the King for the Defence of England againſt all Foreigners on theſe terms, to be maintained by him with Victuals and Cloathing. From the Old Saxon Laws it appears that for repreſſing of Pirates, Robbers, or others infeſting the Sea, it was reſolved that a yearly payment ſhould be made of Money, which from thoſe who uſually were the Practiſers of this Trade was called Danegeld, that is to ſay, twelve pence upon every Hide through the whole Land, for the Pay of thoſe that ſhould be employed to hinder the Irruption of Pirates. This we are told by ſeveral Authours, continued from this or the following for thirty eight or thirty nine years, till it was remitted by Edward the Confeſſour, the Son of King Ethelred. The Reader muſt take notice that there were two ſorts of Danegeld. The one was, that Tribute or Tax ſo often mentioned by us, whereby our Engliſh Saxons were forced to purchaſe Peace, and remove Hoſtilities and Rapines upon occaſion, the ſeveral ſums whereof we have expreſſed in their places. It was not paid yearly, but levied now and then as the neceſſity of the Kingdom required. The other was this firſt raiſed in the Year of our Lord MXII. (the ſame wherein the eight and forty thouſand Pounds were paid) to pay the Daniſh Navy which was now hired to guard the Sea, and defend the Coaſts.

Vide Simeon. Dunelm. Florent. Wigorn. Hovedenum.

Lambardus de priſcis Angl. Legib. f. 128. Dane-geld h.e. ad Danos nummus ſpectans. Geldet, Gelt, Belgis & Germanis etiamnum Nummus. Vocabatur alias Heꞃe-ᵹylꝺ- ſive Nummus Militaris. Lege Ingulphum.

Danegeld raiſed to ſecure the Coaſts from Pirates.

101. But both ſorts alike contributed to the Ends and Deſigns for which they were paid. The former took but off the perfidious Danes for a ſmall time, who then again without regard to Oath or Promiſe violated the Peace in expectation of another gratuity to be beſtowed upon them. And this other was ſo far from ſecuring the Coaſts by ſcouring the Seas, that Turkill who ſtaid behind as Admiral of this now Engliſh Fleet ſeems to have done it to no other purpoſe (beſides the fleaing of the poor Nation of more Money) than to give Intelligence to Swane when it would be moſt ſeaſonable to reinvade the Land. In July the year following with a ſtrong Fleet he landed at Sandwich, where having ſtaid but a few days, coaſting about Eaſt England he entred the Mouth of Humber, whence he paſſed up into the Trent (which together with Ouſe out of Yorkſhire falls into Humber) and ſail'd to Gainsborough where he landed and encamped himſelf. Hither without delay repaired to him Earl Uthred with the Northumbrians, the Inhabitants of Lindſey (that Part of Lincolnſhire Northward of Lincoln wherein Gainsborough ſtands) afterward thoſe of Fisburgh, and by degrees all ſuch as inhabited Northward of Watling Street (the great Highway croſſing the Land from the Eaſt to the Weſtern Sea) yielded up themſelves to him, and delivering up Hoſtages ſwore to him Allegiance. He onely now impoſed upon them the furniſhing of his Army with Horſes and Proviſions, and then delivering the Hoſtages and the Fleet into the Hands of Canute his Son, with a choice Party of Auxiliaries taken from amongſt the Engliſh, undertook an Expedition againſt the Southern Mercians. Having paſſed over Watling Street he gave order to his Men to waſte the Fields, burn the Villages, rob the Churches, kill all the Males they could meet with, reſerve the other Sex for their luſt, and doe all other ſorts of miſchiefs they could deviſe. This being fully exerciſed, in the terrour thereof he came to Oxford, and became Maſter of it ſooner than he expected, where having received Hoſtages he haſted to Wincheſter, the Inhabitants of which conque-conquered alſo by the terrour of his Cruelties, without delay made Peace with him, giving up what and how many Hoſtages he required.

Swane and his Danes are maſter'd of greateſt part of the Iſland.

102 From Oxford he bent his courſe for London, and in paſſing the Thames being neither carefull for finding out a Bridge nor a Ford loſt many of his Men. He endeavoured both by force and all ſorts of devices to take this City, but King Ethelred, together with Turkill the Dane being then here Reſident, he was beaten off and went to Wallingford, after that to Bath, where waſting all in his way he ſtaid ſome time and refreſhed his Army. Thither came to him Ethelmar the Earl of Devonſhire with other Officers of the Weſtern Parts and made Peace with him, giving up their Hoſtages, which things accompliſhed according to his deſires, and being returned to his Fleet he was by all the Nation of the Engliſh both ſtiled and accounted King, if by right one can call him a King (ſaith our Authour) who acted all things in a manner like a Tyrant. The Citizens of London concluded that it was not ſafe for them to ſtrive againſt the univerſal current, and therefore ſent alſo their Hoſtages and made their Peace, for they fear'd he would be ſo inraged againſt them that having ſpoiled them of all they had he would either command their Eyes to be pulled out, or their Hands or Feet to be chopped off. Ethelred now in a manner unkinged thought it moſt conſiſtent with the ſtraitneſs of his Fortune to ſend away Emma his Queen, with his Treaſure and his two Sons Edward and Elfred into Normandy to her Brother Richard, the Second of that Name, Duke of that Province. He himſelf continued ſometime at Greenwich with the Daniſh Fleet then lying in the Thames, and thence removed to the Iſle of Wight, where having kept but a ſad Chriſtmaſs he followed them into Normandy, and at Rouen was ſplendidly entertained all the time of his abode. In the mean while Swane the Tyrant at Gainsborough laid inſupportable Taxes upon the Countrey, beſides the contribution for maintenance of his Fleet And Turkill at Greenwich was not behind hand in his Exactions for inriching of himſelf and his Followers. So that they were fully agreed in this by their Violence and Rapines to haraſs and exhauſt the poor Engliſh Nation.

Is as King eſteemed.

Ethelred ſends his Wife and Children to Normandy.

103. But Swane to all his other cruelties and impieties, added one, which in the opinion of our writers, completed his condemnation. He exacted a grievous Tribute from the Town of St. Edmunds Bury, or that where the Body of that King and Martyr then reſted: Moreover, he would often detract from the worth of the Martyr, and dared to affirm he had no holineſs. In caſe the money were not ſpeedily paid, he often threatned that he would certainly burn the Town over the heads of the Inhabitants, utterly ſubvert and demoliſh the Church of the Martyr, and put the very Clerks to various Tortures. Now to tell a ſtory which is ſo generally told, and was ſo univerſally believed, becauſe he would not moderate at all, ſay they, his wickedneſs; Divine Vengeance would not ſuffer the Blaſphemer longer to live. At Gainſborough, as he held a general Aſſembly, when it grew toward Evening, being incircled with Armed Men, he caſt out theſe ſaid threats, but he ſaw preſently St. Edmund coming Armed upon him, whereupon he cried vehemently out, Help, help, fellow Souldiers, look here, St. Edmund comes to kill me, which words as he was ſpeaking, he received a mortal wound by the Saint's hands, fell from his Horſe, and lying till the dusk of the Evening in great torment, he then died on the * ſecond of February, and was carried to York and buried. So our writers report from the Legend of St. Edmund, which ſeems to hint this truth to us, that Swane was killed by an unknown hand; to be ſure here † he ended his days, and by his death ennobled this Town more than by his making it the Seat of his Kingdom or Tyranny, for ſo it was; here being his chief Reſidence all the ſhort time of his Engliſh Royalty; here lay his Ships, hence he made excurſions into all Parts.

Swane exacts a tribute from Edmundbury.

Is killed by an unknown hand.

Denique imminente veſpera diei qua in generali placito quod apud Gainſburh tenuerat hæc eadem minitans reiteravit, &c. Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. 1014.

* 3. Nonas.

† De Edmundo cognom. Ferreo latere ſic Ingulphus: qui fortiſſimè dimicans contra Cnutum Danorum Regem qui Swano patri apud Gainsburh mirabiliter & miſerabiliter extincto ſucceſſerat, regnum tandem cum eodem Cnuto æquè partitur.

104. This Town conveniently ſeated upon the River Trent, which here Ebbs and Flows to a conſiderable depth, and by the convenience of Navigation and Traffick, hath procured it two famous Marts in a year, each of them of nine days continuance, is both ancient, and was of good account before it became more known by being the Rode of the Daniſh Ships. To omit impertinent Etymologies Gainsborough.

Quidam in Etymologico nuper Edito hæc habet: Geneꞅ-buꞃuh, vel forte antiquius Geneꞃꞅ-buꞃuh ab Angl. Sax. Geneꞃ Perfugium Aſylum & Buꞃuh Oppidum. q. d. Oppidum perfugii Aſylum.

as

And Gaini where

as if it had its name from being an Aſylum or Refuge of I know not who, or from what, it was called Gainſborough or Gainſburh (in Latin Gainorum burgus) as indeed being the cheif Burgh, Borough or Town of the Gaini or Gains. If it be demanded who theſe Gaini or Gains were, I anſwer, the ſame with thoſe of which Ethelfred the Father-in-law of King Alfred, was Earl. Aſſerius writes, that Alfred Married Uxorem de Mercia Nobilem ſcilicet genere filiam Ethelfredi Gainorum Comitis qui cognominabatur Mucil. That Alfred Married a Wife out of Mercia, one of a Noble Stock, viz. the Daughter of Ethelfred, Earl of the Gaini or Gains, who was Sirnamed Mucil or Great. There was then a ſort of People called Gaini or Gains, and theſe Gaini were ſeated in Mercia, to which Kingdom of old Lindſey did belong, as is moſt evident, and not to Northumberland, from which it was ſeparated by that River, though ſome particular Conqueſts of theſe Petty Kings of that Tract might cauſe ſometimes ſome places to be mentioned, as within the Bounds of their Kingdoms, to which for the main they did not belong. The Reader muſt obſerve that, beſides the common Names of Jutes, Angles and Saxons, when theſe People Planted in Britain certain Select Companies of them had peculiar Names, even as the ancient Britains themſelves had, which either happened to them from their Principal Leaders or Governours, or were Names they brought from beyond the Seas, or elſe proceeded from ſome other accidents. Thus ſome of the Northumbrians were called Deiri, others Bernicii, the Weſt Saxons were called Geviſſi, and we reade of a People called Wiccii, and another Meanvari Seated in Hamſhire, not far from Portſmouth, beſides the Girnii, who as appears from Ingulphus, lived not very far from the Gaini, and Inhabited the Fens, lying in the Counties of Lincoln, Northampton, Huntingdon, and Cambridge. Thoſe Gaini were ſuch a ſort of People, from which this place being their principal Town or Burgh, received its name, as did Ethelfred his Title, though he was deſcended of the Bloud Royal of Mercia. The Burgh of the Gaines it was, and long after the death of Swane gave it not name, yet Habitation to the Noble Barons of Burgh, who by the Scotch Earls of Athol, and the Percies deſcended from Sr. William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, by whoſe interceſſion it obtained from King Edward the Firſt (after the Conqueſt) the liberty of having a Fair. This digreſſion is too much not to be practiſed upon the name of every Town; but ſo much I ought to this out of gratitude, having received in it a great part of my Education; though born in that of Nottinghamſhire, which, on the other ſide of the River, ſtands over againſt it.

Cnute choſen King of the Danes.

Malmesb. Matth. Weſt. Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. 104.

Ethelred recovers his Kingdom.

Driving Cnute out of Lindſey, and thoſe Parts.

An Inundation.

105. Swane being dead, his Subjects the Danes, chuſe Canute or Cnute his Son, for his Succeſſour. But the Inclinations of the Engliſh were toward their own true and natural Prince, whom hoping that he would demean himſelf more like a King for the time to come, as being diſciplin'd ſufficiently by adverſity, they ſent for home out of Normandy. Ethelred, before he ſhould put himſelf into their hands, thought fit to ſend over his Son Edward to promiſe all good deportment, and ſound the affections of the Nobility and People, who having found all things correſpond with his deſires, returned back with confidence to fetch his Father. The King was received with all joy and applauſe imaginable, and to make a Show, that he had offered violence to his former diſpoſition, and of compliance with their expectations, uſed all diſpatch in leavying an Army againſt Cnute, who lying now at Gainſborough, with the Fleet and Hoſtages was not wanting to himſelf, but ſpent his time in raiſing Men, and getting Horſes, threatning to chaſtiſe ſeverely the Revolters from his Father's Empire. But Ethelreds Forces took him before he was fully prepared, and conſtrained him to quit the Parts of Lindſey, the Inhabitants whereof, for their ſo readily ſiding with ſtrangers, as they found them, they put to death. Cnute Sailed away with his Fleet, and by the courſe of the Winds, was driven into Sandwich Road, where to revenge himſelf upon the Engliſh Nation, he miſerably deformed the Hoſtages he had in his power, cutting off their Ears, Noſes, and Hands, and depriving ſome of their Genitals. This done, he ſet them on ſhore, and departed into Denmark to recruit his Army. Theſe Danes being gone, another Calamity ſucceeded them; for on the twenty ſeventh of September, the Sea aroſe to ſuch an height by the impetuoſity of Wind and Tide, that it brake the Banks, and overwhelmed many Villages, drowning a great multitude of ſurprized People. However the Nation was hereby impoveriſhed, yet neceſſity urging a Tribute of thirty thouſand pounds, was levied for paying the Daniſh Fleet, which lay at Greenwich.

106. The year following, being the MXV. of our Lord, a great Aſſembly of the Eſtates was held at Oxford, as well of Danes as Engliſh, where by advice of Edric Streone, the King cauſed ſeveral Daniſh Noblemen to be put to death under pretence of a Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon. Sigeferth and Morcar, the Sons of one Earngrun, of a place called Seanenburg in Northumberland, Edric drew by good words into his own Lodging, and there ſecretly murthered them. Their Servants and Dependants thereupon aroſe, and endeavoured to revenge their death, but were beaten back by the King's Forces, and ſo cloſely purſued, that they were conſtrained to betake themſelves into the Tower of St. Frideſwith's Church, where Fire being ſet to the Steeple, they were burnt to Aſhes. The King ſeized upon the Eſtates of the murthered Earls, and commanded Algitha the Wife of Sigeferth, to be conveyed to the Town of Maidulf (or Malmesbury) and there to be kept in Cuſtody as a Lady of great Nobility and Intereſt. But not long after, Edmund the King's Son coming thither, fell in love with her, and without his Father's knowledge, married her, after which, he took her along with him into Northumberland, and there ſeized on the Eſtates both of Sigeferth and Morcar his Brother. At the ſame time Arrived King Cnute from Denmark, together, as ſome write, with two other Kings, Lachman of Sweden, and Olan of Norway, and made for the Port of Sandwich, where it's ſaid that Turkil joyned with him, and gave the Engliſh a notable defeat. To be ſure Cnute, Coaſting about Kent, entred the mouth of the River Frome, and by it paſſed up into the Counties of Dorſet, Somerſet and Wilts, where he committed all ſorts of Hoſtilities. King Ethelred at this time lay ſick at Coſham, a Town in Wiltſhire, but had his place very well ſupplied by his Son Edmund, whoſe onely infelicity it was, that the falſe and traitorous Streone was joyned with him in command, which not onely hindred his preſent ſucceſs, but brought him into great danger of Life. For Edric made a faction in the Army, and plotted how to have him ſlain, which being timely diſcovered, the Prince was forced for his ſecurity to depart from the place where he lay. Now whether this diſcovery made him deſperate, or for that he was before prepared, and reſolved ſo to doe, for other reaſons, he openly revolted; carrying away to Cnute forty of the Daniſh Ships which ſerved the King, to whom he ſubmitted as his Leige Lord. The Weſt Saxons awed by his Inrodes, did the ſame: gave up Hoſtages, and made proviſion of Horſes for his Army.

Compara Matth. Weſt. cum. Sim Dunelm.

Edric revolts, ſwearing obedience to Cnute.

107. Cnute being thus ſtrengthened beyond expectation, in the following year, which was the MXVI. of our Lord, with Edric the Traytour, paſſed over the Thames at Greeklade, about Chriſtmaſs Holydays, and Invaded Mercia, where in Warwickſhire eſpecially, he burnt all the Towns, and killed all Perſons he could meet with. Edmund the King's Son, upon the Report, gathered together what Forces he could, but when they were to march, the Mercians refuſed to ingage againſt the Danes and Weſt Saxons, except King Ethelred and the Londoners would joyn with them, and thereupon the Army disbanded it ſelf. But Chriſtmaſs being over, Edmund raiſed more Forces, and ſent to London to his Father to come to him with all the preparations he could make, Ethelred complied with him, and they joyned their Forces together, but by the craft of the Enemy, a Rumour was ſpread abroad, that if the King did not carefully look to himſelf, he would ſpeedily be betrayed. This ſtruck ſuch a fear into this puſillanimous Prince, that he disbands his Army, and retires back to London, which done, his Son haſtes into Northumberland, as was imagined to raiſe a greater Army againſt Canute. But in this they ſeemed well agreed, that whereas on one ſide Canute and Edric waſted the Countrey, on the other, he and Uthred Earl of Northumberland, did the like, this being the onely difference that one Party haraſſed the poor People, becauſe they would not revolt, and the others pretended to puniſh them for their neutrality; for, firſt Staffordſhire, and then Shropſhire and Leiceſterſhire, they miſerably waſted becauſe they refuſed to fight againſt the Danes. In the mean time Canute and Edric Streone, committed all acts of cruelty in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Northampton, Lincoln and Nottingham, and at laſt peirced into Northumberland.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. MXVI.

The Countrey waſted on all hands.

108. This approach of theirs obliged Edmund Clito, as our Writers call him, to leave off his Trade of pillaging, and to betake himſelf to London. Uthred hereupon haſted into Northumberland, where ſhortly after he was conſtrained to ſubmit himſelf to Cnute, to give up his Countrey, and deliver Hoſtages into his Hands, which notwithſtanding either by Command or Permiſſion of Cnute, he was killed by one Turebrand a Daniſh Nobleman, and with him one Turketel, the Son of Navene. This done, Cnute preferred one Eric to be Earl of Northumberland, and haſted Southward by another way to his Fleet; with which he joyned his Army before Eaſter. About the ſame time Ethelred died at London on the two and twentieth of April, after a tedious and ill management of affairs for ſeven and thirty years, and was buried in the Church of St. Paul. Edmund his Son by the Nobility at London was choſen his Succeſſour, not his Son by Emma his Queen; but as Matthew of Weſtminſter ſays by an ignoble Mother, though others affirm her the Daughter of an Earl called Thored, and Ethelred's former Wife. Matthew writes, that though his Mother was baſe he illuſtrated the Ignobility of her Deſcent by the Ingenuity of his Mind, and the Activity of his Body, and indeed ſuch was his Courage and indefatigable Induſtry, that he obtained thence the ſirname of Ironſide. He having obtained the Title haſted into Weſt Saxony, where he was received and owned by the People of thoſe parts, while a far greater Number with many Biſhops, Abbats, and others of the Nobility obeyed Canute as their Sovereign, whom being aſſembled they had choſen for their King, admitted at Southampton to that Dignity and ſworn to him Allegiance, having abjured the Race of Ethelred, and received an Oath from him of good Government in all, as well Religious as ſecular Affairs.

Ethelred dies.

Is ſucceeded by Edmund in Weſt Saxony.

The reſt obeying Cnute.

De ea ſic Malm. Erat iſte Edmundus non ex Emma natus ſed ex quadam alia quam fama obſcura recondit. De geſtis Regum Angl. lib. 2. cap. 10.

109. Canute much animated by ſo powerfull a party haſted to London with his Fleet about Rogation week, where being arrived on Surry ſide, he cauſed a great Ditch to be made, and drew up his ſhips Weſtward of the Bridge. The City he begirt with a deep and broad Trench, and with armed men, and often attempted by force to take it. But the Citizens ſo manfully demeaned themſelves, that perceiving he loſt but time, and that the Defendants were to be ſtarved out, he left a guard for his ſhips, and haſted into the Weſt to attack Edmund e'er he could be provided, who indeed was provided ill enough, but as he was with the Company he had got together, he ventured to give him Battel at a place then called Peonum (or Pea) near Gillingaham in Dorſetſhire with ſuch ſucceſs, that he forced his Enemy to retreat. Encouraged herewith he made greater preparations, and Midſummer being now paſt reſolved to fight Cnute the ſecond time, whom meeting near a Town called Swarſtan, he gave him Battel but could onely defend himſelf, though he performed all the Offices both of a ſtout Souldier, and an expert General, becauſe Edric the Traitour together with Almar and Algar, the chief of the Nobility, having command of the Hampſhire or Wiltſhire Men, ſided with the Danes. It was a drawn Battel, this day the Armies being parted by the darkneſs of the Night. The next Morning they renewed the Fight, and King Edmund had wone the Garland, but for the cunning device of that perfidious Edric, who perceiving Victory inclined to his ſide, cut off the Head of one Oſmear, a Man that in the face very much reſembled the King, and lifting it up on high, called to the Engliſh bidding them behold the Head of their Party, and if they reſpected their own Lives, be gone as faſt as their Heels could carry them. This very much ſtartled and diſcompoſed them, till Edmund ſenſible of the cheat from an Hill made known himſelf to his Souldiers, and toſſed a Javelin againſt Edric, whom yet it had the fortune to miſs. They continued the Fight till it grew dark, and then parted as they had done the Night before.

Several Battels 'twixt Edmund and Cnute.

Sim. Dunelm. Malmesb.

110. Canute ſeeing what little advantage he was like to receive from a pitcht Battel diſcamped in the dead time of the Night, and making towards London where he had left his Ships, again beſieged the City. Edmund when he knew he was gone, with ſpeed marched into Weſtſex to recruit his Forces, and now the perfidious Edric, having ſufficient experience both of his Valour and Conduct, thought the onely way was to be reconciled to him, that he might reveal his Councils, and by his treacherous Inſinuations give a Check to the current of his good Fortune. He made application to him, owning him for his natural Prince, ſwore for the time to come to be faithfull to him, and obtained Pardon for what was paſt. Being ſufficiently recruited, he haſted to London, and raiſed the Siege, beating off the Danes to their ſhips. After two days he paſſed the Thames at Brentford, where many of his Men were loſt in the Water, yet coming upon the backs of his Enemies, he put them to the rout. By his loſs ſuſtained in paſſing the River, and the ſeveral Ingagements, the Number of his men was ſo diminiſhed, that he found himſelf obliged to return into Weſtſex, to fill up his troops, which the Danes perceiving returned and laid cloſe ſiege to London, which they attacqued by all means poſſible. Yet did the Induſtry and Courage of the Inhabitants, ſtill fruſtrate all his Attempts, ſo that deſpairing he drew off his Men, and with his Fleet, entred a River then called Arenne, where landing in Mercia, he burnt the Villages, killed the Countrey People, and made havock of all things at his pleaſure. The Foot he cauſed on ſhips to paſs to Medway, Cnute beſieges London.

Florentio Wigornienſi. Arewe.

and the Horſe by Land with the Captives and Cattel. In the mean time Edmund Ironſide was not idle, but the fourth time having levied a ſtrong Power of Men out of all England croſſed the Thames again at Brentford, and marched into Kent, where at a place called Otford, he found and ingaged the Danes, who not able to ſuſtain his violence fled ſuch of them as were horſed into the Iſle of Shepey. All he could take he put to the Sword, and had his Prudence aſwell as his Courage ſtood by him, he had obtained a complete Victory. But he was ſo blind as not to perceive the Treachery of Edric, who by ſpecious allegations procured him to ſtop his perſuit at Englesford.

A bloudy Battel at Aſſandune.

111. Edmund finding the Weſtſaxons moſt firm and true to him, after this Succeſs for Recruits returned into that Countrey, the opportunity of whoſe abſence Canute took to vent his malice and revenge upon a naked People, for going into Eſſex he thence invaded Mercia, where he ſhewed more Cruelty than ever; commanding his Men to omit no Act which could be committed againſt Enemies. Edmund Ironſide with an Army gathered out of all Countries overtook, and ingaged them in their Retreat at a place called then Aſſandune (or * the Hill of an Aſs) now corruptly Aſhdown in Eſſex. The Battel was fought with great reſolution and vehemence on both ſides, and Edmund had great hopes of gaining the Victory, which the wretched Edric Streone perceiving as he had ingaged formerly to Cnute (having coming over for ſuch a purpoſe) with the Troops he commanded fled over to him, and ſo leaving the Engliſh overmatcht, whom by caſting out † words again of the King's death he had laboured to diſcourage, by his Treachery procured their Defeat and Ruine, for they never received a greater blow, almoſt all their Nobility here falling, particularly Alfric, Godwin, Vlfketel and Ethelward all Dukes: Eadnoth alſo the Biſhop of Lincoln (of Dorcheſter rather) and Wolf an Abbat who came to the place to pray for the Army, amongſt the reſt loſt their lives, yet did not this diſaſter, ſo far diſcourage Edmund, but that e'er long he was in caſe to make another Trial of his Fortune in the Field, of which Edric and thoſe of his Faction fearing the Iſſue, again circumvented him by their wiles, perſwading him for quietneſs and ſecurity ſake to divide the Kingdom with Cnute. After much reluctancy he was drawn to conſent, and after many meſſengers to and fro, and Hoſtages received, an Interview of the two Kings was appointed at Deorkirſt in Gloceſterſhire, a place ſituate ſomewhat low upon the Bank of Severn, Edmund with his men taking the Weſtern, and Canute with his Danes, the Eaſtern parts ſide, both the Kings from their Armies wafted over into a ſmall Iſland called then Olanege, now the Eight, where by oath a Fraternity and firm Peace they eſtabliſhed, and divided the Kingdom, which concluded they interchanged their Arm, and the Habits they wore, and having ſetled the Pay which ſhould be allotted to the Fleet, each repaſſed to his Followers.

Upon which a Diviſion of the Kingdom enſued.

* In monte qui Aſſandun, id eſt Mons Aſini nominatur, abeuntes eſt conſecutus. Sim. Dunelm.

† Clamavit Anglorum genti, Flet Engle, Flet Engle, de dis Edmund, quod interpretatur; Fugite Angli, fugite, mortuus eſt Edmundus. Huntingd. Hiſt. lib. 6.

A farther account of the Battel and Accord betwixt Edmund and Cnute.

112. Such is the Account which the Hiſtory that goes under the name of Simeon of Durham, gives us of this matter: others do otherwiſe relate it. Malmesbury having ſaid what the Iſſue of the Battel was at Aſſandune, tells how Edmund ſirnamed Ironſide betook himſelf with very little Company to Gloceſter, there to gather new Forces, and ſet upon his Enemies who he thought would be ſecure after the late Victory, as he ſaw convenient. Cnute was aware of him, and ſo induſtrious as to attend and watch his courſes. They were coming to a freſh ingagement when Edmund demanded a ſingle Combat, that for the ambition of but two men, the bloud of many innocent Perſons might not be ſhed, and they two without any inconvenience to their Subjects, might decide the controverſie in their own Perſons, and hereby obtain for the care of their People, great renown in future Ages. But Canute was deaf on this Ear, affirming he had Courage enough but not ſtrength ſufficient to encounter a Man of ſo vaſt a ſize, and for an expedient propounded, that each of them ſhould enjoy what their Fathers had held, from whom they had both received juſt Titles. The propoſal was well received by the Armies as very equitable, and which would give ſome breathing to the poor Engliſh Nation, ſo miſerably ſpent by theſe perpetual Hoſtilities; and Edmund by this univerſal approbation was overcome and ſilenc'd, the Accord being that he as his Hereditary Kingdom ſhould hold the Weſt Saxons with the Southern, and Canute Mercia with the Northern Parts. Thus one of our Authours ſpeaks of an Accord without ſo much as the mention of a Combat, another hints that mention was made of a Combat but it took no effect; but another there is who writes both of the Propoſal, and the Fighting of the Duel.

Another Relation of it.

113. Henry the Archdeacon of Huntingdon ſpeaking how after the Battel at Eſeſdune (as he calls it) the Armies in Gloceſterſhire the ſeventh time faced each other, adds, that the Noblemen on one ſide dreading the courage of Edmund, on the other of Cnute, began to mutter among themſelves what Fools they were ſo often to venture their Lives, and how they ſhould let them fight alone, who deſigned alone to Reign. This ſaying pleaſed well enough the Kings, for Cnute was a King of no ſmall honeſty. The Kings therefore fought a Duel. Their Darts and Lances on both ſides being broken, they fell to it with their Swords upon each others moſt incomparable Armour, the noiſe of which ſtruck the ears of the Lookers on with terrour, as their eyes were dazled with the fire which was ſtruck from the Swords upon ſuch admirable Metal. At length the incomparable vigour of Edmund prevailed, whom Cnute very ſtrenuouſly reſiſted, yet fearing the ſucceſs, with fair Language inſtead of foul Blows thus accoſted his Adverſary. Young man, of all others the moſt valiant, what neceſſity is there that either thou or I ſhould die by the Sword, out of deſire of Reigning. Let us be Adoptive Brethren and divide the Kingdom, let me have a ſhare in thine, and do thou command in mine Affairs. Denmark alſo ſhall be at thy diſpoſal. With theſe words the generous mind of the young King was mollified, and a kiſs of Peace was given on either part; after which their Followers came together, and weeping for joy, Edmund had the Kingdom of Weſtſex, and Cnute that of Mercia, who thereupon returned to London. Thus much Huntingdon, with whom agrees Matthew of Weſtminſter as to the Duel, mentioning Edric as the man who firſt moved it amongſt the Nobility. But both Hoveden and Florent of Worceſter agree with the firſt Relation of Simeon.

Edmund dies.

Leaving Iſſue.

114. The Danes retiring to London after the agreement (which was certainly made, whatever might be the Circumſtances or the manner) were received by the Inhabitants, and permitted to take up their Winter Quarters in the City, where, about the Feaſt of St. Andrew died King Edmund Ironſide unexpectedly, and was buried with his Grandfather Edgar at Glaſtenbury. Concerning his death our Authours write variouſly. The Hiſtory of Simeon, Florent of Worceſter, and Roger de Hoveden, tell us onely that he died, without mentioning the cauſe. Malmesbury confeſſes it was uncertain of what Diſeaſe or Caſualty he died, but adds, that Fame charged Edric with hiring two of his Chamberlains, to whoſe Fidelity he committed himſelf, to murther him which they effected by thruſting a ſharp Iron into his Body as he ſate at Stool. Huntingdon will have it done at Oxford by one of the Sons of Edric as the King ſate in an Houſe of Office, with whom accords Matthew of Weſtminſter; Radulphus de Diceto names neither place nor a certain perſon, but ſays it was done by an Iron Spit at Edric's procurement. Edmund thus in the ſame year both began and ended his Reign, leaving two Sons behind him, Edwi ſome call him, ſome Edmund, and Edward. By his own Mother he had a Brother called Edwin, and by Emma his Step-Mother two more, viz. Elfred and Edward. Theſe Relations he left, but Canute reſolved none of them ſhould ſucceed him but to Reign himſelf alone. “He ſummoned all the Biſhops and Nobility to meet at London, and cunningly demanded of ſuch as had been preſent at the agreement betwixt him and Edmund, what proviſion was made by that agreement for the Sons and Brothers of Edmund, and whether in caſe he died before Canute, any of them was to ſucceed in the Kingdom of the Weſt Saxons? They overcome with fear anſwered, That to their knowledge Edmund neither living nor dying had made any proviſion for his Relations, but deſigned him the Protectour or Guardian of his Sons, till they ſhould come to Age. For this their falſe Teſtimony they hoped for great Rewards, and ſome of them indeed he afterwards rewarded with an Halter or ſome Inſtrument of ſuch like Deſert. But Canute taking the advantage it afforded him, exacted Oaths of Fidelity from all the Nobility, who readily choſe him for their King, and abjured all the Engliſh Line, which was diſpoſed of as we ſhall ſee hereafter, and ſet aſide for a certain time.

Who are outed by Cnute.

SECT. XI.

SECT. XI.

The Monarchy of the Danes in Britain, from the beginning of that of Canute or Cnute, to the Death of Hardecnute, and the Reſtitution of the Engliſh Line in Edward the Confeſſour.

The ſpace of Twenty ſix Years.

Sect. 11.

Cnute King.

Is ſole Monarch.

1. CAnute thus obtained the Kingdom of the Engliſh, of which his Father rather had a proſpect than firm poſſeſſion, about two hundred and twenty ſeven years after the firſt arrival of his Daniſh Nation, two years after his Father's death, in the one and fortieth year of Baſilius Junior Emperour of the Eaſt, the ſeventeenth of Henricus Junior the German Emperour, in the Reign of Robert the Son and Succeſſour of Hugh Capet King of the Franks. A. D. MXVII.

Edwin the Son of Edmund being baniſhed.

2. The Danes had formerly in ſome parts of the Land, as Eaſt England and Northumberland ſet up their petty Kingdoms, but now obtained the ſetled Monarchy of all England. Formerly they had been Strangers, now come to be the principal Inhabitants, not in Numbers but in Reputation. Before time they were fierce invaders, cruel and Savage Enemies, as bloudy, as Ravenous, and baſe as ever any Invader had ever been, but now were turned Proprietours, and one of them Lord of the whole; ſweetned and civiliz'd not ſo much by Chriſtianity and good Education, as by ſelf-ſeeking and worldly intereſt, for the late Inrodes made by Cnute were accompanied with as great Cruelties and Devaſtations, as thoſe of his Predeceſſours. Baſeneſs and fear made the Engliſh Nobility ſervilely to truckle, ſo that there was no need of any thing more to work his Will but his bare Commands. Nay they would prevent his Commands by doing thoſe things, to which they knew he was but inclined. For Edwi or Edwin the Brother of Edmund, a young Prince of excellent Endowments, and exceeding great hopes, they immediately voted to Baniſhment, which Reſolution as ſoon as Canute perceived ſo full of flattery and injuſtice, he went much pleaſed into his Chamber, and calling to him the perfidious Duke Edric asked him by what means he might trepan young Edwin to his death. The Traitour anſwered, that he knew one Ethelward who could eaſily doe it if he would ſpeak with and promiſe him a great Reward. Cnute ſent for the man, and telling him what the Duke had ſaid of him, not onely promiſed him all that his Anceſtours had injoyed, but to hold him more dear than a Brother in caſe he would doe him that Service. He promiſed to uſe his utmoſt indeavour, but as yet had no ſuch intention, and ſaid it onely to put him off; for he was deſcended of the moſt Noble ſtock of the Engliſh Nation.

He divides the Kingdom.

Puniſheth the Murtherers of his Predeceſſour.

3. Cnute being ſetled in his new Power and Sovereignty over all England, divided his Kingdom into four parts, whereof one he committed to the Government of Edric, viz. Mercia, it not being as yet ſeaſonable to lay him aſide. Eaſt England he aſſigned to Earl Turkill, Northumberland to Irc or Eric, and reſerved Weſt Saxony as that which being the ancient Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh Line had moſt reaſon to bear reſpect to it, to his own Care and Vigilance. Then the firſt thing he did was to puniſh ſuch as had an hand in the death of Edmund, whom having diſcovered their wickedneſs in hope of Reward he kept cloſe up, and now in a great Aſſembly of the People cauſed to be put to death, as thoſe whom their own mouths condemned. Having thus ſweetned his way, a Covenant with all the Nobles and the whole People now he made, which was confirmed by Oath and an Amneſty decreed for whatſoever had formerly paſt betwixt the Nations. But this could not put him out of his fears ſo long as Edwi Etheling lived, who was commonly called King of the Countreymen. Baniſhment would not ſerve his turn, but after a ſeeming Reconciliation to enſnare him by his earneſt Solicitations, he procured him to be made away by thoſe whom he had moſt truſted. Edric now that his hand was in, adviſed him to put to death alſo the young Sons of Edmund, the Clitunculi, as Simeon calls them, viz. Edmund and Edward; but it being eſteemed a thing very odious, and which would much incenſe the People to have them murthered in England, within a while they were ſent to the King of the Swedes there to be made away, who notwithſtanding the League and kindneſs betwixt him and Cnute, abhorred the fact, and by all his Intreaties could not be brought to commit it, but conveyed them to Solomon King of the Hungarians, by him to be carefully brought up. Edmund in proceſs of time in that retirement ended his life; but Edward Married Agatha the Daughter of Henry the German Emperour, by which Lady he had Margaret Queen of the Scots, Chriſtina that turned Nun, and Edgar Etheling hereafter to be ſpoken of. This is the Account given by the general Aſſent of Hiſtorians, although there be a Paſſage amongſt the Laws of Edward the Confeſſour, which hints, that this Edward out of fear of Cnute, fled to one Maleſclot King of the Rugians, who both received him with honour, and beſtowed on him in Marriage a Lady of that Countrey.

He Marries. 4. Cnute having rid himſelf of all his Competitours, for the Sons of Ethelred by Emma were eſcaped into Normandy, and all others of the Bloud Royal he had baniſhed, thought he ſhould much farther eſtabliſh his intereſt by Marrying with Emma, which he effected in July following, concluding that it would win him the hearts of the People, and take off the thoughts of her Brother Richard Duke of Normandy, from the Sons ſhe had had by Ethelred, and he approved of the Match ſending over in July his Siſter into England. Being now arrived at the top of his Expectations, he thought fit to remove the Ladder by which he mounted, leſt it ſhould ſerve the end of ſome other Pretender. What uſe he had all along made of the Treachery of Duke Edric has been ſufficiently diſcovered. Now inſtead of loving he abominated the man not ſo much in hatred to his Vallany as for his own preſervation, imagining that he who had betrayed thoſe who had ſo well deſerved of him, would not ſtick to doe the ſame by him a Foreigner, when there ſhould but a ſufficient temptation or opportunity preſent it ſelf. The former Treaſon ſerving his own ends, he loved, but hated the Traytour, becauſe in his deſtruction he doubted not but he would be ready to ſerve the ends of others, and therefore reſolved to make him away. It's reported, that after he had procured King Edmund to be ſlain in the manner before related, he came to Cnute, and bade God ſave him now the onely King, to whom when he had told all the Story, the King anſwered, that for ſo great a piece of Service he would make him higher than all the Engliſh Nobility. Henr. Huntingd. lib. 6. Remembring therefore that Promiſe, he cauſed him in the time of Chriſtmas to be Beheaded, and his Head to be ſet upon a Pole on the higheſt Tower in London. Ingulphus the Abbat of Croyland, who lived in or near thoſe very days, writes, that unſatisfi'd it ſeems with what had been done for him, he upbraided Cnute with his great ſervices in betraying the two King Ethelred and Edmund, and by his own Mouth being convicted of Treaſon, was as a Traytour hanged and thrown into the Thames. Later Authours in compliance with this Relation, ſay, that ſuſpecting the King's intentions of depriving him of the Mercian Dukedom, and upbraiding him with his Services, Cnute ſaid to him with an angry Countenance, Traytour to God and to me, thou ſhalt die, thine own mouth accuſes thee to have ſlain thy Maſter, my Confederate Brother, and the Lord's Anointed, and thereupon cauſed him to be Strangled in the Room, and thrown out of the Window over the Wall of the City into the Thames, where his Trunk lay unburied, his Head being fixed on a Pole and ſet on the higheſt Tower, which as ſome ſay, Eric at the King's command ſtruck off. Cauſes Edric and others of the Nobility to be executed. Upon this occaſion either for that they were familiar with Edric, or upon ſome other jealous grounds, as his Complices he put to death ſeveral other Noblemen, as Norman the Son of Duke Leofwin, and the Brother of Leofric, Ethelward the Son of Duke Aglemar, and Brihtric the Son of Elſege who governed Devonſhire, all reputed Innocent Perſons. For all this he thought himſelf not yet ſecure except he kept on foot an Army, for the maintenance of which, the following year, he ſqueezed out of all England ſeventy (ſome ſay eighty) two thouſand Pounds, beſides fifteen thouſand out of the City of London. But no leſs than theſe ſeverities could be expected from an Uſurper and a Foreigner. After ſome years he ſent back his Army at the Importunity of the Nobility, having by a ſevere Law made againſt killing any Danes, taken ſecurity for the ſafety of his Nation. Vide infrà.

5. Theſe things were done in the South, while in the Northern Parts a Quarrel aroſe between Malcolm Son of Cyneth King of the Scots, and Vthred the Son of Waldelf Earl of Northumberland, or rather his Succeſſour Eric, for Vthred was (as we have heard) ſlain by Cnute two years before. The Rupture proceeded to a great War (as our Authour terms it) wherein on the part of the Scots, Eugenius Calvus King of the Lutinenſes or Lothians was ingaged; but what the effects of ſo great a controverſie were, he doth not tell us. Cnute having united the Engliſh and Danes in one Government, though the beſt Cement would be to frame their minds to the ſame Laws and Cuſtoms, for which purpoſe he called a Convention to Oxford, where both Parties agreed to obſerve the Laws of King Edgar. Now he thought he had ſo well ſetled his matters here, that he might without any danger give a Viſit to his ancient and Native Kingdom of Denmark, whither he ſailed the year following, being the third of his Reign, and continued there the whole Winter. The Archdeacon writes, that he led thither an Army of Engliſh and Danes againſt the Wandals, by which he muſt mean no other than Swedes. That incamping near his Enemies with intention not to fight till the next day, Godwin the Engliſh General (Conſul he terms him) without his knowledge by Night ſet upon them at unawares, killed many and put the reſt to flight. When it was day the King imagining that the Engliſh were either run away or had revolted to his Enemy, ſet his Danes in order of Battel, and marched toward the Swediſh Camp, but here he found nothing but Bloud, Carkaſſes, and Plunder, which thing cauſed him exceedingly to prize the Engliſh, (who by their valour procured their Captain an Earldom and renown to themſelves) and hold them in no leſs eſteem than the Danes themſelves. In Spring he returned into England, and in Eaſter Holydays held a great Council at Circeſter, in which he baniſhed Duke Ethelward or Edward as others call him. This ſame year in the place of the Battel fought at Eſſandune, which won him the Kingdom, he was preſent at the Dedication of a Church which there he had cauſed to be built as others in other places of the Fights he had been in. In this building he was aſſiſted by Turkil the Earl, whom the year following, ſuſpecting it ſeems his power, he baniſhed out of England with his Wife Egitha. With Turkil others joyn Eric or Iric the Duke of Northumberland, a Dane alſo by deſcent. As ſoon as they ſet foot in Denmark, Matthew writes, that Turkil (who had been the procurer of the death of St. Elphege, and had firſt perſwaded Swane to invade England) was killed by the Noblemen of the Countrey. But whether it was that thoſe he baniſhed and ſent home, ſtirred up the People againſt him, or that being abſent his Authority was deſpiſed. Huntingdon writes, that in his ninth year he carried over another Army into Denmark againſt Vlf and Eilaf, who had got a great multitude together againſt him both by Sea and Land, and now gave him ſuch a Defeat, that of both Nations Engliſh and Danes very many were loſt. But others make this the ſame expedition with the former.

He ſails into Denmark.

And beats the Swedes.

Incubuere igitur viribus Angli & victoriam Conſummantes Comitatum Duci, ſibi laudem paravêrunt. Malmesb. ubi ſuprà.

At his return baniſheth Turkil and other Nobles.

Math. Weſtm.

6. And indeed had his matters been ſo much imbroiled now in Denmark he would not have caſt his thoughts ſo ſoon upon Norway, whence having intelligence that the People deſpiſed their King Olaus for his plainneſs and religious ſimplicity, he ſent great ſums of Money to make way for him, that rejecting their true and natural Lord they ſhould revolt and chuſe him for their King. His Gold had ſuch effect upon them, that not able to withſtand the Operations thereof, they promiſed him a good reception whenſoever he would come, which the following year and the MXXVIII of our Lord he did, ſailing into Norway with fifty ſhips. The King Olaus he drove out of the Countrey, and then eaſily ſubdued it to his own Command, whither Olaus the year after returning to try the minds of the Revolters was ſlain by them with all his Followers. The year after his Conqueſt he returned into England, but not till the Feaſt of St. Martin was paſt, where being arrived under a pretence of an Embaſſy, he ſent into Baniſhment Hacun a Daniſh Count, who had Married Gunilda his Neice by his Siſter and the King of the Winidi. This man was grown ſo powerfull and popular, that he ſtood in fear of being killed or depoſed by him, and thereupon he drove him to ſuch ſtraits, that within Twelve months he either periſhed on the Sea, or elſe was killed in the Iſle of Orkney. Such were his fears, ſuch were the means he uſed to prevent what he feared, ſparing neither fair nor foul, ſticking at nothing how unjuſt ſoever, for fixing the Diadem on his Head. Now he had no occaſion nor temptation to be bad, and therefore reſolved to be very good, and eminently religious, as ſuch who have arrived at great wealth by griping and ſordid Practices, many times think to make Heaven ſatisfaction by dedicating ſome of their ill gotten Goods to Religi-

Simeon Dunelm. ad Ann. MXXVII, &c.

Subdues Norway.

Sect. 11.

Journey to Rome.

ous Uſes. To Rome he will go to viſit the Tombs of the Holy Apoſtles, a Pilgrimage which would obliterate all Crimes whatſoever. On St. Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles, he confers very great gifts of Gold and Silver, with other pretious things. He procures from Pope John a Relaxation of all Tribute and Toll to the Engliſh School there, both in his way thither and in his return gives large Alms to the Poor, buys off ſeveral Tolls and Impoſitions laid upon Travellers; and at the Sepulchre of the Apoſtles, vows to God an amendment of his Life and Manners. So much are we told by that of Simeon and other Hiſtories.

Simeon Dunelm. ad Ann. MXXXI.

His Epiſtle Written from thence.

7. In the Hiſtory of the Monk of Malmesbury is extant an Epiſtle which from Rome it's ſaid he wrote to Ailnoth or Egelnoth, the Metropolitan, to Alfric of York with all the Biſhops and Primates, and the whole Engliſh Nation aſwell Noblemen as Plebeians. “Herein he gives an account of his Journey, both the reaſon of “his undertaking it, how he was received at Rome, what he had negotiated for “the benefit of his Subjects, and then gives directions and command to his “Officers to doe all juſtice and right to the People in his abſence. The thing he “decreed he ſays long before, but never could till now accompliſh what he “had deſigned for the pardon of his Sins, and the ſafety of all his Subjects. He “ſignifies that he was received by all the Princes who at that time were with Pope “John ſolemnizing the Feaſt of Eaſter with extraordinary reſpect and honour, “but eſpecially by Conrade the German Emperour. That he had dealt with them “all about the concernments of all his People both Engliſh and Danes, that their “paſſage toward Rome might be more free and open; and had obtained that aſ-“well Merchants as others ſhould with all ſafety paſs and repaſs without any Toll “or Impoſition. He complained to the Pope that his Archbiſhops paid vaſt “ſumms of Money before they could obtain their Palls, which grievance by “Decree was taken off. All theſe Immunities procured from the Pope, the Emperour, King Rodulphus and all other Princes * through whoſe Territories he Travells were confirmed by Oath under the Teſtimony of four Archbiſhops, and twenty Biſhops, with an innumerable multitude of Dukes and other Noblemen that were preſent. “Then follows a Thankſgiving to Almighty God, that what “ever he had deſigned in his Journey had proſpered. After this he deſires it “may be publiſhed to all the World that having devoted his Life to Righteouſ-“neſs, and reſolved to Govern the People ſubject to him in all Piety and juſtice “with a reſpect to Equity in all particulars, in caſe any thing had ſlipped in his “Youth which might juſtly be taxed with Intemperance or Negligence, with “the help of God he was ready to make for all ſuch Extravagancies full amends. “Therefore all his Officers whatſoever, Sheriffs or others, he charges that nei-“ther for fear of himſelf, nor out of favour to any other Perſon they pervert “Juſtice, not in reſpect to himſelf becauſe there was no neceſſity that by any un-“juſt exaction there ſhould be any Collection of Money. At laſt after a great “aſſeveration how much he ſtudied the profit and convenience of his People, he “adjures all his Officers before he ſhould arrive in England they would procure “all Debts to be paid due according to the Ancient cuſtome, as Almes for the “Plough, the Tithes of all Cattle brought forth in the ſame year, Peterpence, “in Auguſt the Tithes of Corn, and at Martinmas the firſt Fruits of the ſame “called Cureſcot, or rather Circeſcot becauſe given to the Church. In caſe this “were not paid before his Return he threatens to animadvert upon every one ‘according to the Laws.

Cnute Rex totius Angliæ & Danamarchiæ & Norwergiæ & partis Suavorum Ailnotho Metropolitano, & Alfrico Eboracenſi, omnibúſque Epiſcopis & Primatibus, & toti genti Anglorum tam Nobilibus quam Plebcis ſalutem.

* A monte Gargaro uſque ad iſtud proximum mare.

8. It's not much that a Foreigner and Uſurper ſhould mention the Laws; for ſuch having, though by lawleſs courſes, obtained the ſecure Poſſeſſion of what they aimed at to gain the People, uſually both obſerve the Laws of their Predeceſſours ſo far as they contradict not their Ends and make themſelves very good ones. There be but two courſes, viz. abſolute Conqueſt, and force with Sword and Halter; or elſe ſuch as may win and cajoll the People. The former is dangerous, and muſt have a ſtanding Army, and the Conquered muſt be turned out of their Eſtates, which are to be diſtributed amongſt the Officers and Souldiers; the other more practicable and ſuitable to ſuch as have a mind to live at eaſe. Eſpecially the Laws of King Ethelred he commanded under a Penalty to be kept, the lateſt and moſt fitting the preſent caſe and temper of the Nation, but whereas the Monk adds in all Ages or Times, he underſtood not that poſitive Laws or Statutes muſt be changeable according to the mutability of the ſtate and condition of a People. Beſides the reinforcing of theſe former Laws, others he publiſhed in his own Name, as we ſhall ſee in another place. From Rome he went to Danemark, and thence at this time (as ſome would have it) paſſed into Norway and expelled Olaus the King, Omnes enim Leges ab antiquis Regibus & maximè ab Anteceſſore ſuo Ethelredo latas ſub interminatione regiæ mulctæ perpetuis temporibus obſervari præcepit. Malmesb.

King, but better Computers place this Action four years before. At his return he ſpent his time in building and repairing Monaſteries and Churches, which with the Monks the Writers of thoſe times hath ſo far repaired his Fame and Eſteem, that notwithſtanding all his violence and injuſtice, nay notwithſtanding he was the Depriver of one of their Saints, King Olaus, aud the Procurer of his Death, (if not immediately by ſending Aſſaſſinates to murther him, as ſome have Written, yet mediately by procuring the Rebellion, and reducing him into the hatred of his People) they diſmiſs him with a very fair character. Nay ſome tell us, that for his Piety he was rewarded with another Kingdom, viz. that of Scotland, which, as appears from Matthew of Weſtminſter, at this time depended on this of England, for he writes that the Scots now Rebelled, and that upon that occaſion he led his Army thither where he eaſily Conquered Malcolm the King, with two other Reguli which Huntingdon mentions by the Names of Melbeathe and Jermare. From ſome paſſages in the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of theſe times it alſo appears that Wales was ſubject to him as it had been formerly to his Predeceſſours, although one Ritherech was ſtyled King of all Wales, by which this onely was meant that there were ſeveral other Petty Kings which ackowledged his Superiority. But if the Kingdom of Scotland was given him for his Piety, that of Heaven followed not long after, for within two years he Died on the twelfth of November at Shaftsbury, and was Buried at Wincheſter in the Old Monaſtery, after he had Reigned twenty years. It cannot be denied but that he was a Magnificent Prince, bountifull both to Religious Men and the Poor, even of other Nations. His fault was that he could never have been ſo Magnificent or Bountifull, but that he came to that greatneſs by Indirect means. His method and means were bad; but few that have obtained Crowns ſo unjuſtly have managed their Power once obtained with ſo much Juſtice and Humanity; ſo that well may he bear away the Title generally given him of Canutus the Great.

Adds Scotland to his Dominions.

Godwinus in London. Epiſcop.

Dies.

His Character.

9. And this he may the better deſerve if that Story be true which is commonly told of his ſenſibleneſs of his own Meanneſs as a Man and his aſcribing abſolute Greatneſs onely to him in compariſon of whom Kings themſelves, though in reſpect to one another they may be ſtyled Great, yet are to be accounted little greater than Nothing. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon having told us that before him there was never a King of England ſo Mighty, as being Lord of all Danemark, Scotland, adds that beſides his many Wars he waged, he was eminent for three things eſpecially. The firſt was his marrying his Daughter to the Emperour with unſpeakable Riches. The ſecond was the diminiſhing or abating to one half all the Exactions or Impoſitions upon Travellers between France and Rome. The third was this: when the Tide came in he ſet his Chair on the Sea Shoar, and as the Sea grew to be high he ſpake to it in theſe terms: Thou art under my Dominion, and the Land where I ſit is mine; neither is there any, who without due puniſhment ſhall reſiſt my commands. I command thee therefore that thou riſe not ſo high as where I ſit, neither preſume to wet the Cloaths nor the Limbs of thy Lord. But the Sea according to the cuſtome without any Reverence, flowing up, firſt to the Feet and then to the Legs of the King, wet as he was he leaped back and ſaid. Let all Inhabitants of the World know that vain and frivolous is the Power of Kings; neither is there any one worthy that Title but he alone whoſe Command by force of Eternal Laws the Heaven, the Earth and the Sea obey. He adds, that after this he never ſet his Golden Crown upon his head, but placed it upon a Crucifix. Some ſillily blame his carriage as Superſtitious, others ſay ſuch a Demonſtration of Almighty God's Prerogative was needleſs. But the paſſage was ſeaſonable enough to convince and reprove ſuch as were apt to be dazled with the worldly glory of thoſe who have ſo ſmall command over the Sea, that at land it ſelf the Power of the greateſt of them extends it ſelf ſcarcely one intire Mile from the place where they ſtand, either upward, or below; the ſurface, ſo long as he pleaſes too, they can onely call their own.

10. Cnute by Algiva of Northampton his Concubine the Daughter of Earl Alfelm had two Sons, whereof one was called Swane, and the other Harold, as the current opinion went, though ſome ſpeak doubtfully, as if to conceal her Barrenneſs, the former ſhe had procured from a Prieſt's Wife (or a Woman Servant) and the latter from the Wife of a Shoomaker. By Emma the Relict of King Ethelrede which he ſeems to have Married in the life-time of Algiva, though others call Algiva Queen, he had a Son Named Hardecnute, and a Daughter of great Beauty called Gundhilda, married by her Brother afterward to Henry the Malmesb. Matt. Weſtm. Huntingdon. Hoveden. alii.

Emperour

UMI

Sect. 11.

Sim. Dunelm.

Elegerunt eum Dani & Londoniæ cives qui jam pæne in Barbarorum mores propter frequentem convictum tranſierant. De Geſtis Regum Anglor. lib. 2. ch. 12.

Ingulphus. Malmesb.

A conteſt about the Succeſſion.

Emperour of Germany. Before his Death it's ſaid that he appointed Swane to be King of Norway, Hardecnute King of Danemark, and to Harold aſſigned the Kingdom of England. But this ſeems no ways probable that he would ſeparate the Son of his dearly beloved Wife ſo far from her, eſpecially if that be true, which ſome have written, that he formerly promiſed to leave the Crown of England to ſuch Iſſue as he ſhould have by her. However Harold by means of the Danes and the Citizens of London (whom Malmesbury writes to have been almoſt by this time degenerated into Barbarians by their continual intercourſe with them) and afterward by injuſtice obtained the Engliſh Crown, but not till after much contention. For each Pretender endeavoured to ſtrengthen himſelf with Friends and Forces: as Earl Leofric with the Danes and Londoners ſtood for Harold; ſo moſt of the Engliſh contended for Edward the Son of King Ethelred, and ſome for Hardecnute the Son of Cnute by Queen Emma. No expectation was there but of a great War to follow, which cauſed multitudes of People (who had not yet forgot the dreadfull waſtes made by the Daniſh Inrodes) to quit their Habitations, and betake themſelves into watriſh and fenny places where they thought the Enemy either could not or would not purſue them, particularly to the Monaſtery of Croyland, where they cauſed ſuch a diſturbance that the Religious of the Place could neither meet in the Church, nor in their Refectory. All ſeemed now to tend to a ſlaughter, when by the Interpoſition of ſome of the more ſober ſort Advice was given to the Heads of all the Factions to meet and hold a Conſultation to prevent the effuſion of Chriſtian Bloud. The place appointed was Oxford, where when they ſufficiently debated the matter by the Major part it was at laſt concluded, that the Kingdom ſhould be divided betwixt Harold and Hardecnute, ſo that Harold ſhould have all the Countries lying Northward from the Thames, together with the City of London; and Hardecnute enjoy all the Southern Provinces.

Which is ended.

11. Hardecnute's diſadvantage was that at the time of his Father's Death he was in Danemark, whither he was ſent to order matters, and by his entercourſe to gain the affections of the People, and indeed he ſeems to have been deſigned by his Father both to the Succeſſion of the one Kingdom and the other. Harold took his opportunity to gain Friends, and ſome think that at firſt he was choſen King alone by a prevalent Party, but Hardecnute arriving e'er he had confirmed his Poſſeſſion, this Agreement was made betwixt them for dividing the Kingdom, which ſetled, Hardecnute's Affairs called him back into Danemark, and then again Harold taking an advantage at his Abſence, being already in Poſſeſſion of the greateſt part, ſeized upon all. But whether in this juncture of Affairs Hardecnute returned into England or was abſent all the while, Harold got to be ſole King by aſſiſtence of the Danes, the Londoners, and now at length of Godwin created for his former Services in Danemark, Earl of Kent, who being a Man made up of ambition and cunning, at the beginning of the Conteſt had profeſſed himſelf a ſtout Champion of Emma and her Children, but now upon the turning of the tide reſolved to ſwim with the ſtream, or was wrought upon by the promiſes of Harold, who made as if he would Marry one of his Daughters. Yet did the Clergy ſtick cloſe to the Children of Emma, and though the Nobility ſided with Harold, ſo much contended for them, that Egelnoth the Archbiſhop of Canterbury refuſed the Office of Crowning him, profeſſing that as long as any of the ſaid Children lived he would never give his Aſſent or Benediction to any other, and affirming (as ſome write) that Cnute on his Death-bed had commended them to his care and fidelity. The Enſigns of Royalty he laid upon the Altar, denouncing a Curſe againſt his Brethren the Biſhops in caſe any of them ſhould deliver them to Harold, and inhibiting him from medling with ſuch things, and by his private Authority taking them away which he had commended to God and that Holy Place. Yet for all this was he Crowned, for we cannot but believe * Ingulphus, that he beſtowed on their Monaſtery the Robe of his Coronation. That this Archbiſhop notwithſtanding all this adoe overcome either by his threats or promiſes, performed the Ceremony, though one of his Succeſſours writes, yet we dare not affirm. † Others will have him Elected King without the Royal Ornaments, but herein they are not to be credited.

Harold outing his Brother, ſets up for himſelf.

* Ipſe dedit Monaſterio noſtro Chlamydem coronationis ſuæ de ſerico aureiſque floribus intextam, quam poſtea Secretarius commutavit in cappam, &c.

† Parker in Antiq. Brit.

12. Harold having ſecured now, as he thought, his Royal Eſtate, ſo far as the People were concerned (which if Simeon tell true, he had by means of Godwin and others ſo far cajolled, that from being King of the Mercians and Northumbrians, together with the Nobility, they choſe him to Reign through all England, abjuring Hardecnute, who it was pretended, though ſent for, would not return out of Denmark) caſt in his mind, as the cuſtome is, how to entrap and obviate his Emulatours and Rivals. Emma or Algina, as ſome call her, his Stepmother, he had already deprived of the greateſt part of the treaſure which his Father had left her, ſo the leſs reaſon he had to fear her effectual tampering with any for her Sons, having nothing preſent wherewith to allure them, and it being accounted but a ſpare diet to fede merely upon hopes. But her two Sons, Alfred and Edward, hearing in Normandy how matters paſſed, could not forbear looking on, if they could not be the principal Actours in theſe Revolutions: into England they come with a ſplendid attendance of Normans, and haſte to their Mother then lying at Wincheſter. But paſſing through Kent, the Charge and Reſidence of Earl Godwin, Alfred falls into his hands, and then pretending (at leaſt) to be going to London to the King who had ſent for him, is ſtopped and put into cloſe Cuſtody: Godwin affirming it was dangerous under pretence of Kindred, to bring ſo many ſtrangers, and thoſe of a crafty Nation into the Land, of his followers, ſome he put into Chains, of ſome he put out the Eyes, of others he cut off the Hands and Feet, and many he cauſed to be ſold, ſome he tortured by pulling their Skins over their Ears, of others he cauſed the Guts to be bound about a ſtake, and then their Bodies to be turned round the ſtake till all the Entrals were drawn out, and in concluſion, by various and miſerable deaths, ſix hundred Men he murthered at Guilford; ſome write, that he onely ſpared one in ten, and after that was done, thinking that too many Normans ſtill ſurvived, he decimated them over again, and amongſt the reſt thus murthered were twelve perſons of great Nobility. Emma having notice of this Maſſacre, ſent away her Son Edward into Normandy, to be out of harms way. And well did ſhe ground her fears; for while the one Brother thus ſhifted for himſelf, the other that was entrapped by command of Earl Godwin and others, was ſent away to the Iſle of Ely, where he was ſcarcely Landed, when moſt cruelly his Eyes were pulled out of his Head, which done, he was led to the Monaſtery, and there delivered to the Monks to be ſafely kept. But he troubled them not long, preſently after his ſight ending his days, and in the Southern Porch of the Weſtern End of the Church, was decently buried.

Simeon Dunelm, ad Ann. 1636.

A Maſſacre of the Normans.

Apud Gillingeham ut ſcribit Malmesb.

Among whom Alfred is kill'd by the Treachery of Harold.

13. Thus cruelly was poor Alfred dealt with, but ſtill greater was the cruelty, if it was procured and uſhered in by the treachery and forgery of Harold, who as the Encomium of Emma (the Authour whereof ſeems to have lived about thoſe times) gives us the Relation, on purpoſe to get thoſe young Princes into his Hands, counterfeited a Letter as written by their Mother. “Herein perſonating her, ſhe chides them gently for their delay in looking after their own concernments, ſeeing they could not but know, that it procured the dayly confirming of the Uſurper in his Power, who omitted no Arts whatſoever to gain the chief Nobility to his Party. He aſſures them yet that the Engliſh Nation had much rather that one of them ſhould be their King, and in concluſion, deſires they would come as ſpeedily and privately as they could to conſult with her what courſe was to be taken. The Letter was conveyed by a ſuborned Meſſenger, who by preſents ſent as from their Mother, and by his inſinuations plaid his part ſo well, that the truth of the Meſſage was not doubted of. Now ſome Hiſtorians ſay, that the better to conceal themſelves, they came into England ſeveral ways. Others ſay, that Alfred onely Arrived, and that Edward with forty Sail of well manned Ships came to Southampton, where he found the Coaſt guarded with Souldiers to prevent his Landing. He adventured to fight, and that with good ſucceſs, but finding himſelf too ſlenderly provided to march up into the Countrey, and Conquer the Kingdom, with much Booty he Sailed back into Normandy. Indeed, conſidering that Alfred onely was taken, theſe Relations ſeem nearer to truth, and that Alfred with a few Ships, and not many Men Landing in Kent, fell into the Snares laid for him by Earl Godwin. The Children being thus diſpoſed of, the Mother he thought fit not to ſuffer here to remain, but preſently after baniſhed her the Kingdom, though Winter was begun, ſhe retired not into Normandy, becauſe, as ſome alledge, Duke William, the baſe Son of her Nephew Robert, was then brought up in the French Court, and ſome add what may be more improbable, that her Son Edward was then gone into Hungary to conſult with his Couſin Edward, Sirnamed the Outlaw, whom as we ſaid, Cnute had baniſhed thither. She went ſtreight for Flanders, where ſhe was courteouſly received by Earl Baldwin, who pitying the Caſe of a diſtreſſed Lady and Queen, aſſigned her Bruges to dwell at, and munificently provided for her all the time ſhe there ſtaid.

Walſingham. in Hypodigm. Neuſtriæ, lib. 6. c. 4.

He baniſheth Emma.

14. After two years ſhe was viſited by her Son Hardecnute out of Denmark, and they comforted themſelves as well as they could with hopes of better Fortune, that either the Hearts of the Engliſh would relent, or that the Uſurper would by ſome other means end either his days or his Reign, in which they were not much beguiled. Harold on this ſide the water, as much incouraged himſelf in his hopes ſtrengthened by preſent and actual poſſeſſion, the main point in the caſe, and reſolved to omit nothing, which now they were gone, might ſerve to keep them out. For this purpoſe he provided himſelf of a Fleet, the onely Bullwark of the Iſland, for the furniſhing of which to ſixteen ſhips every Port pay'd Eight Marks of Silver, as had been done in his Father's days, as writes Henry the Archdeacon of Huntingdon. Hereby he incenſed the minds of the Engliſh againſt him, which the Welſh it ſeems perceiving, or for ſome other reaſon, began to be ſo unruly that ſome ſtirs happened thereupon, wherein many of the Engliſh Nobility were ſlain, by name Edwin Brother to Earl Leofric, Turkil and Algeat the Sons of Eſſi, both of them great men, and many others. But theſe things could not accompliſh the hopes of the baniſhed, which was left to be done by death, Harold dying ſhortly after when he had reigned four years, and as many Months. Some ſay he died at London, ſome at Oxford; but he was to be ſure buried at Weſtminſter. Henry Knighton ſtrangely writes, that he had a Body like an Hare, he means ſurely hairy like that Creature, and thence was called Harefoot, which ſirname others derive from his ſwiftneſs of foot. Brompton the Abbat of Jornal gives him this Character, that in all regards he degenerated from the worth of his Father Canute (but others ſuſpected him not to have been his Son) for he was altogether careleſs both as to matters of War and Peace, onely he would purſue his own Will, and what was misbeſeeming his Royal Eſtate, choſe rather to goe on foot than ride, whence for the lightneſs and ſwiftneſs of his Feet he was called Harold Harefoot. He being dead, the Nobility with which now the Londoners joined, ſent meſſengers to Hardecnute ſtill at Bruges, with his Mother, intreating him to come, and receive the Crown as his Right. Hereupon he haſted into Denmark, there to ſettle his matters, which done with ſixty ſhips, and many Soldiers he came over in Auguſt, and landing at Sandwich was chearfully received, and both by Engliſh and Danes admitted as King.

Harold dies.

Iſte Haroldus habuit Corpus ad modum leporis, & ideo dicebatur Harefot. De eventibus Angliæ lib. 1. *c.*6. Et contra ſuam Regiam Celſitudinem pede libentiùs incedebat quam Equo equitabat, indè propter levitatem pedum & curſus Haraldus Harefot, communiter extitit appellatus.

Hardecnute ſucceeds.

15. Hardecnute began his Reign over England, in the ſixth year of Michael the Fourth, the Paphlagonian Emperour of Conſtantinople, the ſecond of Henry ſirnamed the Black, Emperour of Germany, in the Reign of Henry King of the Franks, A.D. 1040. Having obtained the Kingdom he did little worthy of his condition, or the place he bare, but made them advantages onely to gratify his exorbitant Paſſions. The firſt thing was to be revenged on Harold, for the Injuries offered to himſelf and his mother, whoſe Body he cauſed to be digged up by Alfric Archbiſhop of York, Earl Godwin and others, the Head to be cut off, and both it and the Trunk to be caſt firſt into a Ditch or Privy, and then into the Thames, where being caught in a Fiſhermans Net, it was by ſome of his Relations conveyed to land and buried in a burying place of the Danes, which conſtant Tradition affirms to be this Church and Church-yard of St. Clement without Temple-Bar, in which Pariſh we reſide at the writing hereof. Following on this Courſe of Revenge (which ſome ſtyle piety to his Kindred) he deſervedly deprived Living Biſhop of Worceſter, who had an hand in the Murther of his Brother Alfred, but then again within a year, was bought off with money and reſtored him. Godwin that cunning Earl was glad to buy his Peace with a Gally excellently rigged, having a guilded Stemm, furniſhed with all all conveniencies both for War and Pleaſure, and manned with Eighty choice Souldiers, every of which had upon each Arm a Golden Bracelet weighing ſixteen Ounces, with Helmet and Corſlet gilt as was the Hilt of the Sword with which he was girt, a Daniſh Scimiter adorned with Silver and Gold hung on his left Shoulder, in his left hand he held a ſhield, the Boſs and Nails of which were alſo gilded, and in his right a Lance, which in the Language of the Engliſh was called A Tegar. But this would not ſerve his turn except he alſo took an Oath, that Prince Alfred had not his Eyes put out by his advice or deſire, but therein he merely obeyed Harold, at that time his Lord and Maſter, together with moſt of the Nobility of the Land.

Who puniſheth the Murtherers of his Brother Alfred.

Alfruum Eboracenſem Archiep. Godwinum Comitem, Styr majorem Domus, Edricum diſpenſatorem, Troubd ſuum carnificem & alios magnæ dignitatis viros Londoniam miſit & ipſius Haroldi corpus effodere & in gronam projicere juſſit, &c. Sim. Dunelm. ad An. MXL.

Lays a great Tax upon the Countrey.

16. At the ſame time he thus animadverted upon ſuch as had been cruel to his Relations, he incurred the high diſpleaſure of the People by a Tax he laid upon them, for the payment of eight Marks to every Rower in his Navy, and twelve to every Officer, a burthen that ſcarcely any could bear, which cauſed

Sect. 11.

Suos huſcarlas miſit per omnes Regni ſui Provincias ad exigendum quod indixerat tributum. Sim. ad Ann. 1041.

Waſtes Worceſterſhier.

But is kind to Edward and Gunhilda his Siſter.

Then dies at a Feaſt.

theſe who had procured his Advancement ſorely to repent them. However he exacted the Tax with all rigour, imploying his Houſe Carles as they were called, or his Houſhold Servants, in gathering the Subſidy throughout the Land, whereof the Worceſterſhire Men ſlew two called Feader and Turſtan, having fled into a Tower belonging to a Monaſtery of that City. Hardecnute exceedingly incenſed at their death, ſent to revenge it Leofric Duke of the Mercians, Godwin of the Weſt Saxons, Siward of the Northumbrians, and others with great Forces, and orders to kill all the men, to plunder and burn the City and waſte the Countrey round about. On the Evening preceding the thirteenth of November they began their injoyned work, and continued waſting and ſpoiling both City and Countrey for four days together. But few of the Inhabitants themſelves they could lay hands on, the Countreymen ſhifting for themſelves every way as they could, and the Citizens betaking themſelves to a little Iſland in the Severn called Beverege, which they fortified, and ſtoutly ſtood upon their Guard till their Oppoſers tired out made Peace with them, and ſuffered them to return home in Peace, which yet was not done till on the fifth day the City being burnt, the Army retreated loaded with Plunder. After this Act of ſeverity, Hardecnute (as if he had ſpent his Gall and evacuated his ill humours) began to be good natur'd. For ſhortly after he gave kind entertainment to Edward his Brother, the Son of Ethelred and Emma, who now returned after a tedious exile in Normandy. To his farther commendation he took good care of his Siſter Gunhilda or Gunildis preferring her to be the Wife of Henry the German Emperour. She was a Lady of admirable beauty, and in her Father's time had in vain been courted by ſeveral Lovers. Her Brother ſet her forth with all the pomp imaginable, the Nobility both accompanying her to the Ship, and contributing to the Expences as much as every one could bear, beſides what the King's Exchequer could furniſh. But Covetouſneſs was not his crime in extravagant Expences, eſpecially in Feaſting he much delighted. Four Meals a day he allowed in his Court, which Huntingdon attributes to his bounty, rather, he ſaith, deſiring that Meat ſhould be taken away untouched from ſuch as were invited, than that ſuch as were not invited ſhould complain for want of Victuals; whereas the cuſtome of our time is, either out of Covetouſneſs, or (as they pretend) becauſe they cannot eat, for great men to allow their Followers but one Meal a day. As Hardecnute lived ſo he died in his beloved trade of feaſting, at Lambeth at a Wedding, which with great pomp and Luxury was ſolemnized betwixt Tovy ſirnamed Prudan, a Daniſh Nobleman, and Githa the Daughter of Oſgod Clapa a great Lord alſo of that Nation. As he was very jolly and merry, Carouſing it with the Bride and ſome of the Company, he fell down ſpeechleſs, and died on the eighth of June in the flower of his Age, when he had reigned but two years.

The Danes domineer over the Engliſh.

Chronic. Joh. Brompton. c. 934.

Editionis Beeianæ colum. 2326.

17. Such was the end of this diſſolute young man by that Vice which was but too familiar to the Daniſh Nation, to the cruelty of which before they got poſſeſſion of the Land, when they were once ſecure and at their eaſe, Gormandizing and Drunkenneſs ſucceeded. But as he exceeded all of them in this kind, ſo though he was born in England, and upon that Account might have been addicted to the Inhabitants and Cuſtoms of this Countrey, yet out of Sympathy with their humour did he bear moſt affection to them; nay, ſuffered them moſt inſolently to domineer over the Engliſh. " In caſe a Dane met an Engliſh man " upon a Bridge, the Engliſh man durſt not ſtir a foot till the Dane was paſ" ſed over. If an Engliſh man when a Dane paſſed by did not bow the Head in " an humble manner, his head ſhould be broken, or for his Clowniſhneſs he " ſhould be ſoundly Baſtinado'd. If Henry de Knyghton the Canon of Leiceſter may be credited, this Hardecnute ſo far increaſed this Inſolence, that upon every Engliſh Family he impoſed a Dane as their Lord and Governour, whence ſome have believed that the word Lordane came, which ſignifies a Lubberly Idle Fellow. Theſe Danes received into their Houſes, raviſhed their Wives, deflou red their Daughters and their Maids without controll; and many other Villanies they committed to put Affronts and diſgrace upon the Engliſh Nation. The ſame Crimes, viz. Luxury and Effeminateneſs, of which the Engliſh formerly were guilty, and which procured their Rule and Domination over them, were now come to an height in the Danes, and as in all great changes of Kingdoms and States procured their Ruine here, and made way for another Revolution. Not that the Engliſh were grown vertuous and good, for they were ſtill ſick of ſuch Diſtempers, as within a few years procured the utter deſtruction of their Empire, as we ſhall ſee hereafter; but Deſpair and Neceſſity are powerfull Motives, ſuch as will make even the Lame man to find his Legs, and the Coward to grow valiant. Not able to bear the continual Indignities and burthen put upon them, they took this opportunity to ſhake off the yoak, reaſſumed ſome Courage and gathered together (ſaith mine Authour) a great Army, which was called Howneher, from one Howne who firſt gave the Advice and was their Captain in the Enterprize. Many Danes they ſlew, and the reſt they baniſhed out of England, (that is, ſuch as they had moſt cauſe to be angry with, for that Multitudes had imbodied themſelves with the Engliſh Nation and ſtill continued, eſpecially in the Eaſtern and Northern parts is evident enough) whither they never afterwards returned, when they had here tyrannized by times for above two hundred and fifty years, and of theſe been poſſeſſed of the Supreme Power or Royalty, twenty ſix.

But at length were moſt of them baniſhed.

SECT. XII.

The Monarchy of the Engliſh Saxons reſtored in Britain. From the Promotion of Edward the Son of Ethelred, (afterward ſirnamed the Confeſſour) to the Death of Harold the laſt King of the Engliſh Race, the final Period of the Engliſh Saxon Empire, and the Conqueſt of Fngland by Duke William the Norman.

The ſpace of Two and twenty Years, Six Months, and odd Days.

Sect. 12.

1. THe Engliſh being rid of the Danes, reſolved to have no King but of their own Native Race, and having ſo good an opportunity to diſcharge their Reſolution, by reaſon that Hardicnute died Childleſs, agreed to pitch upon one of the Poſterity of their late King Ethelred. The generality of Hiſtorians concur as to Edward his Son by Emma, that their eyes were fixed upon him, yet Henry of Huntingdon tells a Story of Alfred his Brother, as if he were ſtill alive in Normandy, and was now ſent for by the Nobility, whom the concurrent Teſtimony of others affirms to have been before this blinded and impriſoned in the Iſle of Ely. Moſt of our Writers will have Edward preferred by the means and procurement of Earl Godwin eſpecially, yet ſome others tell a Tale, that Godwin for fear of life, as Conſcious of what he was guilty of in reference to the Relations of Edward was fled into Denmark and returned not till he was owned as King, and held a Parliament in the City of London, by Mediation whereof he obtained pardon. But in this caſe we have beſt reaſon to truſt to the * Teſtimony of Ingulphus, who himſelf lived in this Edward's days, and writes expreſly that his Promotion happened by the Advice and Perſwaſion of Earl Godwin. † William of Malmesbury after him, the Authour of moſt credit, gives us the Relation in this manner. Hardicnute being dead, Edward was at a great loſs in himſelf, not knowing what way to turn him, or what courſe to take, but at laſt reſolved to caſt himſelf opon the Counſel and Fidelity of Earl Godwin, who being ſent to for a friendly Conference for ſome time fluctuated in his thoughts whether he ſhould own him or not, but at length was content to ſpeak with him. " Edward getting Acceſs, was about to fall at his feet, which when he would not ſuffer,
" he told him the ſad Story of his Brother Hardicnute's death, and with great
" Promiſes craves his aſſiſtence for his ſafe return into Normandy. Godwin gives " him

Edward made King by the aſſiſtance of Earl Godwin.

Vide Chronicon Joh. Bromton.

* Poſt ejus obitum omnium Electione in Edwardum Concordatur, maximè cohortante Godwino comite, &c.

† De Geſtis Regum Anglorum. lib. 2. c. 13.

“ him this unexpected anſwer, that he had better live glorioully a King in England, “ than dye ignominiouſly in Exile; that the Crown did of right belong to “ him, as the Son of Ethelred and Nephew of Edgar, one who was of ripe Age, “ inured to Labour, and who had learnt by experience how to order publick Affairs with Juſtice, and had been taught by his own late afflictions how to remove and prevent the miſeries of his People. To bring this about there would be no obſtacle, for if he would but truſt him, he ſhould find that his Intereſt was very great in the Land. He told him that Fortune would be favourable to his Inclinations, which way ſoever they tended, and if he took it upon him he was ſure there would be none to contradict. On condition he would eſtabliſh a faſt Friendſhip with him and his Houſe, prefer his Sons, and marry his Daughter, he ſhould ſhortly ſee himſelf a King, who now as one Shipwrackt in his Fortunes, and a Man Baniſhed from all Expectations, implored the help of another Perſon.

2. Edward's Caſe at this time was ſuch, as not to reject ſo fair Propoſals, but agree to every thing, and comply with the ſtate and condition of the times, whatſoever he required he promiſed by Oath. Godwin was a Man fitted by Nature for managing ſuch a Buſineſs, having a very ſmooth and pleaſant Tongue, ſo copious and eloquent, that he could work upon the affections of the People, inſinuate whatſoever he deſired, and draw them with eaſe to any thing, which he could but deſign. He procures a Council to be ſummoned to Gillingham, (ſome Copies have it London) and there ſome he perſwades by his own Authority, ſome by promiſes, and others inclined before to favour Edward's Cauſe, he fully brings over to his Party, the reſt that made oppoſition, were overpowered at preſent, diſgraced, and afterward hurried out of the Land. On Eaſter day, which this year fell on the third of April, he was Crowned at Wincheſter by the two Archbiſhops, Edſi of Canterbury, and Alfric of York, aſſiſted with other Prelates, of whom, Living Biſhop of Worceſter, contributed very much to the bringing about this deſign. Thus was the Empire of the Engliſh reſtored to the Engliſh Royal Bloud, and the People ſo unexpectedly delivered from the Daniſh Tiranny, were exceedingly ſatisfied, yet ſtill making a way for another Revolution, which they little imagined to be ſo near. Betwixt the Death of Hardicnute and the Coronation of Edward, intervened about ten Months, the one happening in June, and the other in April following, ſo that this alteration required ſome conſiderable time, and probably found as conſiderable oppoſition, notwithſtanding the great power of Earl Godwin. This Promotion of Edward, if we reckon no Interregnum, and begin his Reign where Hardicnute's ended, fell out in the firſt year of Conſtantinus Monomaclius, Emperour of Conſtantinople, the fourth of Henrigus Niger the German Emperour, in the year of our Lord, MXLII. But if we reckon from his Coronation, his beginning is to be fetcht from the year next following.

Who is Crowned at Wincheſter.

3. Edward the creature of Godwin, after his Advancement, conformed himſelf wholly to his Dictates and Advice. The firſt thing he did, was to ſeize on the Treaſure of his Mother Emma, then at Wincheſter. The Cauſe pretended was, that ſhe had been harſh to him in the time of his baniſhment and neceſſities; and indeed, ſhe is thought to have born no great affection, either to Ethelred or his Children; but Godwin however ſeems to have been the Inſtiller of this Indignation into the King's mind, bearing her malice for concerning her ſelf about the cruelty exerciſed toward her Son Alfred. Simeon writes expreſly, that Edward did it by advice of Leofric, Godwin and Giward, who accompanied him from Glawom or Gloceſter to Wincheſter, where coming on her at unawares, he took away from her whatſoever Gold, Silver or Jewels ſhe had then about her; to which Relation, Matthew of Weſtminſter adds, that he yet commanded that ſhe ſhould be ſupplied with Neceſſaries, and be free from all farther diſturbance, which how far it was obſerved, we ſhall ſee anon. But whatever his Actions were towards his Mother, Godwin would take care he ſhould deal fairly with him, in the marriage of his Daughter Editha or Egitha, which about this time he procured to be Solemnized. The Lady indeed for her perfections, both inward and outward, deſerved a Crown, ſo that this was not the particular wherein this Earl impoſed on him. Herein we may give credit to Ingulphus the Abbot, who knew her very well, and teſtifies that ſhe was moſt beautifull, moſt chaſte and vertuous, eſpecially humble, and very well ſeen in humane Learning, favouring nothing of the rudeneſs either of her Father, or Brothers, but mild, modeſt, faithfull and honeſt, never doing any ill Offices, ſo that it became a Proverb, that as a Thorn pro- duces

He ſeizes on his Mothers Treaſure.

And marries Godwin's Daughter.

Sect. 12.

Sicut ſpina roſam. genuit Godwinus Egitham.

duces a Roſe, ſo Godwin begat Egitha. When he was a School-boy, and came to ſee his Father, then living at Court he ſaith he met her very often, and ſhe would often oppoſe him of his Leſſon, both in Grammar and Logick, wherein ſhe was very expert, and when by her ſubtile arguing ſhe had non-pluſ'd him, ſhe would order her Maid to give him money, and not diſmiſs him till he had alſo filled his Belly with good chear, thus ſhe obliged him: but though ſhe did this to him when a Boy he wrote not the ſtory till he was Abbat and an Aged Man.

He baniſhes many of the Daniſh Nobility.

Simeon ad An. 1044. Alii.

4. Edward thus ſetled in the Throne, yet thought not himſelf ſecure as long as any eminent Perſons of the Daniſh Bloud continued in the Land. He baniſhed Gunhilda, the Daughter of Wortgern (King of the Vandals ſay ſome) and the Siſter of King Cnute, married firſt to Hacun, and then to Harold both Earls, but now a Widow, and with her her two Sons Hemmung and Turkill were alſo ſent away. They firſt went to Bruges in Flanders, and thence afterward proceeded into Denmark. But while he thus as he thought prevented ſtorms at home, a Tempeſt had like to have fallen upon him from the North, where Magnus King of Norway, the Son of Holy King Olane to revenge, it ſeems, the Injury done here to his Father in the Days of Cnute, prepared to invade England. Edward to ſecure himſelf provided a ſtrong Fleet which lay expecting Magnus in Sandwich Rode, but Swane King of Denmark, though he had no reaſon to befriend the Engliſh who had ſo lately expelled his Countreymen, yet to hinder the growth of his next Neighbour, diverted him by making an Inrode into his Kingdom. This procured ſuch feuds betwixt theſe two Northern Kings, that Magnus in revenge the year following entred Denmark, whence he quite expelled King Swane, and made himſelf Lord of the Countrey. Now Swane ſent his Ambaſſadours to King Edward, hoping he would return ſuch a kindneſs as he had received from him when he was in danger. Godwin was for ſupplying him with a Fleet of fifty Veſſels both to requite Swane, and to give a check to the Succeſs and Ambition of Magnus, and the thing had heen done but for the oppoſition of Earl Leofric and others, who thought it ſafer the King ſhould ſit ſtill and be a looker on than perhaps diſoblige the Conquerour, and bring danger upon himſelf. And whereas Swane had formerly indeed by the Inrode he made into Denmark, done that which tended much to the repoſe of England, yet ſeeing he took his meaſures from his own Intereſt not that of Edward, he could not take it amiſs, that Edward alſo ſhould ſteer his courſe by the ſame compaſs.

Simeon ad An. 1045.

5. And their Counſel had this effect, that as Magnus during his Life (all which he enjoyed the Kingdom of Denmark) offered no more to attempt any thing upon England, ſo Harold Harvager his Uncle and Succeſſour, aſſoon as he came to the Crown ſent Ambaſſadours to Edward, and made a League and Alliance with him. Thus above ground there was nothing but quiet and ſerenity, when within the Earth happened on Mayday being Sunday a great motion and concuſſion, at Worceſter, Derby and many other places. A great mortality of Men, and a Murrain amongſt Cattel followed, and Fires in the Air, or thoſe Meteors which being kindled are called Ignes fatui, in Derbyſhire and other Countries burnt many Villages and much Standing-corn. But while Edward was free from Wars at Home, he was ingaged by the Emperour Henry the following year againſt Baldwin the Earl of Flanders, with whom he had a quarrel about a Palace of his Countrey, which the Earl had fired. Pope Leo and Swane the King of the Danes he had to aſſiſt him by Land, and leſt Baldwin ſhould eſcape by Sea he procured the King of England to ſecure the Coaſts, which he did, lying ſo long with his Fleet before the Port of Sandwich, till he had an intelligence that an Agreement was made betwixt them. In the mean time Swane the Son of Earl Godwin, and whom ſome make Earl of Berkſhire, Oxfordſhire and Gloceſterſhire, having formerly been baniſhed, or at leaſt left the Land, for having defloured Edgida the Abbeſs of Cheſter whom he would have married, came back from Denmark with eight ſhips, pretending a great deſire to be reconciled to the King. Beorn an Earl, and his Couſin German the Son of Vlf a Dane undertook to make his Peace. The War being at an end betwixt the Emperour and Earl Baldwin, this Beorn and Godwin who commanded the Fleet with forty two ſhips, by the King's leave were removed to Pevenſey, the reſt of the Navy, except what the King kept with him, being diſmiſſed. To Pevenſey Swane comes and ſolicits his Couſin Beorn, according to his promiſe, to carry him to the King, then lying at Sandwich and obtain his pardon; Beorn miſtruſting nothing becauſe of their Conſanguinity readily went with him attended onely by three Servants, but he having brought him to Boſenham where his ſhips lay at Anchour, and having carried him aboard cauſed him firſt to be bound faſt, and keeping him till he came to Dertmouth, there he murthered him, which done he caſt his Body into a deep Ditch, and covered it with abundance of Earth. Six of Swane's ſhips the Inhabitants of Haſtings took, and killing all the Men they found aboard them, carried them to Sandwich to the King. With the other two he fled into Flanders, where he continued till ſuch time as Aldred Biſhop of Worceſter brought him back and reconciled him, for all this, to the gentle King.

Engages with Henry the Emperour againſt Baldwin Earl of Flanders.

Simeon ad An. 1049. Florent. Wigton.

The Sea-coaſt is infeſted by Pirates.

6. Crimes of this nature were at this time but too common and too little puniſhed, ſuch was the wickedneſs of the Engliſh Nation which now fell again into ſecurity, though the late dreadfull Rod was but juſt removed from their backs. Nay it was at this very time again as it were ſhaken over them. For Oſgod Clapa being it ſeems baniſhed with his Wife as well as other Danes, had got together nine and twenty ſhips, with ſix of which taking his Wife from Bruges he ſailed into Denmark, the reſt went to the Coaſts of Eſſex, where doing very much harm in their return they were ſeized with a mighty Tempeſt, and loſt but two, which being driven into foreign parts were ſeized, and the men put to the Sword. But not onely were they put in mind hereby of the Daniſh Cruelties more lately practiſed, but by ſomething then happened on the other ſide of the Iſland of the old Devaſtations made upon theſe parts by the Iriſh Scots, but here was the difference, that whereas formerly the Britains were ſufferers, now they were become Actours with them. For, as Florent of Worceſter writes, this ſame year in the Month of Auguſt, certain Pirates from Ireland with thirty ſix ſhips entring the Mouth of the River Severn, landed at a place called Wileſceaxen, where joyning with Griffin King of Southwales, they foraged the Countrey and did ſome miſchief. Then he at the head of them paſſed the River Weage, they burnt Dunedham, and ſlew all the People they could find, the Alarm being now taken by the adjoyning Parts, Aldred Biſhop of Worceſter with ſome Gloceſter and Herefordſhire men haſted againſt them, but certain Welſh men that they had with them ſent privately to Griffin, and gave him notice when he might moſt conveniently fall upon the Engliſh, and he taking the opportunity together with the Iriſh Pirates fell accordingly upon them early in the Morning and killed many, the reſt making their eſcape. The next year that followed but one, King Edward to comfort and relieve his People, ſorely vexed with a Famine of which many thouſands died, took off the Tax of Eighty thouſand Pound, formerly impoſed by his Father, and called Danegeld, which had lain heavy on them for eight and thirty years. But as this effect of his good nature to them, tended much to their eaſe and convenience, ſo other Acts of his kindneſs to Strangers this very year, proved of ill conſequence unto the whole Nation.

The Tax of Danegeld remitted by him.

Ingulphus.

He is kind to Strangers.

Vide Malmesb. ubi ſuprà cap. 13. Simeon. Dunelm. ad Ann. MLI.

7. Euſtace Earl of Boloign Father to Godfrey and Baldwin who were afterward Kings of Jeruſalem, and King Edward's Brother-in-Law by a Marriage with his Siſter Goda, from Whitſand ſailed over to Dover, and having had conference with the King about ſome affair of conſequence, and returning back in the month of September, one of his Harbingers at Canterbury was ſo rude with a Townſman in ſeeking for Lodgings, that he provoked him to kill him in heat of Anger. Euſtace inraged hereat with all his Company, haſted to revenge his Servants death, and killed him that had ſlain him with other eighteen of his Company; but thereupon the Citizens riſing fell upon him and his men, whereof one and twenty they ſlew, and wounded many others, he himſelf hardly eſcaping with one Follower from the Tumult. To Court he poſts with great Clamour, and aſſiſted by ſome of his own Party, greatly incenſes the King againſt thoſe of Canterbury. Earl Godwin is ſent for and commanded with all ſpeed to march with an Army and puniſh the Offenders. He on the contrary affirms, that no man is to be condemned before he be heard, and frets that the King ſhould favour all Strangers more than his own Subjects, for many of them he had preferred to great places, and truſt in the Engliſh Church and State; one Robert a Norwan lately Biſhop of London he had made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and another of that Countrey called William, he had promoted to the See of London, which thing exaſperated the Engliſh againſt the Normans. Being backed by ſome others that loved their Countrey, he urged that the chief Actours in the late diſorders were firſt to be ſent for and fairly tried; in caſe they were found innocent to be diſmiſſed, but if culpable to be fined, or undergoe ſome corporal Puniſhment for the breach of the King's Peace, and the Violence and Affront they had offered to the Earl. He farther put him in mind, that it was his part to protect his People, and not condemn them without due proceſs. In concluſion, the thing he refuſed to doe, not eſteeming the King's Anger which he thought would be but a fit; but Edward diſpleaſed with his refuſal, and farther egged on to revenge called an Aſſembly of all the Nobility at Gloceſter, that the matter might be therein debated. All the Nobility was preſent or few excepted, onely Godwin and his Sons appeared not, ſuſpecting that the Nobility were too much of the King's humour, but Armed themſelves, Godwin raiſing Forces out of his Earldom, containing (as Simeon writes) Kent, Southſex and Weſtſex; his Eldeſt Son Swane out of his, which compriſed Oxfordſhire, Gloceſterſhire, Herefordſhire, Somerſetſhire and Berkſhire; and Harold his Youngeſt Son out of his County, wherein Eſſex, Eaſt England, the Shires of Huntingdon and Cambridge were included.

Godwin and his Sons take up Arms.

Quocirca totius Regni proceres juſſi Gloceſtriam convenire.

Haroldus de ſuo comitatu, viz. de Eaſt Saxonia Eaſt Anglia Huntindunenſi & Grantabrigienſi provinciis, &c.

8. They took up their Quarters at Beverſtan, and gave out that they Armed againſt the Welſh who deſigning miſchief againſt the King had fortified a place in Herefordſhire, where Swane the Son of Godwin then lay Incamped under that pretence. But the Welſh having ſome notice of the Device prevented it by clearing themſelves at Court, where Godwin and his Sons were rendred ſo odious, that the King's Army was expected to March againſt them. And Edward had ſent to Leofric Earl of Mercia, and Syward of Northumberland to come and ſuccour him in his extremity with all the Power they could raiſe. They at firſt came but with a few; but ſending afterwards throughout their ſeveral Commands, got together in a little time great Forces, with which Rodulph the King's Nephew by his Siſter Goda, and her former Husband Walter de Maunt joyned himſelf though with ſmall expectation, for being Earl of Hereford but a very Coward, he had turned (as we ſhall ſee) his back of the Welſh Men, and left his County with the City and the Biſhop in it to their Sword and Fire, and they had done greater miſchief if Harold had not by his induſtry and valour timely prevented it. Godwin and his Sons in the mean time proceed into Gloceſterſhire, and Incamped themſelves at a place then called Langtreo, whence they ſend to the King then lying at Gloceſter, and demand Earl Euſtace and his Company, together with ſuch Normans and Bulloignois as held the Caſtle at Canterbury to be given up into their hands, upon refuſal denouncing War. The King was very much diſcompoſed at the Meſſage, not knowing what courſe to take; but when he underſtood that the Forces of Leofric, Syward and Rodulph were on their March, he flatly refuſed to give them up, and with that Anſwer ſent back the Meſſenger. They were ſcarce gone when the Armies came to Gloceſter ſo inraged that the King had much adoe to keep them from going out immediately to engage Godwin. Now Leofric and others of the wiſer ſort ſeriouſly conſidering the ſad conſequences of a Civil War perſwaded the King to come to a Treaty, of which there was the more hopes becauſe Godwin had given order to his Sons not to fall on firſt, but defend themſelves in caſe they were attacked by the King's Forces. They brought the Parties to this Accord, that Hoſtages ſhould be given on both ſides, and the whole matter referred to a farther Debate to be held at London.

9. The King hereupon encreaſes his Army by Leavies in Mercia and Northumberland, and up to London he comes; Godwin alſo having done the like in Weſtſex comes up to Southwark. “Here his Son Swane to appeaſe the King's anger is commanded to be gone, Godwin and Harold to appear before the Council unarmed and accompanied onely with twelve Attendants, and to give up all their Forces into the Hands of the King. They pleaded they could not give up themſelves into the Hands of their Adverſaries without ſufficient caution and ſecurity, otherwiſe they were ready to ſurrender their Forces, and doe all things elſe the King Commanded which were conſiſtent with their Honour and Safety; but to come unarmed was to hazard their Lives, and but with twelve Followers their Reputation. The King by this Anſwer was farther exaſperated, and thereupon an Edict was publiſhed by conſent of the Council and Army that they ſhould quit the Land in five days. His Souldiers it ſeems fearing the Iſſue began to drop away from him and his numbers to leſſen, as concluding it was ſafeſt to give way to the times, he departed with his Wife Gytha, and his three Sons Swane, Gyrth and Toſti into Flanders to Earl Baldwin, whoſe Daughter Judith his Son Toſti had Married; with as much Treaſure as the Ship could carry. Harold and Leofwin his other Sons went to Briſtol, where taking a Ship that their Brother Swane had provided for himſelf they ſailed into Ireland. Harold's Earldom was conferred on Elgar the Son of Leofric an Induſtrious Man, who as willingly afterward ſurrendred it to him again as now he received it.

Rex in ſuo concilio & omnis exercitus unanimi conſenſu illum & quinque filios ejus exules fore decreverunt. Simeon ibid.

Who at length depart for Flanders.

And

Sect. 12.

And the King ſtill purſuing his Indignation deprived Edgytha his Wife of all her Jewels and Treaſure, and putting her away ſent her with one onely attendant to Wakewell or Warewell to be there kept in cuſtody by the Abbeſs his Siſter. The Enemy thus gone, William the Earl (as they call him) or Duke of Normandy with many of his Normans comes over into England, where he and his are liberally Feaſted, all other ways nobly entertained, being after ſome time as richly preſented they return home, after they had been moſt imprudently led up and down to Caſtles and Forts, and ſhewed the whole ſtrength of the Nation and what elſe, after ſome little time was to be their own. Although, as the Abbat Ingulphus writes, there was no hope as yet of Succeſſion in the Kingdom, at leaſt no mention made of it betwixt the King and the Duke.

William Duke of Normandy viſits Edward.

Emma the King's Mother Dies.

10. The year following * Emma the King's Mother Died, and was Buried at Wincheſter; we have ſaid before how ill ſhe was treated by her Son, who under pretence of her harſhneſs to him in his Adverſity took away from her all her Treaſure. She had ſeveral Enemies which incenſed him againſt her, but eſpecially Robert the Norman whom he had firſt made Biſhop of London, and then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who accuſed her of being too familiar with Alwin Biſhop of Wincheſter: Hereupon ſhe was ſent to the Abby of Werewell having firſt all ſhe had taken from her; and the Biſhop was committed to Priſon, Robert crying out that ſuch villany was not to go unpuniſhed, leſt it ſhould be an encouragement to others to doe the like. She being kept not very ſtrictly wrote to all the Biſhops of England whom ſhe knew to be her Friends, profeſſing that ſhe was more troubled at the diſgrace offered to the Biſhop than at her own infamy, and that ſhe was ready to clear his innocency by paſſing, after the manner of Ordeale, over red hot Iron. The Biſhops hereupon met, and had eaſily brought the King to put up the buſineſs but that Robert oppoſed them. He demanded of his Brethren how they durſt take upon them to defend that Wild Beaſt and not a Woman which had defamed the King her Son, and that had called her unconſtant Lover, The Anointed of the Lord. "But loe (ſaid he) this Woman will "purge the Biſhop, but who ſhall purge her that conſented to the Death of her "Son Alfred, and prepared Poyſon for his Brother Edward? But be it ſo that "ſhe may prevail above the condition of her Sex, If ſo be ſhe will paſs bare-"foot over nine red hot Plowſhares, four ſtedy paces for her ſelf, and five for the "Biſhop, let her paſs for Innocent. The day for Tryal is appointed, which come, the King and all the Biſhops, Robert excepted, are preſent: ſhe having the night before earneſtly invoked the Aſſiſtence of St. Swithin at his Tomb, when the time came, paſſed unhurt over the Plowſhares to the great joy of her ſelf and all the Beholders, as alſo of the King that ſhe had ſo purged herſelf, though to his great ſorrow that he had been ſo credulous as to admit thoſe Calumnies againſt his own Mother, whoſe pardon he begged, as alſo that of the Biſhop, and received Penance from them on his bare Back, as ſome interpret it. But Emma for ſo great a deliverance gave to St. Swithin nine Manors, and as many gave the Biſhop, the Innocence of them both being hereby cleared: moreover the King is ſaid to have beſtowed on the Church of Wincheſter the Iſle of Portland and other Poſſeſſions. The ſubſtance of this Story is delivered both by John Bromton and Henry de Knighton, and Harpsfield hath enlarged it with ſome circumſtances. But Ancienter Authours, as Malmesbury and others, ſay nothing of it; and that which follows ſpoils all, viz. that Robert (whom ſome will have Biſhop, and others Archbiſhop, at this time) fled out of the Land, whereas he continued in the Kingdom longer, as we ſhall ſee, and fled out of England upon another occaſion.

The manner of Tryal by Ordeale.

Wakewella Malmesb. at Warewella Simeoni. Quem Rex honorificè ſuſcipiens, & aliquandiu ſolum retinens ad civitates & Caſtella regia circumduxit, & condignam humanitatem exhibens, tandem multis donatum muneribus ad propria dimiſit. De ſucceſſione autem Regni ſpes adhuc aut mentio nulla facta inter eos fuit.

 Simeoni Elgiva Emma. In charta inter Evidentias Eccleſiæ Chriſti Cantuar. legitur. Elfgyna Ymma & Elnena Ymma. Emma autem ſuis, Saxonibus vel Danis Elfgiva.*

Godwin and his Sons returning.

11. This ſame year wherein Emma Died, Griffin the Welſh King made an Inrode into Herefordſhire, and waſted a great part of the Countrey, againſt whom the Inhabitants aroſe, and the Normans that held the Caſtle of Hereford iſſued out and gave him Battel, but were defeated, and he returned home with great Booty. Not long after Harold and Leofwin the Sons of Earl Godwin returning out of Ireland paſſed with many Veſſels up the River Severn, and landing in the Counties of Somerſet and Dorſet there they ſpoiled many Villages, and when out of Devonſhire and Somerſet many went out againſt them they routed them, and having ſlain thirty principal Officers, beſides many of the ordinary ſort, returned with much Booty to their Ships. King Edward alarmed with the noiſe, and expecting Earl Godwin was not far off, diſpatched away forty Ships very well furniſhed into Sandwich Road to prevent his landing, but for all that he made a ſhift to come aſhore undiſcovered in Kent, whence he ſent Meſſengers round about, and drew into his Party firſt the Inhabitants of Canterbury who owned him as a Sufferer for their ſakes, then thoſe of Suſſex, Eſſex, Surry, all the Mariners or Boat-men (Buthſecarlas Simeon calls them) of Haſtings, and others of theſe Maritime Parts, who promiſed to live and dye with him. The Fleet having notice of his landing ſome were ſent to purſue him, but he ſtill concealed himſelf; they returned to Sandwich, whence they ſhortly after came up to London. Godwin then went to the Iſle of Wight, and coaſted about till he met with his Sons Harold and Leofwin who joyned their Ships with his, which done they yet forbore all Hoſtilities, onely made bold with Victuals and other neceſſaries. On the Coaſts and elſewhere by fair means they drew as many Men to them as they could, eſpecially Seamen, and ſo made for Sandwich Road, where no ſooner they were arrived but the News thereof flew to London, and ſo ſtartled them at Court, that command went out from the King to all his loving Subjects to haſte and help him in a time of ſo great neceſſity.

12. Yet they delayed ſo long that Godwin had leiſure enough to paſs up the Thames as far as Southwark, where lying for a Tide he ſpent the time in conferring with the Londoners, whom he procured to doe whatſoever he deſigned. It being High Water he advanced farther, and no oppoſition being made upon the Bridge, rowed up by the Southern Bank till ſuch time as he met with his Land Army, which he formed into a Battalia terrible for thoſe on the other ſide to look on; and his Navy now he directed toward the King's Gallies, ſhipping his Men and making all things ready to follow. Edward by this time on Middleſex ſide had got together a competent Force, and all lookers on expected an Ingagement, but the Souldiers on both ſides agreed in this, that they were unwilling to fight Engliſh againſt Engliſh, which gave the wiſer ſort an opportunity of mediating a Peace, by virtue of which the two Armies were ſpeedily Diſbanded. The conditions of it were, that Godwin, his Wife and Sons were reſtored to their former honours and Eſtates, all except Swane, who as a Penance for murthering his Couſin Beorn had undertaken a Pilgrimage bare-foot and bare-leg from Flanders to Jeruſalem, and in his return Died of a Cold he had got in Lycia. The King receives Editha his Wife the Earl's Daughter to her former Dignity; Right and Juſtice is now promiſed to all Men, and ſuch Normans as had abuſed his Authority, and given him ill Council againſt his good Subjects are Baniſhed the Land. Some few, as Robert the Deacon, and Richard the Son of Scrob his Son-in-law, Alverede the King's Groom, Axfrid ſirnamed Cookeſfot, and ſome others whom the King much favoured, and who had done no ill Offices, were permitted to ſtay. But Robert the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William the Biſhop of London, and Ulf the Biſhop of Lincoln with their Followers hardly eſcaped and got over Sea. Yet afterwards William being a good natur'd Man was permitted to return. Oſbirne ſirnamed Pentecoſt, and his Fellow Hugh ſurrender'd their Caſtles, and by leave of Earl Leofric paſſing through his Government into Scotland were there entertained by King Mackbeth. This ſame year on St. Thomas's Night happened ſo great a Tempeſt, that it overturned many Churches and Houſes, and broke and tore up by the Roots an innumerable quantity of Trees.

Are reſtored to their Eſtates and Honours.

Some of the Normans Baniſhed.

A great Tempeſt.

13. The next year being the M. LIII of our Lord, Res the Brother of Griffin King of South Wales being taken Priſoner, as a Publick Enemy, for the many Inſolencies he had committed, was by command of Edward put to death in a place called Bulendum, and his Head ſent to the King then lying at Glooceſter. This miniſtred matter of diſcourſe, but as little Noiſes are ſuppreſt by the greater, this was preſently quaſhed by the Rumour and Talk about the death of Earl Godwin, which happened this ſame year at Eaſter. King Edward celebrating this Feaſt at Wincheſter, and Godwin, as his cuſtome was, ſitting at Table with him, was ſuddenly ſeized with ſo great a Diſtemper as ſtruck him ſpeechleſs, and made him ſinck down from the Seat on which he ſate. His three Sons, Harold, Toſti and Gyrth being preſent removed him into the King's Chamber, hoping it was but a Fit, and that he would ſpeedily recover, but he lay in that languiſhing condition four days and dyed on the fifth, being the fifteenth of April, and was buried in the old Monaſtery. This is the account of his death, to which the Normans, and ſuch as write in favour of them, add a Circumſtance which much ſhews either his guilt or their malice. It chanced at Table, that mention was made of Alfred the Brother of the King, who thereupon looked very ſowerly upon Godwin. He to vindicate himſelf, told Edward, that he perceived how upon every mentioning of that Prince he look'd with a frowning Countenance upon him, But (ſaith he) let not God ſuffer me to ſwallow this Morſel, if I be guilty of any thing done, either toward Simeon.

Mat. Weſtm.

Godwin Dies.

Wintoniæ ſcribit Simeon, at Huntindonenſis ait Edwardum nunc prandiſſe apud Windlas (nunc Windſor) ubi plurimum manere ſolebat. Ad. An. Edwardi. 12.

toward the taking away of his life, or againſt thine Intereſt. After which words ſtreight choakt with the Bit he had ſwallowed, he ſunk immediately down, and never recovered. A man of an active and turbulent Spirit, not tender Conſcienced in getting or keeping, and not to be excuſed for his ſo much medling and forcing his Sovereign to what he liſted. But had he not been ſo great a lover of his Countrey and an enemy to Stranger, thoſe that wrote in the Norman times, and durſt not but write what would pleaſe their Maſters,would have diſmiſſed him without this Story, and with a fairer Character than uſually they give him. His firſt Wife was the Siſter of Canute, which brought him a Son, who in his Infancy mounting an Horſe given him by his Grandfather, was carried into the Thames and there drowned. The Mother was killed by Thunder, a Judgment which it was believed fell upon her for her Cruelty, for ſhe made a great Trade of ſelling handſome Boys and Girls into Denmark. After her death he Married another Wife, and by her had ſix Sons, viz. Harold, Swane, Wined, Toſti, Gyrth and Leofwin. His Earldom, ſome ſay his Dukedom, of Weſtſex was given to his Son Harold, and the Earldom of Harold, viz. Eſſex, and the reſt was conferred on Algar the Son of Leofrid the Earl of Leiceſter.

De eo ſic Ingulphus Willielmi Normanni pænę dixerim mancipium.

Anno Domini 1053.

Cum Godwinus comes in menſa Regis de nece ſui fratris impeteretur, ille poſt multa ſacramenta tandem per buccellam degluttiendam abjuravit; & buccella guſtata continuò ſuffocatus interiit.

Earl Siward ſeizes on Scotland, ſetting up Malcolm for King thereof.

14. The next year, which was the MLIV of our Lord, was Siward that valiant Earl of Northumberland ſent with a great Body of Horſe, and a ſtrong Fleet into Scotland, where he fought a Battel with Macbeth King of that Countrey, whom he defeated, having ſlain many of his Scots, and ſuch Normans as we mentioned to have gone over to him, and driving him quite away, made King in his ſtead Malcolm the Son of the King of Cumberland, according to the orders he had received from King Edward. But this Victory coſt him dear, the lives of many both Engliſh and Danes, beſides that of his own Son, of whoſe death when he heard he demanded whether he had received his Wound before or behind, and when it was anſwered before, he ſaid he was glad, and otherwiſe ſhould not have thought him, though his own Son, worthy of Burial. King Edward having ſent him into the North to fight, much about the ſame time ſent Aldred Biſhop of Worceſter with great Preſents, to treat with the Emperour of Germany about ſending for out of Hungary his Couſin Edward the Son of King Edmund Ironſide, and remitting him into England; for having no Iſſue of his own to ſucceed him and the Sons of Godwin, being very powerfull, he took care for his neareſt Kinſman, to whom the Crown of Right ſhould belong. But Siward the Duke of Northumberland ſurvived his Victory, and his Son not long, dying the year following at York, where he was buried in the Monaſtery of St. Mary without the Walls, built by himſelf, as writes Ingulphus, though Simeon talks of his being Interred at a Monaſtery called Galmanho of his own Erection. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon, who gives him the Epithete of Conſul Rigidiſſimus, tells us his Diſeaſe was a Dyſentery, and that he was much grieved he ſhould end is days in ſuch a manner. Perceiving his death to approach, he ſaid, "How aſhamed am I that I ſhould not die in "ſo many Battels, but thus to be reſerved to the Ignominious Death of Cowes. Put "upon me my impenetrable Corſlet, gird me with my Sword, and ſet my Helmet up-"on my Head; give me in my left hand my Buckler, in my right my guilded Sci-"miter, that being a moſt valiant Souldier, like a Souldier I may die. So he ſaid, and as he ſaid he died in that honourable poſture he deſired. His Son Walteof being very young his Government was beſtowed on Toſti the Son of Godwin.

Siward Duke of Northumberland dies.

15. This ſame year King Edward in an Aſſembly held at London, baniſhed Earl Algar the Son of Leofric, without any cauſe ſaith Simeon, but Huntingdon writes, that he was in the Council convict of Treaſon. Whether guilty or not, he thought himſelf ſo aggrieved that he went over into Ireland, and there getting together a Fleet of eighteen Piratical Veſſels,he therewith ſailed to Griffin King of the Welſh, and deſired his Aſſiſtence againſt King Edward.Griffin ready to ſerve him in this particular, raiſed ſpeedily great Forces, and joining with Algar invaded Herefordſhire, againſt whom made Head as we formerly hinted Rodulph the Siſter's Son of Edward, one who deſired rather to Eat than Fight, and meeting them ſome two Miles from Hereford on the four and twentieth of October, horſed all the Engliſh contrary to their cuſtome who were wont ever to fight on foot. But the Gentleman e'er the Fight was well begun, with his French and Normans firſt began to run, which the Engliſh ſeeing thought it was no ſhame to follow their Leader, but in their flight four or five hundred of them were ſlain, and many wounded. Griffin and Algar encouraged by this ſucceſs entred Hereford, where they ſlew ſeven Canons which would have maintained the great Door of the Principal Church againſt them, which done they burnt the Monaſtery with all its Ornaments and Relicks, killed ſome of their Townſmen, took Priſoners more, and having plundred and burnt the City went their ways inriched with great ſpoil. Edward ſoundly alarmed with the noiſe hereof, commanded Forces to be raiſed throughout England, which meeting together at Gloceſter he committed the Conduct of them to Earl Harold, who Marching ſpeedily into Wales incamped himſelf beyond Straddale where Griffin and Algar durſt not look him in the Face, but knowing him to be a Man both of skill and metal fairly betook themſelves into South Wales. He perceiving they were not to be reached, left there the greater part of his Men with orders to engage the Enemy if they could come at him, and with the reſt returned to Hereford, which he fortified all ways poſſible; during which employment of his the two Captains thinking it beſt to obtain Peace, ſend their Meſſengers and procure a meeting at a place called Byligeſleage, where a firm Peace and Friendſhip was concluded, in purſuance whereof Algar ſent his Ships to Cheſter till he could pay them off,and he himſelf went up to the King from whom he received his former Command. But Griffin the year after broke the Peace on his part by ſetting upon Leofgar Biſhop of Hereford at a place called Glaſtbyrig, whom he there ſlew, together with his Clerks, Agelnoth the vice Earl of the County, and many others.

16. The next year being the MLVII. of Our Lord, Edward the Son of Edmund Ironſide at the deſire of his Uncle came into England out of Hungary, being deſtined by him his Succeſſour; but he Died not long after at London, and was Buried in St. Paul's Church, leaving behind him Edgar Etheling, and two Daughters Margaret and Chriſtina. Not long after he was followed to a better life by Earl Leofric, who Died in his own Village of Bromleage, and was Buried in a Monaſtery of his own Founding at Coventry, a Pious Charitable Man, and the Neſtor of his Age, to his Councils all the Kings he ſerved, and the whole Realm of England being beholden. In his Earldom ſucceeded his Son Algar, but quickly found a miſs of him, being Baniſhed the ſecond time not a year after his Father's Death. Yet by the aſſiſtence of Griffin, the Welſh King, who would not deſert him, and a Fleet of Norway Men, which by chance came in to his help, he is ſaid ſhortly after by force to have recovered his Government.

The Scots infeſt the North of England.

The following year, Malcolm, King of Scots, came and gave a viſit to Kind Edward, and contracted ſo great a Friendſhip with his Neighbour, Toſti the Earl of Northumberland, who brought him on his way, that they became ſworn Brethren, though to what effect, the event ſhewed within two years; for Toſti being gone to Rome with Aldrid the Archbiſhop of York, to fetch his Pall from Pope Nicholas, his ſworn Brother fell in upon the places under his Government, which he cruelly waſted, and brake the Peace of St. Cuthbert, in the Iſland of Lindisfarne, as Simeon complains.

And the Welſh the Weſtern Parts.

While Malcolm thus diſturbed the Northern Parts, Griffin the King of the Welſh, ceaſed not by his frequent Inrodes and Depredations, both by Land and Sea, to hurry the Weſtern, which gave ſo great diſcontent to King Edward, that ſenſible how much he was concerned in honour, he diſpatch'd from Gloceſter, where he then lay, after Chriſtmaſs Holy-days, Harold againſt him with a Party of Horſe, if poſſible, to ſurprize him. Yet got he notice of his coming, and made a ſhift to eſcape; but left behind him moſt of his Ships, which he commanded to be burnt, and ſo returned. But about Rogation week, having got a Fleet in readineſs, from Briſtol he ſet Sail, and compaſſing the greateſt Part of Wales, joyning himſelf to the Horſe, with which his Brother Toſti, by the King's Order, met him, and did ſuch miſchief in the Countrey, that the Britains yielded themſelves up to him, delivered up Hoſtages, conſented to pay Tribute, and renounced quite their King Griffin. At preſent Griffin eſcaped, but the following year, he was taken by Griffin the King of North Wales, and ſlain, his Head, with the Head of his Ship, being ſent as a preſent to Harold. He ſent them to King Edward, who was ſo kind as to beſtow the Dominions of Griffin, upon his two Brethren, Blechgent and Rithwalan, who in Harold's preſence, ſwore Allegiance to him, to obey him, both by Land and Sea, and ingaged to pay without fail, what had been paid out of the Countrey to former Kings.

Sim. ad Ann. 1063.

Who are ſubdued, and Griffin their King ſlain.

17. Griffin left behind him a Son named Caradoc, who could not digeſt his Inheritance, thus made over to his Uncles. Harold, as a curb to the Countrey, and for his own (or the King's as he pretended) convenience for hunting, cauſed in the Britiſh Countrey, at a place called Portaſcith (now Potskewoth in Monmouthſhire, upon the Severn Sea near to Wymouth) a great Houſe to be erected, and furniſhed with all conveniences for eating and drinking. Caradoc having notice

Sect. 12.

tice of it, out of diſdain and revenge, on St. Bartholomew's day, the year following his Father's death came down upon a ſudden, ſlew all the Artificers that there were at work, and took away all the good chear that was provided. Thus was Harold robbed of his good chear, in thoſe Parts; and within a little after, his Brother Toſti was in danger of being bereaved of his Life, by a Conſpiracy raiſed againſt him in his own Government, upon theſe occaſions. There was one Goſpatrick, an Officer in Northumberland, with whom he having a quarrel, his Siſter, Queen Egitha, cauſed him to be ſlain at Court, the Chriſtmas before. The quarrel being taken up by the Friends and Companions of Goſpatrick, two of them, viz. Ganiel the Son of Orne, and Vlf the Son of Dolphin, he himſelf having treacherouſly drawn them in, had alſo killed in his own Chamber. Beſides he had laid intolerable impoſitions upon the People, which ſo incenſed them, that three or four of the principal Men, viz. Ganiolbarn, Dimſtan, the Son of Agelnoth, and Gloineorn the Son of Heardulf, with four hundred Men in Arms, entred York a little after Michaelmas, and firſt ſlew two of his houſhold Servants, (his Huſcarles) Amund and Ravenſheart, having reached them, though they were fled out of the City, and the day following, above two hundred more of his Attendants, on the North ſide of the River Humber. They broke open his Treaſury, and having rifled all they could find, then went their ways. Toſti hereupon made a loud complaint to the King, and at his deſire, was appointed Harold his Brother and others to take up the Buſineſs. But as they were going down into the North for this purpoſe, the whole Countrey in a manner met them at Northampton, where, and afterward on St. Simon and Jude's day at Oxford, they vehemently oppoſed the Reſolution of Toſti, and by no means would admit of Reconciliation; and ſo vehement they were and reſolute, that after the Feaſt of all Saints, they procured him and his Miniſters to be baniſhed. He went over with his Wife to Baldwin the Earl of Flanders, his Father-in-law, and Morkar, the Son of Algar, was made Earl of Northumberland in his room.

Toſti one of Godwin's Sons baniſhed.

Ad An. Edw. 24.

For his cruel murthers and other Vilanies.

18. Such was the occaſion of Toſti's baniſhment, as moſt probable, though the Archdeacon of Huntingdon (who lived in the time of the Normans their Rule over England, and heard many tales of the hated Earl Godwin, and his Sons) tells us another ſtory. On a day, as the King ſate at Dinner at Windſor, he was ſerved with the Cup by Earl Harold. Toſti being preſent, and not able to endure that his younger Brother ſhould be more favoured than himſelf in the King's preſence, flew in his Face, and caught him by the hair. The ſcuffle being parted, the King foretold that their deſtruction was nigh, and that the wrath of God no longer would be deferred. For they were come to that height of barbariſm and cruelty, that if they but liked the Houſe or Poſſeſſions of any one, they would by night procure the owner to be murthered, with all his Off-ſpring, to get his Eſtate: And thoſe were the Juſtitiaries of the Kingdom. Toſti in great rage leaving the Court, went to Hereford, where at that time his Brother Harold had made vaſt preparations for Entertainment of the King. There he made a moſt terrible havock of his Servants, into each of the Veſſels of Wine, Mead, Ale, and other Liquors, putting either a Man's Leg, or an Arme, or an Head, ſending word to the King, that he ſhould take no care for pickled Meats, as for other ſorts he might carry them down with him to his Farm. For this ſo horrid a villany, the King commanded him to be baniſhed, which the Northumbrians underſtanding, for the many murthers he had there committed, they drove him thence with all his Family, as well Engliſh as Danes, and ſeized on his Treaſure and Magazine in York. Into his Place they preferred Marger (ſo he calls him) the Son of Earl Algar, who with them, and multitudes out of Lincolnſhire, Derbyſhire, and Notinghamſhire, went as far as Hamton. Againſt him marched Edwin his Brother, with Men under his Command, and many Britains, and at laſt came up Earl Harold, whom the Northumbrians procured to goe to the King, to get leave that Marcher might be their Governour, which he granted, ſending back Harold to them to Hamton. They in the mean time burnt and pillaged the Countrey, killing many of the Inhabitants, and when their requeſt was granted, many thouſands they took along with them, doing that part of the Kingdom ſo much miſchief as it could not recover many years after. Such is the account which Huntingdon gives us, ſtrange as to the manner of the behaviour of the Northumbrians. And had Toſti been guilty of ſuch a raſh Act toward his Brother in the King's preſence, the King would never have interceded with thoſe of Yorkſhire, for his keeping his Place as it appears from Simeon that he did. Nay, Malmesbury tells us plainly, he had it from thoſe that knew that another was put into Toſti's place by the indeavour of Harold, quite contrary to the inclinations of the King, who bore a great love to Toſti, but being ſpent with his Diſeaſe and Age, he now began to be ſlighted by all, and could not ſuccour whom he affected, but thence fell into ſuch trouble of mind, that his Diſtemper being thereby increaſed, he died not long after.

Harold another Son of Godwin Shipwreckt.

19. But if the King upon this or ſome other occaſion predicted the Ruine of the Sons of Godwin (who doubtleſs were enough to blame) to be near at hand, he was ſo much in the right, that their ill Stars about this very time began to operate; for if Toſti was baniſhed by the King, Harold was alſo driven from England by the very Winds and Weather. About the time that his Brother went into Flanders, he being for his recreation at his houſe at Boſeham in Suſſex, upon the Sea ſide; for his farther Pleaſure, he took a Fiſhers Boat, meaning to plye up and down, but going farther off to Sea than he was aware, a Tempeſt roſe and carried him croſs the Chanel to the French Coaſt, where glad to be ſafe any where, he was forc't to Land in the Territories of the Earl of Ponthieu. The men of the place (according to their cuſtome and that barbarous practice which is on foot in moſt places, to make a prey of diſtreſſed and ſhipwreck'd Perſons) preſently fall to work. Armed they ſeize upon the naked, a multitude upon a few, on their hands they put Manacles, and Fetters on their Feet. Harold conſidering what was to be done, hired a Meſſenger to goe to William, by whom he acquaints him how he “was ſent by the King, by his word and preſence, to confirm what other little “Meſſengers had but whiſper'd, but was kept Priſoner, and hindered from the “diſcharge of his Meſſage by Gwido Earl of Ponthieu. It appeared they had a “barbarous and extravagant cuſtome in that Countrey, that ſuch as eſcaped drown“ing, ſhould on Land it ſelf be endangered, that it would ſuit well with a man “of ſo great repute as he was, not to ſuffer ſuch villany to goe unpuniſhed, ha“ving detracted from his Authority, by daring to caſt bonds upon one that had “appealed to his Juſtice; if with money his Liberty was to be redeemed, he would “willingly pay the price to Earl William, but not to ſuch an half Man as Gwido “was. By command of William he is quickly ſet at liberty, and by Gwido conducted to his Court, where being honourably treated in all reſpects, he is alſo invited to an expedition into Little Britain, where at that time the Norman had War. By his Wit and Valour he ſo approved himſelf to the Duke, that he was very much taken with him, to whom, that he might the more indear himſelf, he promiſed by Oath, that in caſe King Edward died, he would deliver up to him the Caſtle of Dover, which belonged to him, and procure him to ſucceed in the Kingdom of England. This ſaid, the Duke's Daughter, as yet too young for Marriage, was betrothed to him, and he was ſent home with great gifts.

Boſeham how obtained by Godwin.

Walterus Mapæus de Nugis Curiclium.

20. Some ſaid he was ſent over on purpoſe by Edward, who finding himſelf decay, had in his thoughts pitched upon his Kinſman William for his Succeſſour, but Malmesbury approves of the other report, that he was driven by Tempeſt. However, by this promiſe of his, he intangled himſelf and incurred the indignation of William by his breach of it, which procured him his end, ſo that he had reaſon to curſe the time of his knowing Boſeham, which becauſe it was wrongfully and deceitfully got from the right owner, ſeemed indeed to draw down a curſe upon him the ſecond Poſſeſſour of it, and it is not amiſs here to inſert the ſtory, the more to diſcover the humour of his Father Earl Godwin, who as by this and other paſſages, it appears, ſo he but got, cared not by what means he came at it. This Boſeham (or Boſenham, as anciently it was called) lying underneath Chicheſter, in the confines of Hantſhire and Suſſex, environed round about with Woods, and the Sea together, was formerly before Bede's time, onely famous for a ſmall Cell, which one Dicul a Scotch Monk had in it, where he lived with five or ſix other Religious Perſons, very poorly in the Service of God: Afterwards it came into the hands of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Godwin upon ſight of it had an itching deſire after it, and therefore with a great Train of Gallants, comes ſmiling and jeſting to the Archbiſhop, with theſe words. My Lord, I pray you give me Boſeham. The Archbiſhop much marvelled what he meant, but at length, whether he thought he alluded to Baſium a Buſſe, as now we term it, which in times paſt was uſed in doing Homage, or was unwilling to diſpleaſe him, anſwered; I give you Boſeham. He hereupon, immediately with his Followers, falls down at his Feet, as was beforehand ordered, and kiſſing them, with many thanks went back to Boſeham, of which as Lord, he kept poſſeſſion by ſtrong hand, and having the ſlender Teſtimony of his Friends and Followers to back him, praiſed much the Archbiſhop to the King, as his Benefactour, and ſo held it peaceably till he left it, as it ſeems, to his Son Harold, whoſe paſſage hence into Normandy, procured the Shipwreck, though not at preſent, both of his Perſon, of his Fortunes, and indeed of his Father's Family.

Ad Ann. 1065.

Several accounts of Harold's paſſage into Normandy.

21. But as to the Meſſage carried over to Duke William, there are ſtill more opinions. Ingulphus obliged by the Duke, and therefore a favourer of him, writes, that King Edward, not long before his Death, perceiving his Kinſman Edgar Etheling, the Son of Edward Clito, lately deceaſed, both in reſpect of his body and Mind, unfit for Government (of which temper his Father is alſo reputed to have been) and that the evil Off-ſpring of Earl Godwin, daily increaſed, and got more ſtrength and intereſt, fixed his thoughts upon Earl William of Normandy, his Kinſman, and fully reſolved to have him ſucceed him in the Kingdom of England, for he was then become famous in War, had triumphed over the French King, in the Exerciſe of Arms, was invincible, a moſt juſt Judge in deciding of Cauſes, as well as moſt Religious and devout at Divine Service. Hereupon he diſpatched to him Robert, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to acquaint him that both in reſpect to his Kindred and Merit, he had deſigned him his Succeſſour. Beſides this, Harold the Major domo of the King's Palace, going into Normandy, ſwore not onely to keep the Crown for him, after the deceaſe of King Edward; but to marry alſo his Daughter, which things having paſſed, he returned magnificently rewarded. This is the account we have from Ingulphus, but ſuch as will not hold in reference to the Meſſenger, for Robert the Archbiſhop, was driven out of the Land before, and therefore King Edward could not ſend him from his ſide, or preſence, as the Abbat words it. Simeon has another Story, which ſends Harold into Normandy, but upon another occaſion quite different. When Godwin, he tells us, was reconciled to the King, he was conſtrained to give up Hoſtages for Edward's ſecurity, which were Wulnoth his own Son, and Hacun his Grandſon, by his Son Swane, and were ſent into Normandy to William the Baſtard Son of Rodbert, who was Son to Richard the King's Mothers Brother. In proceſs of time, when Godwin was dead, Harold asked leave of the King to goe and fetch home his Brother and Nephew, to whom he anſwered, that he would not be Authour of his Journey, but that he ſhould not ſay that he hindered him, he might goe whither he pleaſed, and try what he could doe; onely he foreſaw his Journey would tend to the detriment of the whole Kingdom of England, and his own diſgrace. For he was aſſured the Earl was not ſuch a Fool as to diſmiſs them, without he knew it would redound to his own convenience. But Harold ventures to take Ship, and by a great Tempeſt, is caſt upon the Coaſt of Ponthieu, into the mouth of a River called Maia, where his Veſſel is ſeized on, as a wreck by the Lord of that Countrey. Hereupon he procures one to goe to William, to let him know in what a condition he was, who immediately ſends to the Lord of Ponthieu, to diſcharge him, and upon refuſal, a ſecond time, threatning elſe to fetch him away by force. Being now ſet at Liberty, he goes to William, who, very courteouſly receives him, on purpoſe to draw him over to his deſign.

Hinc Rex Edwardus Robertum Archiepiſcopum Cantuariæ legatum à latere ſuo direxit.

The Ingagement betwixt Harold and Duke William.

22. When he thought him fitly prepared he broke his mind, acquainting him how when his Couſin Edward lived there with him in exile, he ſeriouſly ingaged to him, that if ever he came to be King of England, he would transfer the Inheritance of the Kingdom upon him. He added, that if he would oblige himſelf to aſſiſt him in this matter, keep the Caſtle of Dover with the Well of Water for his ſervice, would ſend his Siſter to him in time convenient to be married to one of his Noblemen, and promiſe to take his Daughter for his Wife he ſhould now receive his Nephew, and aſſoon as he came to be King of England his Brother ſhould be ſet at liberty, and when he was once ſetled in the Throne by his aſſiſtence he ſhould have every thing elſe he could reaſonably deſire. Harold was ſenſible of the caſe he was in, and ſaw there was no remedy but promiſe whatſoever he required. But William with his bare promiſe would not be ſatisfied, but bringing forth the Relicks of Saints, made him open their ſacred Bodies to ſwear really to perform whatſoever they had now agreed, which done Harold took his Nephew, and with him returned into England. When upon the King's Demand he had given him an account of what had paſſed, he ſaid, Did not I tell thee that William was no fool, and that many miſchiefs might happen to this Kingdom by that thy Journey? I foreſee great Calamities coming upon this Nation of ours by that thine Act, which I pray God may not happen in my days. And his Prayer was granted, for King Edward ſhortly after died, and Harold as before his death he had ordained ſucceeded him in his Kingdom. So writes Simeon, with whom agrees Eadmerus as to the occaſion of his Journey. Though Matthew Paris believes him driven thither by force of Tempeſt, but when he came to get his liberty to have told another Tale quite contrary to the meaning of his Heart, and to have entred with him into that ſecret confederacy out of Neceſſity. Of this opinion alſo as we ſaid is Malmesbury, and it ſeems the more probable.

Sect. 12.

23. Whatever the occaſion of his Promiſe and Ingagement was, the time was at hand, that he ſhould be put to the Trial. For now approached that year, that dreadfull year to him and his Engliſh Saxon Nation ſignalized by a Comet, which portended as Ingulphus is of opinion that great change of Government, that Slaughter of the People, and that great miſery which came ſhortly upon the Land. King Edward grew every day more ſickly, yet kept his Chriſtmas at Weſtminſter, and aſſiſted at the Dedication of St. Peter's Church there, which he had re-edified with all magnificence; but on the Eve of the Epiphany or Twelftide he died, and the day following was buried in his late dedicated Church with Royal rites, to the great ſorrow of the miſerable People. The general opinion is that he was a ſimple, honeſt, harmleſs Man, and much devoted to Religious Exerciſes, exceedingly hampered by Earl Godwin and his Sons, who were but too ſenſible that he received his Preferment from their Family, and upon that ground were too confident and impoſing, as often it happens in ſuch caſes. It was the Miſfortune of the Nation aſwell as of himſelf, that he was driven into baniſhment, and living in another Countrey was molded into the humour, faſhions and cuſtoms of it, and out of good nature conſtrained to be gratefull to ſuch as had well deſerved of him in his Neceſſities, more than the Temper if not the Intereſt of his own Subjects could bear or brook. Moſt of them yet were in compliance and conformity with him ſo transformed into foreign ſhapes, as foretold their Subjection in a ſhort time to thoſe the manners and uſages of whom they had already taken up, ſo that the Conquerours needed but to come to maſter their Bodies, their minds and affections were theirs already, their humour was already run out of England, ſo that the Normans needed not herein to play any after-Game.

King Edward dies.

Anno autem Domini 1066. Cometa in cœlo apparuit, quod Regni mutationem magnam populi ſtragem & multam terræ miſeriam portendit: unde dicitur illud metricum:

Anno Milleno Sexageno quoque Sexo.

Anglorum metæ Crinem ſenſere Cometæ.

Ut enim Philoſophi dicunt quo dirigit, Crinem, illuc dirigit & diſcrimen. Sic Ingulphus.

24. Ingulphus an Eye-witneſs is our informer, who writes that Edward being born in England but bred in Normandy, through his long continuance in that Countrey was almoſt changed into a Frenchman, and brought very many over with him whom he promoted to various Dignities, and greatly exalted under the King and other Normans; thus introduced all the Land began to leave off their Engliſh Cuſtoms, and to imitate the manners of the French. All the Noblemen in their Houſes ſpake the French Tongue as mighty gentile, made their Charters and Writings after the French faſhion, and grew to be aſhamed of their own uſages, both in theſe and other matters: and this humour more and more increaſed, till to thoſe they admired, at length they became Slaves and Vaſſals. But ſo King Edward died, or as Malmesbury words it, being full of years and glory yielded up his ſimple (that is his innocent well-meaning) Spirit to the Heavenly Kingdom, after he had reigned, ſaith Simeon, three and twenty years, ſix Months and ſeven and twenty days, which muſt be reckoned then from the death of Hardecnute, and not from his own Preferment, which was as we ſaid in the year following. He is ſaid to have been ſo chaſt that though he was married, yet he never as an Husband enjoyed his Wife, which ſome attribute to the Averſion he had to her for her Father's ſake, but if that was the Cauſe of his Abſtinence, his ſelf denial, and in this reſpect his ſuffering, he could not in this deſerve the Name of a Confeſſour (given to thoſe that ſuffer for Chriſt though not unto death) which yet in reſpect of this or other parts of his Conflicts againſt fleſh and bloud he obtained, and came to be known by the Name of St. Edward. But in him the Royal Regnant-Line of the Weſt Saxon Kings, which from Cerdic according to the Calculation of Malmesbury had in Britain, Dominion for five hundred and ſeventy one years, and from Egbert two hundred and ſixty one years, received its Period.

Is mightily Frenchified.

Rex autem Edwardus natus in Anglia ſed nutritus in Normannia & diutiſſimè immoratus pænè in Gallicum tranſierat, &c. Cæpit ergo tota terra ſub Rege & ſub aliis Normannis introductis Anglicos ritus dimittere, &c. Vide ad Annum 1043.

Ita ævi plenus & gloriæ ſimplicem ſpiritum cœleſti Regno exhibuit.

25. To the Glory and Happineſs of this Weſt Saxon Family, it did belong not by its ending to put an end to the Engliſh Empire, and in its own Ruine involve the Cataſtrophe of the whole Nation: this was reſerved to a baſer Houſe, out of which an Upſtart ſhould ariſe to pull down the whole Fabrick, and bury himſelf in the Ruines thereof, Edward being dead there were three that laid claim to the Crown. The firſt, whoſe undoubted Right it was, was Edgar Etheling the Son of Edward, the Outlaw lately mentioned, the Grandſon of Edmund Ironſide, the Elder Brother of him who had the laſt Poſſeſſion, though according to the Right of Primogeniture not the beſt Title. The next was William of Normandy, the Kinſman of the late King by his Mother being her Brothers Grandſon, one who in bloud could could find no pretext; but upon the kindneſs and pretended promiſe of his Kinſman. The laſt was Harold the Son of Godwin, who could not produce any ſhew of Right by Deſcent, but alledged the late King's Deſignment, and thought he could plead more merit than them both. Edgar was a Stranger, had had neither time, nor ability in Eſtate or mind to make any more Intereſt than what mere Conſcience had wrought in the minds of men, which is uſually very infirm upon ſuch Occaſions. William indeed was a conſiderable Prince, and as ſuch acknowledged, but betwixt him and England there was a deep Ditch, not eaſily got over as was imagined, and Dangers at a Diſtance are not ſo much regarded. Harold was Noble, a goodly Man, the greateſt Miniſter of the deceaſed King, one of much Valour and excellent Conduct, a Perſon civil and obliging, of ſuch Qualifications as fitted him for a Crown; and what was more than all, had all the Court and Grandees at his beck, whom by kindneſs he had either won, or by awe had conquered and brought over to his Party. He took the advantage and knowing delays to be dangerous, the ſame day that Edward was buried he aſſumed the Title and was crowned King, being choſen, as Simeon ſaith, by the Princes of all England.

A diſpute about the Succeſſion.

Harold is choſen King.

Takes good Courſes at firſt.

His Brother Toſti infeſts the Land from Flanders.

De eo ſic Malmesb: Perſtitit incepto Haroldus (poſt mortem Regis intellige) ut fratrem exlagaret. De Willielmo primo, lib. 3. p. 104.

26. Being King he ſtreight took thoſe Courſes, which moſt of thoſe who are conſcious to themſelves of their bad or weak Titles are wont, and all other Princes ought to take. All unjuſt Laws he antiquated, made better in their ſtead, became a Patron of Churches and Monaſteries, ſeemed not onely to reſpect but even reverence Biſhops, Abbats, Monks, and even all the Clergy; to all good men he ſhewed himſelf pious, humble and affable, and to all that was bad he maniſeſted an Averſion, commanding all his Officers in general to lay in wait for all Thieves, Robbers and Diſturbers of the Peace; in concluſion, he made it his Buſineſs to defend his Countrey both by Sea and Land. But both his own Fate, and that of the Nation was too urgent to ſuffer him long to continue theſe practices. On the twenty fourth of April a dreadfull Comet appears, ſeen, as was reported, throughout the world with great Luſtre for ſeven days together. The firſt miſchief portended thereby, was from Harold's own Brother Toſti, who having been baniſhed chiefly by his procurement to be out of the way, and not able to digeſt his preferment to the Regal Dignity, was moved with ſo much Envy and Indignation as to endeavour all ways poſſible to unking him, for which purpoſe he came out of Flanders with ſome Ships to the Iſle of Wight, whence after he had forced Money from the Inhabitants, he departed and plaid the Pirate upon all the Coaſts till he came to Sandwich Haven. Harold being then at London, upon notice thereof got in readineſs both a ſtrong fleet and a good Party of Horſe, with which he reſolved in Perſon to go to Sandwich, which Toſti underſtanding took along with him all the Seamen he could find, and went to the Coaſt of Lindſey, where he burnt many Villages, and killed many Men; but Edwin Earl of Mercia, and his Brother Merkar Earl of Northumberland, haſted into thoſe Parts with an Army, and ſoon forced him to quit the Countrey. Thence he ſailed into Scotland to King Malcolm, and with him continued the whole Summer.

But Duke William is expected.

27. Harold lying at Sandwich in expectation of his Brother when he perceived he had taken another courſe ſailed to the Iſle of Wight, and about thoſe Coaſts he plied all Summer and Autumn, having a land Army beſtowed in all places he ſaw convenient at the Sea ſide. For another Gueſt he looked for who required greater Preparations for his Reception than his Brother Toſti, viz. William the Duke of Normandy, who had before this ſent to him to put him in mind of his Promiſe and Oath, and to require a performance of what had been agreed betwixt them. “This Harold thought was very unreaſonable to require of one who was already in Poſſeſſion of a Kingdom, and was come to it by the unanimous conſent of the Nobility and People. He anſwered, that what he then promiſed was in Captivity at a time when he was not his own Man, and that could not be called his own Act which Conſtraint and Neceſſity forced from him. But had he voluntarily done what he was ſo far from intending, it could not have been valid, foraſmuch as he could not take an Outlandiſh Woman to Wiſe, being King, without the Aſſent of the Eſtates, much leſs could he Swear away the Succeſſion and Right to the Crown without their knowledge, conſent and allowance. To theſe reaſons which he looked upon as very good when backed with a better Sword it's ſaid that he added contempt, becauſe as he thought he was out of danger, ſending away the Ambaſſadours on lame Horſes. That on which he chiefly inſiſted was, that William's Daughter was Dead, the Marriage with whom was the foundation of all that had paſſed be-

Sect. 12.

“ twixt them, and this was the ground of his confidence, that he looked upon “ his Rival as having his Hands full from the Neighbouring Princes in his own “ Countrey. The Duke hereupon reſolved to attempt by War what by Words he could not compaſs, but to proceed gravely and with due preparations, conſidering the greatneſs of the Enterprize; for he knew his Adverſary to be a ſtout and reſolute Man, and made no other account but that he was to grapple with the ſtrength of a whole Nation.

Vid. Malmesb. lib. 3. in Willielmo primo.

Who with a Conſecrated Banner is ready to ſet Sail.

28. Therefore with all diligence did he ſet himſelf to the work he had in hand. All his own Souldiers he kept in pay the whole year, and though to his great charge hired others from adjacent places. He uſed great diſcretion in the choice of his Men, liſting ſuch as were tall and of ſtrong conſtitution. His Captains and Officers were both practiſed in Warlike matters, and of mature Age to govern both themſelves and others; not heady raſh Young Men, who uſually by their heat and indiſcretion ruine an Army. And indeed he was exceedingly well ſerved at this time, his Prelates ſtriving who ſhould excell one another in Acts of Religion, and his Nobles in Deeds of Magnanimity and Liberality, ſo that the Monk of Malmesbury admires how within the term of ſixty years they ſhould become ſo degenerate, not conſidering the luxurious effects of wealth and proſperity, great Poſſeſſions and Affluence of all things in a new Conquered Countrey. But as William made all as ſure as he could at home, ſo abroad he ſought for Reputation to his cauſe, by ſending to the Pope, and making his Pretences as plauſible as he could, which Harold omitted, thinking himſelf ſtrong enough without the help of a verbal or Paper Aſſiſtence. Pope Alexander in token of his Approbation ſends him a Conſecrated Banner, well ſatisfied with his bare affirmation that King Edward himſelf, beſides what Harold had engaged, by the Advice of Earl Siward, Earl Godwin, and Stigand the Archbiſhop, had choſen him for his Succeſſour, and had as Pledges or Hoſtages ſent over to him both the Son and the Nephew of Godwin. Having received the Banner as a good Omen, he aſſembled his Nobility and Officers at Lillibone, where laying open the whole matter to them, they promiſed to ſtand by him with their Lives and Fortunes, which reſolution he cheriſhed by great promiſes of Reward, and according to their ſeveral Abilities appointed what every one was to contribute towards a Fleet. This done he diſmiſſed them till the Month of Auguſt, and then they all met again at St Valerie a Port Town, where they ſtaid many days for a Wind, which ſtay made the Common-Souldiers mutter, blaming him for attempting to get another Man's Countrey, and alledging, that his Father having ſuch a Deſign had miſcarried, and that it was fatal to the Family to be croſſed by God Almighty in their endeavours after things too high for them.

The Wind ſerving,

He and his followers land.

29. The Duke was ſenſible whither theſe Diſcourſes tended, and how much his whole Affair was thereby indangered. Taking Council then with his Officers, he cauſed the Relicks of St. Valerick (one of the Diſciples of Columbanus who by King Clothair was made Abbat of a Monaſtery in this place, in the Territories of Amiens on the Mouth of the River Some, and imparted his Name unto it) to be brought forth and expoſed for the obtaining of a fair Wind, which without delay followed upon the Ceremony. Then very chearfully did they call one upon another to get out to Sea, the Earl himſelf being the firſt that went on ſhipboard, by his example to draw on the reſt. Following cloſe the Admiral Gally they had a fair Paſſage, and after they had refreſhed themſelves arrived at a place called Pevenſey, as ſome write, or Bulverhith three miles diſtant, as others moſt in the right, or at Haſtings as ſome alſo deliver, following herein the cuſtome of the Ancients to aſcribe a Battel or any memorable Accident to the next place of Note in that Countrey wherein the thing fell out. As William was going aſhore his Feet ſlipped, and down he fell on his Hands, which a Souldier obſerving, told him a-loud, That he had already taken Poſſeſſion of England. His Army he forbad to Plunder or at all to indamage the Countrey which was ſhortly to be theirs, which ſaying being by Ancient Hiſtorians related of former Conquerours, the Monks apply to him, but with no good reaſon, for when after the overthrow of King Harold they had better reaſon to think the Countrey would be theirs, he laid no ſuch Injunctions upon them, but permitted them to burn and kill at their pleaſure. But ſo he landed, and for fifteen days he kept himſelf quiet, not to refreſh his Army, but either to conſider better what he was to doe, or to build a Fort to have recourſe to in caſe of Danger, for his Ships he burnt that his Men might think of no mean betwixt Death and Conqueſt.

30. His

With a great Fleet.

30. His whole Fleet is ſaid to have conſiſted of nine hundred Sail, but others increaſe the number to above a thouſand, which are not then to be underſtood of ſuch Ships as ours now-a-days, but flat bottom'd Boats, or Hulkes, ſuch as were fit for tranſporting Men and Horſes. Hereof as an Anonymus Writer, about the Reign of his Son Henry, wrote, William his Sewer the Son of Oſbern ſupplied him with ſixty Veſſels. Hugh his Nephew, afterward Earl of Cheſter, with ſo many; Hugh de Mumfort with fifty Ships, and ſixty Souldiers; Romus the Elemoſynary of Teſcan, afterwards Biſhop of Lincoln, with one Ship and twenty Men. Nicolas the Abbat of St. Audoen with fifteen Ships and an hundred Men. Robert Earl of Angus with ſixty Ships. Gerold the Sewer with as many. William Count of Deurons with eighty Ships. Roger of Montgumeri with ſixty. Roger de Bunmont with ſixty. Odo Biſhop of Baieux with an hundred. Robert de Mortimer with an hundred and twenty. And Water Giffard thirty Veſſels with an hundred Men. Beſides theſe which by the Authour's computation make a thouſand, from others of his Dependants he had many other Ships from every one according to his Ability. His Wife Matildis for honour of the Expedition cauſed a Ship to be made Named Mora wherein he himſelf croſſed the Sea, having on the Prow a Child of Gold with the right Hand pointing to England, and with the left holding an Ivory Whiſtle at his Mouth; for which out of requital Duke William her Husband aſſigned her the County of Kent, when he had got full Poſſeſſion of that Province.

Simeon Dunelm. ad Ann. MLXVI.

Toſti and the King of Norway invade the North of England.

31. William's Arrival was accompanied with ſome of thoſe lucky hits, circumſtances or accidents which ever attend upon Conqueſts. Harold was now out of the way. He had expected him all the Summer, till about the middle of September, when judging he would give him no trouble that year, and Proviſions failing, both the Fleet and Army quitted the Poſts he had aſſigned them at the Sea ſide. As if Toſti had been hired by the Normans on purpoſe to divert his Brother from the Maritime Parts, to weaken his Force, nay to break in pieces his whole Power, Helpes and Aſſiſtences, he applies himſelf to Harold Harvager King of Norway, whom he knew to bear a Months mind to the Kingdom of England, and agrees in Conjunction with him to make an Invaſion. Having united their Fleets they ſailed up into the River Humber; and from it into Ouſe, and landed at a place called Rickale, whence they marched to York, and took it after a fierce Aſſault. Harold upon notice having made due preparation haſtes into the North, but before him the two Earls, and Brothers, Edwin and Morkar, with conſiderable Forces had marched againſt them, and upon St. Matthew's Eve on the Northern bank of Ouſe at Fulford, ingaged them with good Succeſs at the beginning, for fighting very valiantly they did great Execution. But the Engliſh after a long fight, not able to ſuſtain the violence and Numbers of the Norwegians, turned their backs after many of them were ſlain, and more were drowned in the adjoyning River. This done, the Norwegians received from thoſe of York five Hundred Hoſtages, and leaving there an hundred and fifty of their own, returned to their ſhips; and on the fifth day after, being the five and twentieth of September, King Harold with a great Army comes to the City. Thence marching to a place called Stanford-bridge (afterward from this occaſion Battelbridge, upon the River Darwent in the Eaſt Riding of Yorkſhire) he gave them Battel, wherein after terrible reſiſtence made, were ſlain both Harold Harvager and Toſti, and the Victory remained with him. Olane the Son of Harold, with the Earl of Orcada called Paul who were left with the Army to keep the ſhips he ſuffered to depart with twenty Veſſels, and the remainder of their Forces, having firſt received their Oaths and Hoſtages to attempt nothing againſt him for the time to come. But here we are to take notice what Malmeſbury tells us of a certain Norway Man, who alone by himſelf for ſome time retarded the Victory of the Engliſh, though methinks we can hardly believe it. This Man ſtanding upon the entrance of the Bridge, having killed not one, or two, or three, but many of his Enemies, hindred the whole Army from paſſing. Being ſpoke to to yield himſelf, and bid be aſſured that a Man of ſuch ſtrength and metal would find good uſage; he derided them, and with a grim countenance reviled them for pitifull Men that could not maſter him alone. At length none would come to him thinking it madneſs to Encounter with a Man ſo deſperate, but one at a diſtance ſhot him with a Dart, while like a Braggadocio he behaved himſelf negligently; and ſo he falling the Engliſh got paſſage, and obtained the Victory in the manner aforeſaid. The Body of Toſti being known by a Wart between his Shoulders, was carried to York and there Buried. In the Plunder of the Field if we may believe Adam Bremenſis,

But are both killed and their Armies.

ſo great a quantity of Gold was found, that twelve luſty young men were ſcarcely able to bear it on their Backs.

Harold diſobliges his Souldiers by taking all the Spoyl to himſelf.

32. Harold having obtained the Victory and ſo much Treaſure, became Penny wiſe, as the Proverb is, and Pound fooliſh. He thought it behoved him to play the Good Husband, not to be laviſh of his Money, but fill his Coffers, and lay up for future and diſtant Events. He little imagined that this great Gameſter was landed, and that he muſt now ſpeedily puſh for all. In the two laſt Battels he had loſt the flower of his Army, moſt of his beſt Souldiers were ſlain; and thoſe that remained he ſo diſobliged by taking all the Plunder to himſelf, and defrauding them as they alledged of the price of their bloud, that they renounced his Intereſt, repented of what they had done already for him, and reſolved, in caſe he ſhould have the like occaſion, to ſuffer him to fight for himſelf. This errour was no ſooner committed, but as he ſate feaſting for joy at York he had the News of the Norman Duke his Arrival with very numerous and Diſciplin'd Forces. And now he being to be ruined, his Fate hurried him to Reſolutions and Actions quite contrary to thoſe of him who was to raiſe himſelf out of his misfortune. As he had diſobliged theſe men who were to fight againſt Souldiers that loved and had been obliged by their Captain, ſo, whereas his Adverſary went ſoberly and judiciouſly to work, in making preparation for the main Encounter, he did nothing leſs. He neither took any care in gathering together his Souldiers, nor any time for Conſultation about ſo weighty an Affair, but all bloudy as he was, and with but a ſlender Company haſtes towards the place where the Normans lay, as if the fortune of Cæſar, onely to come to ſee, and then overcome, were devolved upon him, becauſe of his late Northern ſucceſs. Coming to London all in an Heat, he would not tarry for ſuch Supplies as were on their way toward him, but hurries into Suſſex, and would needs find out the Enemy and ingage e'er one third part of his Army could be put in order. Yet he ſent ſome Spies before to ſurvey the number and ſtrength of the Normans, whom being diſcovered (as Malmesbury writes) William cauſed to be led about the Camp, and after they had eat and drank plentifully to be ſent back to their Maſter. Being demanded how matters ſtood, they ſpake much of the Magnificence and Confidence of the Duke, and ſeriouſly profeſſed they believed, that well nigh all that were with him were Prieſts, becauſe they were ſhaven, not onely Face, but both the Lips; for at this time the Engliſh wore large Muſtachoes on the upper lip, a cuſtome which Julius Cæſar takes notice to have been amongſt the Ancient Britains. The King laughed and ſaid they were not Prieſts, but ſtout and couragious Souldiers, knowing well enough the Qualities of the Normans, with whom he himſelf had been but lately converſant. His Brother Gyrth a Youth of Courage and Knowledge above his years, at his extolling the valour of the Normans, took occaſion to tell him that he thought it was Indiſcretion for him to fight with them, foraſmuch as he could not deny but that either willingly or againſt his mind he had given William his Oath. He adviſed him to withdraw himſelf, and ſuffer him and the reſt to try their Fortune, who were never obnoxious by any Oath, and might juſtly fight in defence of their Countrey. If he ſhould fight it was to be feared he muſt either die or flie; but in caſe they did the ſame, he might either ſuccour and unite them flying or revenge their death.

Then hears of the Duke's Landing.

But acts without conſideration.

Simeon. Malmesb. Alii.

Prævolat igitur univerſos, exercet ſtimulos, nec de toto exercitu præter pauciſſimos eum aliquis Concomitatur. Ingulph. Perveniens citius Haſtingas, Collectaque illic aliquali popularium turba, confectaque ex iis acie adhuc rudi nimis & tenera, exercitum non expectat, ſed fatis urgentibus contra Comitem in craſtino dimicat & fortiſſime tota die uſque ad veſperum invictus perdurans ac ſæpius more gregarii militis manu ad manum congrediens cum adverſariis robuſtiſſime digladians à dextris & à ſiniſtris, corruit tandem in diei crepuſculo, in quodam ubi ſuos collegerat, monticulo eminus ſagittatus. Idem.

Rejects all good advice, and the Propoſals of Duke William.

They prepare for Battel.

33. Harold by no means would hearken to his Advice, as that which tended to his diſhonour, and by objection of Cowardiſe would blemiſh the Actions of all his Life. And in as great heat and haſte he rejected the Monk who brought him three Propoſals from the Duke, " Either to reſign the Kingdom to him, according " to what had formerly paſſed betwixt them: or to hold it of him: or to decide " the Controverſie with him before the two Armies in a ſingle Combat, to prevent " the Effuſion of Chriſtian Bloud. His Anſwer was, that God ſhould be Judge betwixt them; or as others write, that the Swords of the Nations ſhould decide it. No hopes then of any Accommodation appearing, each according to the cuſtome of his Countrey prepared to fight the next Morning. The Engliſh are ſaid to have ſpent all the Night in Singing and Drinking, the Normans in Confeſſion of their Sins, and in the Morning to have Communicated. The Fatal day being come, which was the two and twentieth of October, the Engliſh were drawn up into a cloſe Body armed with Battel-Axes and Shields, and by the Standard ſtood the King on foot with his Brothers, that the danger being common, none might think of running away. The forefront of the Normans conſiſted of Foot, being moſt Archers, and flancked with a Wing of Horſe on each hand, wherein conſiſted the great ſtrength of their Army. The Duke himſelf chearfully and audibly affirmed his Cauſe was juſt, and that God would accordingly reſpect it, and called for his Armour, which being brought to him in an hurry, his Corſlet was put on the wrong way, which errour he corrected by this pleaſant Conceit, that He perceived his Dukedom was changed into a Kingdom. At the Head of his Army he put them in mind of the Valour and Renown of their Anceſtours, and eſpecially of Rollo, how they had beaten the French King in the very Heart of his Kingdom, and compelled him to give them as large a part of his Countrey as they would accept. How ſince that they had taken another French King Priſoner at Rouen, and compelled him to reſtore Normandy to Duke Richard when a Child, and laſt of all he brought to their Memories what memorable things they had done under his own Conduct, and concluded with confidence of Victory both from the guilt of Harold who had wilfully Perjured himſelf, and of the whole Nation, upon which he caſt the cruel and traitorous Murther of his Kinſman and their own Prince Alfred.

34. The Normans then beginning the Song of Rowland by the Martial Example of that Heroe, as they accounted him, to excite themſelves to imitation, and imploring Divine Aſſiſtence went againſt the Engliſh, who were as ready to meet them, though the ground they ſtood on was ſtrait and inconvenient for fight; which as Simeon writes, cauſed many of them to take the opportunity of ſlipping away. Thoſe that ſtaid to be ſure fought very valiantly, and neither by the ſhowers of Arrows nor any other means could their Impenetrable Body be broken, till William bethought him of this Strategem, to cauſe his Men to retire back as if they fled, which by a deſire of Purſuit drew them out of their order; this done, they faced about and fell upon them, who by this means had half routed themſelves. Yet in their flight did they often rally and make Head againſt the Purſuers, ſelling their Lives at very dear Rates, and part of them having got an Hill, when the Normans all in a heat climbed up after them, having the advantage of the ground they tumbled them down, and by caſting down Stones quite overpowered them. In another place by their knowledge of the Countrey, being more dextrous in paſſing a Ditch, they made very great ſlaughter of their Enemies, and filled it up with their dead Carkaſſes. Thus remained the ſucceſs doubtfull, ſometimes ſeeming to incline to the one ſide and ſometimes to the other, from nine of the Clock in the Morning, till it grew dark, and then Harold after he had diſcharged all the Parts both of a ſkilfull Commander and a valiant Souldier was ſhot into the Head and died. He being gone, about whom the Controverſie was, though their Countrey was as much concerned, the Engliſh Souldiers began to looſe their Courage and take the advantage of the Night to flie. With him fell his two Brothers Gyrth and Leofwin and the greateſt part of the Engliſh Nobility. William hereby remained Victour, who by his Courage and Activity deſerved the Garland, having ſo beſtirred himſelf all the day, and ventur'd his perſon, that three choice Horſes one after another were killed under him. Toward his dead Enemy he ſhewed himſelf generous, freely and without Ranſome giving up his Body to his Mother, though ſhe offered much Money for it; and, before that, when, as it lay in the Field, a certain Souldier by way of Contempt and Revenge gave it a cut in the Thigh, he was ſo diſpleaſed with the man, that he inſtantly caſheir'd him the Army, for doing ſo pityfull and Cowardly a Deed.

Wherein Harold is ſlain, and his Army routed.

35. Harold by his Mothers care was buried at Waltham in a Church of Canons founded and endowed by himſelf. When the News of his Defeat was ſpread abroad, the two Earles Edwin and Morgan who had upon diſcontent withdrawn themſelves from him came to London, and ſending away their Siſter Algitha the Queen to Cheſter, they tampered with the Citizens to make one of them King, but found them very cool in the buſineſs, for as in duty they were concern'd, their Inclinations were toward Edgar Etheling, and with them joyned Aldred the Archbiſhop of York and many of the Nobility. Hereupon the two Earls went away in diſcontent into Northumberland, where they thought Duke William would not come, not caring what became of the Cauſe of Edgar or of their own Countrey, becauſe their ambitious purpoſes were not gratified. The Conquerour having ſetled his matters about Haſtings, made not firſt to London, and afterwards went back into Kent (as Spot the Abbat of St. Auguſtin's in Canterbury, and others following him, have erroneouſly written, and thereupon told a Tale of the Kentiſh men their meeting him with Boughs, and procuring from him a Confirmation of their Privileges) but took his Journey toward Dover Caſtle, which he and many others long time after eſteemed as the very Key of England. In his paſſage by Romney Marſh he avenged himſelf of ſome Savage kind of People dwelling thereabout, who had killed ſome of his men that by miſtake had landed at that place. To the Caſtle Multitudes of People had betaken themſelves becauſe it was held impregnable, yet affrighted at his preſence they ſtreight way ſurrendred it, in the fortifying whereof he ſpent eight days, and then proceeding Northward at a place not far diſtant the Kentiſh men of their own Accord came in to him, ſware fealty to him and gave up their Hoſtages for performance. Continuing then his March he underſtood what canvaſing there was at London betwixt the two Earls and thoſe that ſtood for Edgar Etheling, whereupon he made toward them and ſate down not far from the City. Thence certain Companies iſſued out againſt him, but with five hundred Horſe he eaſily repelled them, killing divers in the Chace, and here began the miſery of poor England. The Duke ſeem'd reſolv'd before this to carry himſelf with all gentleneſs (at leaſt ſome ſo believe) and bring over the Engliſh by kind uſage, but ſeeing they made head againſt him, and put him to farther trouble and danger, he changed his purpoſe reſolving to make an abſolute Conqueſt of the Land. For upon this Sally all the Buildings South of the Thames he commanded or permitted to be fired.

Then Dover is ſurrendred to the Conquerour. And the Kentiſh men ſubmit.

Guil. Pictavenſis Guil. Ducis Cappellanus in ejus Geſtis & Ordericus Vitalis. Hiſt. Eccleſ. Lib. 3.

36. Paſſing the Thames he removed to Wallingford, whither Stigand the Archbiſhop, and others of the Engliſh Nobility, confounded in their Deſigns, and not knowing what other courſe to take, came to him deſerting young Edgar; as alſo did the Londoners, who giving up themſelves into his Power, delivered ſuch and ſo many Hoſtages as he thought convenient. Thence by degrees he came to London, permitting his men all the while to doe as in an Enemies Countrey with Fire and Sword, and on Chriſtmas day was Crowned King at Weſtminſter by Aldred the Archbiſhop of York, for againſt Stigand of Canterbury objection was made, that he did not legally hold that Place, nor had rightly taken his Pall. Before the Crown was ſet on his Head, he gave his Oath at the Altar, in preſence of the Nobility and all the People, to protect the Church in its Rights and Liberties, to govern the People according to Law and Juſtice, to maintain them in their Rights, and protect them from Spoil and Rapine. Here is our Period. For having ſet him on the Throne, the Diſcourſe of his Life, and how by Particulars he either governed according or contrary to his Oath, whether he that had made ſuch a noiſe with the Perjury of Harold, had not ever a ſpecial care not to be guilty of that horrid Crime, belongs to a Treatiſe of the New Dynaſty of the Normans. Yet ſhall we, though we have no full proſpect, admit the Reader to look as it were through the Curtain, and ſee a little how he acted his Part of King over his new Subjects, by the aſſiſtence of Ingulphus, who was himſelf a prime Spectatour, if not a ſort of Actour, being preferred to be Abbat of Croyland, and otherwiſe much favoured by him. Having inſtanced in ſeveral Noblemen, whom either he had Impriſoned or Baniſhed, he adds, That the Earldoms, Baronies, Biſhopricks, and the Preferments of all the Land he diſtributed to his Normans, and ſcarce admitted any Engliſhman to any State of Honour or Power. Nay, they ſo abominated the Engliſh, that how deſerving ſoever they were, they were outed of all Preferments : And Strangers leſs fit by far, of any Nation under Heaven, were admitted gratis into their places. How they abominated and altered their Language and Cuſtoms, it's not convenient here to inſiſt. Almoſt all the Kentiſh Lands he ſeized, as well as thoſe of other Provinces; Church Lands were every where devoured, and all things belonging to the Engliſh became Prey and Booty.

Then the Londoners.

Duke William Crowned King at Weſtminſter.

Coronationis autem Officium noluit ab Archiep. Stigando percipere (cujus dignitati ſolebat illud Officium ex debito pertinere) eo quod ab Apoſtolico Papa illum Calumniatum audierat ſuum palleum non ſumpſiſſe Canonieé. Ingulph.

But neglects his Coronation Oath.

Deinceps ergo Comitatus & Baronias, Epiſcopatus, & Prælatias totius terræ ſuis Normannis Rex diſtribuit & vix aliquem Anglicum ad honoris ſtatum vel alicujus dominii principatum aſcendere permiſit. ——Tantum tunc Anglicos abominati ſunt ut quantocunque merito pollerent, de dignitatibus pellerentur; & multo minus habiles alienigenæ de quacunque alia Natione quæ ſub cœlo eſt, extitiſſent, gratanter aſſumerentur. Gervaſius Dorobern.

37. But here it may juſtly be ſaid, that the Engliſh were the forgers of their own Fortune; all theſe miſchiefs having come upon them through their own Egregious folly and neglect. So they behaved themſelves as if they had a deſire to be inſlaved by thoſe whom they did ſo much admire, but onely imitated in what was worſt; and being ſo ſet for their own deſtruction, deſtiny put to her helping hand. For how ſtrangely, how like an harebrain'd Man did Harold in this buſineſs behave himſelf; how contrary to his former wiſedom and conduct? He being really a Man for all accompliſhments, very well worthy of a Crown. He could not but know that William would invade him the next year, if he came not this, and yet he muſt diſoblige his Souldiers, and that by a dirty action of taking all the Booty to himſelf, a folly of which at another time he could ſcarcely have been guilty. Then doth he amend one errour by another, hurries away againſt the Enemy, that he knew muſt be both reſolved and deſperate; that muſt be fully bent either to conquer, or dye, being penned in by a deep Ditch, the Bridge over which he himſelf had broken down. Without ſtaying but a day or two for ſupplies, he haſtes away as one who had deſigned firſt to fight with a diſobliged Army, and then with no Army at all, alone, and in his own Perſon. The Battel ſhewed it was not Courage but Conduct, that the Engliſh wanted, if ſo few ſtood it out, and that upon even terms with the Normans, till their Captain fell, how eaſie would the Victory have been, had he uſed any moderate care in his management? Then after his death, how eaſily might this loſs have been repaired? Though many of the Nobility fell, and many Souldiers, yet theſe Souldiers were but ſuch as he picked up as he could, the ſtrength of the Nation was not much more impared, than after the Northern expedition; for Ingulphus writes expreſly, that he flew away to Haſtings, not ſtaying for the Army. Such Forces as were coming up to Harold, with thoſe of Edwin and Morkar, would have been ſufficient, or might have been filled up with ſuch numbers (all willingly giving in their Names at ſuch a time as this) as might have made the Norman repent he had burnt his Ships, for all his late ſucceſs he obtained in Suſſex. His expedition was not ſo quick, nor his march ſo in haſte, but they had time enough to unite. Nay, he ſo carried himſelf in this, as if he had a mind they ſhould reinforce themſelves; for his beſt way had been to march directly for London, to diſſipate all Forces, and hinder the forming of new Armies, for being every where Maſter of the Field, Forts and Caſtles muſt have come in of themſelves, being of no great value in thoſe days, as appeared by the large ſwinge the Danes took throughout the Land, without any conſiderable let or interruption from Caſtles, notwithſtanding all the Fortreſſes ſaid to be raiſed, or repaired, by Edward the Elder and his Siſter. But inſtead of preparation for driving away the common Enemy, they become Enemies one to another, and ſtand in competition for that Crown which he had already got, on the point of his Sword, though not on his Head. Theſe were prodigious miſcarriages, not incident to any that had reaſon about them, but abſolute effects of ſuch vitious tempers as infatuate Mens minds, and enervate the Powers of their Souls, both effects and ſigns, and carrying the puniſhments along with them, of ſome notable extravagances, of which, not onely particular Families, but even the whole Nation it ſelf was guilty.

Several miſcarriages of Harold and the Engliſh.

Exercitum non expectat.

A general character of the Engliſh.

38. And that the Engliſh were now guilty of ſuch extravagances, as ever forerun ſuch Calamities and Revolutions, as by debauching their minds, render them abject, pitifull, and fit for ſlavery, we have but too good Teſtimony to aſſure us. The Monk of Malmesbury, who being of Engliſh Deſcent, as well as Norman, profeſſes he had no prejudice to either Nation, and we may take his word, the courſe of his writing making no ſhew of the contrary, taking a view of their manners from their firſt entering and planting in the Iſland, obſerves that they were various. "At their firſt coming, their geſture and look was altogether barbarous, and they were wholly given to War as long as they continued Pagans. When they had once received Chriſtian Religion, they applied themſelves in a manner wholly to it, giving to Arms but the ſecond place; and here he inſtances in Rich and Poor, Eccleſiaſticks and Seculars, Kings, Biſhops, Hermites and Abbats, not one Nation indeed being able to vye with this in that reſpect. But the ſtudy of Learning and Religion were grown quite out of faſhion, in the foregoing Age, not a few years before the coming of the Normans. The Clergy contenting themſelves with a trifling kind of literature, ſcarcely able to pronounce the words belonging to their ſeveral Services. He that underſtood Grammar, was a wonder, and Matter of aſtoniſhment to the reſt. The Monks went fairly clad, and obſerved not the Rules of their Orders, as to Meat and Drink. The Nobles were given over to Gluttony and Luſt, not going to Church in the Morning as Chriſtians ought to doe. The common People was expoſed as a Prey to the great ones, both in their Perſons and Eſtates, many having got their Women Servants with Child, when they had ſatisfied their luſt, turned them over either to the common Brothel Houſes, or kept them perpetually in that courſe of ſlavery. They were univerſally given to Drunkenneſs, ſpending night and day in Tipling, making great chear, and being at great “ expence in their mean and pitifull Houſes, of a quite contrary diſpoſition to the “ Normans in this reſpect, who in fair and ſtately Houſes lived very thriftily. And Drunkenneſs was accompanied with the uſual Vices which debauch and render effeminate the minds of Men.

39. Hence came it to paſs, that rather carried headlong with temerity and fury, than any true skill they had in War, they ingaged with Duke William, and by looſing the day, inſlaved both themſelves and Countrey. In Sum, the Engliſh then wore their Clothes ſhort, cut their Hair, ſhaved their Faces, (all, he means, but their upper Lip) loaded their Armes with golden Bracelets, marked their Skin with divers Images, would Eat till they ſurfeited, and Drink till they vomited, which laſt Vices they communicated to the Conquerours, in all things elſe taking up, and admiring their Modes. But this he would not have underſtood of all, but of the Engliſh in general; foraſmuch as to his knowledge there were many good Men, both amongſt Clergy and Laity. But, ſaith he, as in times of proſperity, the goodneſs of God moſt commonly cheriſhes the bad with the good, ſo in the Captivity of a Nation, ſometimes his ſeverity involves the good in the ſame Calamities with the bad. They had formerly, as Ingulphus aſſures us, run out of themſelves, and become French, by idoliſing and imitating the Normans, in all that was light and trivial; now they muſt ſerve whom before they ador'd. Thoſe that were ſo enamoured of all things that were French, that they would wiſh rather to be ſerved by a French Dog, than an Engliſh Man, now had the privilege to be called and uſed as Dogs, by their late Lacquies, upon whom, out of the influence of their former affection, it's to be preſumed, that like Spaniels, they more fawned the more they beat them. And ſuch Women as raviſhed with the Perſons, and deportment of their French Gueſts, would flock to ſtare at and admire them even at the Gallows, or when they were Arraigned or led to Execution, now might ſtay at home and ſave their pains, might view and ſatisfie themſelves with that contenting ſight, while they beheld them knocking on the Head, or hanging up their dull Engliſh Husbands, Sons or Brothers, at their own Doors. But no more of this diſmal Subject. Onely, Reader, remember that the ſame Cauſes ordinarily produce the ſame Effects. We will diſmiſs our Engliſh Saxon Anceſtors with what is more comfortable; by taking a view of their Polity, their Laws, and better Cuſtoms.

Who are admirers of the French.

Who are now come to ſettle their fancy.

Verum ſicut in tranquillitate malos cum bonis fovet plerumq; Dei ſerenitas, ita in Captivitate bonos cum malis nonnunquam ejuſdem conſtringit ſeveritas. De Willielmo primo, lib. 3. p. 102. Edit. Savilianæ.

Ut quaſi per tranſennam videas quàm tyrannicè & crudeliter Normanni Anglos tractaverint pete Ingulphi Hiſtoriam, & eam partem conſule quæ de Yuone Talbois tractat. Nam hæc non pertinent ad hoc noſtrum volumen.

The Government Monarchical.

And Arbitrary as by Conquerours.

40. To begin at the top. From the courſe of this Hiſtory, the Reader will obſerve that the Government was Monarchical, and that not onely in reſpect of the particular Kingdoms during the Heptarchy, which had their peculiar Kings, but even of the whole Body of the Nation, which was uſually Commanded by one of the ſeven, of all which Beda takes notice till his time, and Egbert more effectually than any of them completed the Deſign, leaving his Poſterity in poſſeſſion of that Power, which brought the Sovereignty to the Houſe of the Weſt Saxon Kings, that which none of the other could accompliſh as to their Families. The nature of the Monarchy we muſt believe at the firſt followed the condition of the Tenure, abſolute Conqueſts and Territories, both got and held by the Sword alone, uſually producing abſolute Governments, which many times either by reaſon of the infirm Foundations laid by the Conquerours themſelves, the humour of the People not enduring ſuch ſubjection, or other accidents, change into more moderate and leſs Arbitrary. That Hengiſt, Ælla and the other Captains, when they firſt erected their Dominations, Governed their Souldiers, whom now being Kings they called Subjects, with as great Authority, and as full Command as formerly, we little doubt. The Polity and Frame of their Governments for a long time could not be very Poliſht; Laws and ſetled Orders having little to doe amongſt Arms and Confuſion, and with Arms they were wholly taken up, Conquering by dint of Sword every foot of ground they called theirs, generally throughout the Countrey, which having by main ſtrength, and after much contention and tuging on both ſides, wreſted out of the hands of the Owners, they were afterwards as buſie in defending it, as well from the Incroachments and Rapines of one another, as the Re-entries of its former Maſters. Therefore till the time of Ethelbert the firſt Chriſtian King, hear we nothing of Laws, they having been formerly Governed by common Rules of natural Prudence, according to the Exigency of Affairs, and the nature of Circumſtances, or ſuch Cuſtoms as they brought along with them from their own Countries.

Then Laws are enacted.

41. After

By what Titles the Kings ſtyled themſelves.

The Queen.

41. After that their Kings became Chriſtian, they ſtyled themſelves ſuch, (in the Singular Number, I, though the Plural in King Edgar's days was given to ſingle Perſons) By Divine Diſpenſation, By (a) the Mercy of God, By (b) Divine Diſpoſition, and By (c) the Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or ſuch like, though ſome of them omitted ſuch Expreſſions, writing onely themſelves Kings of ſuch a Countrey. The other ſix Kingdoms being brought under that of the Weſt Saxons, the Welſh and Scots became alſo tributary, or acknowledged ſuch Subjection, that Eadred the Son of Edward the Elder, A. D. 948. ſtyled himſelf King (d) of Great Britain. After him Edgar took the Title of Monarch (e) of all Great Britain, and King (f) of Great Britain, and King (g) of all Albion, as alſo of the (h) Maritime or Kings of the Iſlands, and of King of Albion and the (i) Neighbouring Kings, in which Titles he acknowledged the very large Munificence of Almighty God, in that he was advanced above all his Progenitours. The reaſon of theſe high Titles, may be fetch'd from what we have written of his being waited on, and rowed in a Boat by Eight Petty Kings or Princes, amongſt whom is found Maccuſe King of the Iſles, for Edgar is ſaid to have been Lord of all the Iſlands, as far as Norway. But this Dominion of the Northern Iſles continued not long, but as with Edgar the Grandeur and Felicity of the Engliſh Monarchy, ſo this large Title fell with him, not extending it ſelf to the Orcades, which as both Giraldus Cambrenſis and others affirm anciently were ſubject to the Kings of Norway, with one of whom, viz. Harold Harvager, as we have lately ſeen, Paul the Earl of Orcades came and fought againſt our King Harold, the Son of Godwin. Yet though they might not uſe the Titles, did many of the ſucceeding Kings hold both Wales and Scotland in Subjection. The Engliſh Saxon King whom they termed Cyninᵹ, and contractedly at laſt Cynᵹ, (as we now do the Saxon Language not knowing K) had Sovereign Power and Rights of Majeſty, made Laws, raiſed Money, and had power of Life and Death, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. The Wife of the King they called Cƿen, as we at preſent Queen, and ſhe was Partaker with her Husband though not in Sovereignty, yet in Reſpect and Honour, till by reaſon of the pragmatical Carriage of Eadburga, the Daughter of Offa, and Wife to Birtric, this Cuſtome common to all Nations was interrupted in the Royal Palace of the Weſt Saxons, where the Wives of the Kings were not ſuffered to ſit by them, nor to enjoy the Title of Queen, till this Decree was repealed by King Ethelwulf, though with much trouble in favour of his Queen Judith the French Lady. The King's Son or the Heir to the Crown was called Etheling, in Latin they termed him Clito, (ſignifying the ſame, as Cæſar, Princeps Juventutis or Nobiliſſimus Cæſar, amongſt the Romans) though theſe Names were in a manner given to all of the Bloud-Royal, whom Hoveden in a diminutive way calls Clitunculi. The Eldeſt by the Prerogative of his Age challenged juſtly the Title of King after his Father's death, but the Reader in peruſal of this Hiſtory may take notice how often this Courſe was changed, when either force prevailed, a former agreement had paſſed, or the next and immediate Heir was but a Child.

The King's Heir and other Sons.

Topograph. Hiberniæ Diſt. 2. c. 11. cui adde Ordericum Vitalem in Ecleſ. Hiſt. lib. 10. & Chronicon Roberti de Monte continuat. Chronic. Sigeberti ad Ann. 1167.

(a) Ita Ethelbaldus Rex Merciorum in Chirographo quod extat apud Ingulphum.

(b) Sic Kenulphus Rex Merciorum.

(c) Ita Witlaſius. Ibid. & Beonedus.

(d) Ego Edredus Rex terrenus ſub Imperiali potentia Regis Sæculorum æterníq; Principis magnæ Britanniæ temporale gerens Imperium.

(e) Ego Edgarus ejuſdem Dei noſtri largifluæ Munificentiæ poſſidens totius magnæ Britanniæ Monarchiam. A. D. 996.

(f) Ego Edgarus ſub ipſo ſydereo Rege præſidens Regno magnæ Britanniæ. A. D. 970.

(g) Ego Edgarus totius Albionis baſileus

(h) Ego Edgarus totius Albionis baſileus nec non maritimorum ſeu inſulanorum Regum habitantium, adeò ut nullius progenitorum ſubjectione largiflua Dei gratia ſuppetente ſim ſublimatus. A. D. 974.

(i) Ego Edgarus totius Albionis finitimorúmque Regum baſileus.

Two ſorts of Councils.

The great Aſſembly or Council for governing the Nation.

42. Of all the Inſtruments by which the Kings governed, their Principal were their Councils. Of theſe they had two ſorts, viz. their Ordinary or Domeſtick, conſiſting of Domeſticks, or ſuch as were near their Perſons; or Extraordinary; which was the Great Aſſembly or Council held for determining the great and urgent Affairs of the Kingdom. This was called ƿitenaᵹemote, or the Aſſembly of Wiſemen, and conſiſted of the Prelates and Noblemen, or chief Magiſtrates of the Kingdom. Hereof, beſides what the Laws of Princes ſpeak, we have ample Teſtimony from ſeveral Charters of Kings, as well in the ſeveral petty Kingdoms during the Heptarchy, as after it came fully to be reduced into one Monarchy. Bertulph the King of the Mercians in a Charter, wherein he confirms the Revenues and Privileges of the Monaſtery of Croyland, ſignifies that the Monaſtery had exhibited their complaint before the (a) Prelates and Nobles of his whole Realm of

(a) Propoſita ergo tali querela veſtra per Fratrem Askillum Commonachum veſtrum palam coram prælatis & proceribus totius Regni mei Merciæ apud Beningdon ultimo congregatis. Omnibus tenerrimè compatientibus—placuit; apud Ingulphum, p. 858. Edit. Francofurti.

Mercia, the laſt time aſſembled at Beningdon, all who tenderly compaſſionated them for the Injuries they had received, and having conſidered and commended the Accurateneſs of their Religion, it pleaſed them all by this King's Inſtrument to confirm and inlarge all their Privileges formerly granted to them by his Brother Withlaf. Wherefore with (b) the common Council of his whole Kingdom, he grants ſuch and ſuch things; again, he grants with (c) the Common Council and free conſent of all the Great Men of his Kingdom. And conſenting (d) all his Prelates and Noblemen. And that it (e) unanimouſly pleaſed him and his whole Council. Afterward in the ſame Charter he ſignifies, that their Poſſeſſion was in an eſpecial manner appropriated to theſe Religious Men, by the (f) Common Council of the Kingdom. And at length concludes in this manner, Therefore (g) with the unanimous Conſent of the whole preſent Council here aſſembled at Kingeſbury, in the year of the Incarnation of our Lord Chriſt 851, the ſixth Day in Eaſter-week, for the Affairs of the Kingdom, this my Royal writing I have confirmed firmly, and immutably with the ſign of the Holy Croſs. This abundantly ſhews of whom the Great Council conſiſted which was held in Mercia for the publick Affairs of the Kingdom. At this time the King of Mercia was tributary to him of the Weſt Saxons, which was Ethelwulf, as appears though ſeveral other ways by Oſlat his Butler, who being preſent at the ſigning of the Charter witneſſeth to it in this form. I Oſlat the Butler of King Ethelwulf, and the Ambaſſadour of him my Lord, and of his Sons in their Names, and the Name of all the Weſt Saxons have commended this writing of the Lord King Bertulph. His being preſent at this Aſſembly, and ſigning in the Name of King Ethelwulf of his Sons, and all the Weſt Saxons, ſeems to hint this to us, that though theſe Tributary Princes as Kings held the Aſſemblies of their Kingdoms, and therein made Laws, and otherwiſe diſpatched their great Affairs, yet in acknowledgement of the Sovereignty of the Kings of the Weſt Saxons, who now in effect were Monarchs over all, things were not ratified, but by the conſent of the ſaid Weſt Saxon Kings, expreſſed by their Ambaſſadours ſent on purpoſe.

Ego Oſlat pincerna Regis Ethelwulfi & Legatus ipſius Domini mei & filiorum ſuorum nomine illorum & omnium Weſt-ſaxonum iſtud Chirographum Domini Bertulphi Regis plurimum Commendavi. p. 861.

43. When the whole Power was transferred upon the Weſt Saxon Kings, and they were become Monarchs of the Engliſh under them, alſo ſuch Aſſemblies were held of the whole Nation, conſiſting of the ſame ſorts of Perſons. As to goe no farther than Ingulphus, Edred who ſtyled himſelf Monarch of Great Britain, by his Edict ſummoned all the Great (b) Men of his Realm, as well Archbiſhops, Biſhops and Abbats as the reſt of the Nobles of his whole Kingdom to meet at London, to handle the publick Affairs of the whole Realm. Here we ſee they were aſſembled by the King's Edict, not by ſending to them all in particular, but by the way of Proclamation. Their meeting was timed according to the Exigency of Affairs, as that notable Council held at London, A. D. 833. under (c) Egbert for ſuppreſſion of the Daniſh Pirates, which continually infeſted the Sea-coaſts, at which were preſent the ſaid Egbert, Ethelwulf his Son, Withlaf King of Mercia, with the Prelates and the greater Noblemen of all England. Yet it is obſervable that their buſineſs giving them leave, they would ſtay for ſome remarkable day or time. As this Council was held on the Feaſt of St. Auguſtine the Confeſſour, Doctour and Apoſtle of our Nation as the Charter hath it, meaning Auguſtine, the Monk, ſent over to convert the Engliſh Nation by Gregory the Great, whoſe Feſtival was held in great eſteem upon that account. The Councils held in Bertulph's time, and formerly mentioned by us, aſſembled at Eaſter, and indeed this ſeems to have been the time chiefly reſpected when the occaſion was not urgent and preſſing, becauſe the ſeaſon being convenient for Travel, this Feſtival in thoſe days was wont by Princes more magnificently to be obſerved, and their Courts now were wont to be more full of the Nobility, who uſually waited upon Kings at the Celebration of it, Whitſuntide and Chriſtmaſs, but eſpecially of it, as appears from what we reade of Charles the Great, and as we ſee by the Letter of King Canute written to his Subjects from Rome, the Princes of Italy flocked to that City to celebrate together with the Pope that Holy Feaſt. Of courſe therefore coming to Court, at that time it was moſt convenient to hold the Aſſembly, Eaſter, Whitſuntide

and

Summoned by Edict or Proclamation upon extraordinary occaſion.

Ordinarily at Eaſter, Whitſuntide and Chriſtmaſs.

(b) Cum commiui concilio totius Regni mei concedo.

(c) Cum communi concilio gratuitóque conſenſu omnium magnatum Regni mei concedo.

(d) Conſentientibus omnibus prælatis & proceribus meis.

(e) Complacuit unanimiter mihi & univerſo concilio. p. 859.

(f) Et Poſſeſſio viris Religioſis communi Regni concilio ſpecialiter appropriata. p. 860.

(g) Cùm ergò unanimi conſenſu totius præſentis concilii hic apud Kingsbury anno Incarnationis Chriſti Domini 851 feria ſexta, in Hebdomada Paſchæ pro Regni negotiis congregati, iſtud meum Regium Chirographum ſanctæ crucis ſigno ſtabiliter & immutabiliter confirmavi. p. 861.

(b) In Feſto ergo Nativitatis B. Mariæ cum univerſi magnates Regni per Regium Edictum ſummoniti, tam Archiepiſcopi quam Epiſcopi ac Abbates, quam cæteri totius Regni proceres & optimates Londoniæ conveniſſent ad tractandum de negotiis publicis totius Regni. p. 874.

(c) In præſentia Dominorum meorum Egberti Regis Weſtſaxoniæ & Ethelwulfi filii ejus coram pontificibus & proceribus majoribus totius Angliæ in civitate Londoniæ ubi omnes congregati ſumus pro concilio capiendo contra Danicos piratus littora Angliæ aſſiduè infeſtantes. Sic ſcribit Withlafius Rex Merciorum apud Ingulphum. p. 857.

and Chriſtmaſs, were the ordinary times for holding theſe great Councils. Yet that Aſſembly ſummoned by King Edred, was held on the Feaſt of the Nativity of the Bleſſed Virgin.

44. We have heard that theſe Great Councils conſiſted of Prelates and Noblemen, expreſſed by theſe Latin words, Proceres, Magnates and Optimates, (not the leaſt mention of any of the Common People being made) but for a better underſtanding of the thing in hand, we muſt know what they called them in their own Language. Here to fetch the matter as high as we can, we ſhall betake our ſelves to the Laws of King Ina, the firſt of any Engliſh Saxon King now certainly extant, who tells us that he compoſed them by the counſel and advice of his Father Ceured, of Hedda and Erkenwald his Biſhops, and all his Aldermen, and the Eldeſt Wiſe Men of his Nation, and alſo in a great Aſſembly of the Servants of God: of Biſhops there is no doubt. As for Aldermen the Latin Tranſlatour terms it Senators, but this leaves us in as great obſcurity. Firſt then, the word Ealdorman was ſo general as to ſignifie and comprehend all that were eminent either in reſpect of their Dignity or their Offices, all Reguli, Subreguli, Princes, Dukes, Earls, and all ſorts of Magiſtrates. But ſuch of them muſt be here meant as muſt correſpond with what follows, viz. the * Wiſe Elders; and ſuch as may be called Magnates, Optimates and Proceres, for ſuch they are ſtyled in General in the forementioned Charters. Thoſe therefore whom Writers in Latin call Duces and Comites were Dukes and Earls, they ſtyled by the Name of Aldermen, as is notorious to any one who hath the leaſt converſed with Saxon Authours: in King Alfred's Tranſlation of Beda, and in the Annals nothing more ordinary. Any eminent Judge alſo or Juſticiary was alſo known by the word Alderman. But more particularly we meet with the Alderman of England, for ſo was Ailwin ſtyled, as appeared by his † Epitaph in the Church of Ramſey which he himſelf Founded. Now by this Title what elſe can be meant than him whom following times called The Chief Juſtice of all England, we cannot deviſe, for that Ailwin was a Judge is || evident enough, and that being the Younger Son of Athelſtan Duke of the Eaſt Angles, from his Birth he could have no ſuch Title. There was another called the King's Alderman, either for that he was conſtituted immediately by the King, or becauſe he adminiſtred the King's Juſtice, and he ſeems to have been ordained for a time as occaſion ſerved. Then was there the Alderman of the Shire, or the Schireman, viz. he whom they called in Latin Comes, as the Shire it ſelf Comitatus. Or it ſeems rather to ſignifie the Judge of the County skilled in the Laws, the Deputy as it were of him whom they called Eorl, (like as the Salii had two or three Judges under the Count, whom they called Sagibarones) and joined by the Laws with the Biſhop of the Dioceſs both as to Dignity and the joint execution of their Offices in the meeting of the Countrey which they called Folcmote.

Who were called to this Great Aſſembly.

Ic Inemid Godes gife ƿest seaxna Cyning mid geþeaht ⁊ mid lære Cenredes mines fæder ⁊ Heddes mines biſceopes ⁊ Ercenƿoldes mines biſceopes ⁊ mid eallum minum ealdormannum ⁊ ðam ýldestan ƿitan minre Ðeode ⁊ eac mýcelre somnunge Godes Ðeoƿena.

*Ealdormen quaſi Seniores, non propter Senectutem, ſed propter ſapientiam. Ita invenias in Edwardi. c. 35. Reſpondent itaque Presbyteris.

† Hic requieſcit D. Ailwinus inclyti Regis Eadgari Cognatus, totius Angliæ Aldermannus & hujus ſacri Cœnobii miraculoſus fundator.

|| Ex libro Rames. ſect. 49. vide Gloſſar. Spelman. in voc. Aldermanus.

45. That the Eorle or Earl was diſtinct from this Alderman appears from the Laws of King Æthelſtan, which in the valuation of Men equals the * Archbiſhop and the Earl, as alſo the Alderman and the Biſhop, ſetting the Heads of the former at fifteen thouſand Thrymſes, and thoſe of the later but at eight thouſand, as the Head of him we call Vicecomes at four thouſand. Being thus joyned in valuation with the Biſhop, the Laws of both King Edgar and King Canute joyn them in the Folcmote or Meeting of the Shire, where they command that both be preſent; the Alderman to teach the People their Duty as to this World, and the Biſhop to inſtruct them in reference to that to come, as the Office of the Earl was to protect the Shire; ſo that the Office of the Earl reſpected the Political Government and Defence, that of the Alderman matter of Law, and that of the Biſhop things concerning Religion. But both as we ſaid, the Earl and Judge in general expreſſion were called Aldermen, eſpecially before the Danes came to ſettle in England. For the word Eorla is of Daniſh Original, as witneſſeth † Ethelwerd the Hiſtorian, and after the Engliſh received it, beſtowed it upon the Superiour ſort of Aldermen, whom the Laws (as we have ſaid) ranked with an Archbiſhop, and to an Inferiour it is never found applied. After the coming in of the Normans the word was applied to him, whom the Dutch call a Grave, though Sir || Henry Spelman thinks that in the days of our Saxons it rather ſignified whom the Latin Writers called Dux, and Conſul as a general Name, than Comes, becauſe he whom the Law of Æthelſtan makes equal with the Biſhop was alſo called Comes. But it ſeems when our Saxon Anceſtours took the Name of Earl from the Danes, they took it quite away indeed, and robbed them of it. For now amongſt them there is no ſuch word, as neither Ear nor Ar (ſignifying

The Valuation and Office of Alderman, Biſhop and Earl.

* Ærcebiſciopes ⁊ Eorles ƿæregild bið xv M Ðrimsa Biſceopes ⁊ Ealdormannes viii M.

† Undecim conſules innuit quos illi (ſcil. Dani) Eorlas ſolent nominare. l. 4. c. 3.

|| Vid. Spelman. in voce.

Honour) from which it is derived. Yet do they uſe the Adjective Erlig, that is, Honoured, with which they are wont to ſubſcribe their Letters.

Erlig ock Well-byrdig man.
To the honoured and Nobleman.

46. But of ſuch Perſons did the Publick Aſſembly of the Nation conſiſt, viz. on the Lay part of Viceroys, Princes, Patritians, (which Title King Edgar gives to Turketule the Chancellour) Dukes, Earls, Counts, Prefects or Governours, and Hlafords, all who are comprized under the Name of Aldermen; and ſo alſo are Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbats, Prieſts and Monks on the part of the Clergy. Theſe were alſo the Wiſe Men and Elders which King Ina meant, for Seniours, Senatours, Elders and Aldermen are the ſame, and moreover thoſe of the Clergy are they whom he calls the Servants of God, this being an appellation in thoſe times peculiar to Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, a phraſe taken up by Biſhops, Prieſts and Monks, is notorious to any one but meanly converſant in the Monuments of thoſe Ages. All they are compriſed under the Name of the Servants of God, aſwell as the Lay Members of this Great Council under the Name of Aldermen, the Thanes onely excepted, who muſt be added to the former, as appears by ſeveral Subſcriptions both to Councils and Charters. Now * Thanes were of two ſorts, either † Eccleſiaſtical, or Secular. The Secular were alſo diſtinguiſhed into two ranks, whereof the Greater were in Degree next to Counts, (as Vavaſors were to them) being called the King's || Thanes as now are called the King's Barons. The other ſort were the leſſer * Thanes or under Thanes, being the ſame with the leſſer ſort of Barons, Lords of Manors, Vavaſors, and the like. In Latin they Subſcribed themſelves Miniſter, after thoſe who ſtyled themſelves Comites; and I little doubt but that the King's Thanes, or the Miniſtri Regis were meant hereby, though ſome of the lower ſort of Thanes might occaſionally be called to the Council as there was occaſion to employ them, as by ſome Subſcriptions we find not onely the Queen, but Abbeſſes, Prieſts and Monks to have been preſent. But as to any Repreſentatives of the Common People, we muſt profeſs as doth † Sir Henry Spelman, that we can find no ſuch in theſe Greateſt Councils of our Saxon Anceſtours.

The Laity compriſed under the Name of Alderman. The Clergy called the Servants of God.

Thanes.

But no Repreſentatives of the Commonalty.

* Saxonicè Ðeᵹn a Ðenian miniſtrare, ei qui ſervitutem ſervit oppoſitus, ꝛs enim Ðeoƿ dicitur â Ðeoƿian ſervire.
† Meꞅꞅe-þeᵹnaꞅ & ƿeꞃolð Ðeᵹnaꞅ.
|| Cynınᵹeꞅ Ðeᵹnaꞅ.
* LeꞅÐeᵹnaꞅ vide Spelman. Gloſſar. in voc. Thegnus & Baro & Selden. Titles of Honour. Item Somneri Gloſſar. in voc. Tegnio.
† Sed ut uberius dicam de Perſonis in iſtiuſmodi Concilio convocatis: occurrit primò nuſquam me reperiſſe inter Saxones noſtros plebi locum, cui in Germania Tacitus potiorem tribuit in voc. Parlamentum.

47. What we have ſaid already of the ſeveral great Officers of the Kingdom being Members of the Great Council or Meeting of Wiſemen may much ſerve to ſhew how the King out of the Council governed as well as in, for ſomething has been ſaid in reference to the nature of their Office and Employments. The chiefeſt Officer under the King was his Chancellour; for governing of the People, were the Earls, Counts or Aldermen of the Counties or Shires, who for this purpoſe held another Aſſembly or Council, which from the Folk or People therein gathered together was called Folcmoꞇe, and from the ſhire Scyꞃᵹemoꞇe, over theſe the Aldermen of the ſhire preſided, but in them aſſembled all the Great men in King Edward the Confeſſour's Laws called Principes, the Biſhops, the military Men and Freemen of all England, therein they ſwore Allegiance to the King. The Buſineſſes of the Shires were here tranſacted, and hence it was not lawfull to appeal to the King's Court but in failure of Juſtice, and here were choſen the Deputies of the Aldermen of the Shires called in Latin Vicecomites, as alſo another ſort of military Officers called Heretochs. The Deputies were in Saxon called ᵹeꞃeꝼaꞅ and Scıꞃᵹeꞃeꝼaꞅ (whence our Shire-reeves contractedly Sheriffs) and in the Abſence of the Aldermen they managed the Buſineſſes of the County, and governed the Folcmotes. Before them as appears from Ingulphus Propriety was tried, and when evicted they were to put the right owner into Poſſeſſion. From the ſame Writer it farther appears, that there were certain Officers formerly in Latin called Vicedomini, out of which two ſorts were made, viz. This of Vicecomites, and another whom he calls Juſtitiarii. Yet that the Vicedomini continued afterward is evident enough, but one of theſe two ſorts might be meant, viz. either a Sheriff or a Juſticiary, for it's an ordinary thing for the Species to be denominated by the Genus.

The Governours of Council out of Parliament.

48. The Heretochs who as we ſaid were alſo choſen in meeting of the Shire, are thus deſcribed to us by one who in the time of the Normans interpolated the Laws of Edward the Confeſſour. “There were other Powers and Dignities (ſaith “he) conſtituted throughout all Countries and Provinces, and through the ſe-

De Heretochiis.

A Deſcription of Heretochs.

“ veral Shires which the Engliſh called Heretochs, viz. Noble, Eminent, Wiſe, Faithfull and Courageous Barons, in Latin Ductores Exercitûs, whom the French named Capital Conſtables, or Marſhals of Armies. In Battels they Marſhalled Armies, and raiſed Forces as occaſion ſerved, and when they thought fit for the Honour of the Crown, and the benefit of the Kingdom. Now theſe Men were choſen by the Common Council, for the common Utility of the Realm through all the Provinces and Countries, and the ſeveral Counties in full Folcmote, as the Sheriffs of Provinces and Counties ought to be choſen; ſo as in every County there was ever one Heretoch choſen to conduct the Forces of his Shire according to order received from our Lord the King for the Honour and Profit of the Crown of the ſaid Kingdom, always when need required. Whoſoever for fear of Battel or Death ſhall fly from his Lord, or Aſſociate in the Conduct of his Heretoch, either in an expedition by Sea or Land, is to looſe all he hath, liſe and all, and the Lord may ſeize upon that Land which he formerly gave him. Here add that all Men were bound to be provided of Arms, out of St. Edward's Law. 35. They were choſen then as Sir Henry Spelman obſerves in full Folcmote, not in the Aſſembly of the beginning of May, of which we ſhall ſpeak anon, but at the beginning of October. At theſe Folcmotes theſe Heretochs * were preſent, and with the approbation of the Aſſembly ordered what was to be done, in reference to the Militia. This Popular Election of them ſeems to have been taken from the Germans, as appears from the Laws of the Boii. † And as Thing ſo Name came from them, with whom ſtill at this day Hertog anſwereth to the Latin Dux, and they as well as our Saxon * Anceſtours ſtill give that Title to thoſe Princes, and great Nobles which with us uſe the ſtyle of Dukes. Yet theſe our Heretochs were no ſuch kind of Perſons, but either of the ſame Dignity, and account with the Sheriffs or inferiour to them. For the Laws of Henry the Firſt directing who ſhould be preſent at the Shire-mote order that there be the Biſhops, Comites, and Vicecomites, then the Heretochs, Trithingreves, Ledgreves, &c. Sir † Henry thinks them the ſame with thoſe whom the Laws of Æthelſtan call Holdes; for as he joins Shire-reeves and Heretochs together, ſo doth he alſo Holdes and Hehgereeves, by which no other than the Shire-reeves are ſignified. But thus we have ſhewed that both the one and the other were choſen in the Folcmote, which as to the Shire-reeves held till the ninth year of Edward the Second, or the year of our Lord 1315. Afterwards great Conteſts and Tumults ariſing they came to be pricked by the King, in the manner they are at this preſent.

* Ab Heꞃe Exercitus & ꞇoᵹen ducere.

† Sic Batavi hodie dicunt De Hertog van Jorck, de Hertog van Orleans, &c.

* Chartæ quædam Saxonicæ Ælfherum quæ Latinè nunc Ducem nunc Comitem vocant Merciorum, ſcribunt Ælꝼheꞃe Meꞃcna Heꞃeꞇoᵹan.

† Vide hic omnino quæ Spel. habet de Mareſchallo.

49. But farther, What has been ſaid of the Power of the Heretochs, as to raiſing and management of the Militia of the Shire, muſt for all this be meant ſubordinately to the Earl or Alderman. For in the Saxon Annals and other Hiſtories throughout, upon all occaſions we find theſe great Men, thoſe whom in Latin they called Duces and Comites, ſtill to be up and fighting, and of theſe Heretochs, otherwiſe than in the Law Books, find we no mention, their Actions and Authority being hid under that Employment of the Counts. They were choſen by the People in the Folcmote, as the Knights of Shires at this day, the Alderman, Count or Earl, was appointed by the King, continued during pleaſure for a time, or was now and then Hereditary as the Prince thought convenient. The Office of Count, Earl or Alderman, was to prevent and puniſh Force and Injury, reſtrain Robberies, and keep the King's Peace, not onely by the vigour of the Laws, but if need ſerved, by force of Arms; the King's Dues, as Cuſtoms and Tributes, he Collected and brought into the Treaſury. Yet the Cauſes of Noblemen were not tryable in his Court, a thing in force ſo much at this day, that Actions of Debt or Injuries cannot be tried in the County Court, if the value of the thing contended for be not under forty ſhillings. This is farther remarkable, that no Man by the Laws of King Alfred, could change his dwelling without the knowledge and teſtimony of the Alderman, in whoſe Shire he lived. In caſe he had taken a Thief and diſmiſſed him, or concealed the theft, he was to looſe his Shire, except the King pleaſed to diſpenſe with him by the Laws of Ina. As the reward of his ſervice, or ſtipend from the profits ariſing out of the Mulcts and Pleas of his County, he received the third penny, as did the French Counts, in the time of Charles the Great, which Cuſtome was continued by the Normans after the Conqueſt. From Doomſday Book alſo, it appears, that the Earl or Count received certain Rents or Payments from particular Towns, as that of Chicheſter paid fifteen pounds to the King, and ten to the Earl. Such was the power, duty and reward of this great Officer, in Saxon called Alderman, in Latin, Dux or Comes,

How theſe Officers were choſen.

Their Power, Duty and Reward.

Vide Ll. Inæ, Aluredi, aliorum paſſim.

C. 33.

C. 34.

Sect. 12.

Comes, and often Conſul; for our Writers about the Norman times, confound theſe Names, and finding them given to great Officers abroad, handle them hand over head; inſomuch, that William the Conquerour himſelf, they more commonly call Comes than Dux. His power was great, the extent of it was through his Shire or County, of the Original of which, and the nature of it, we muſt add a little.

50. Shire or Scire, ſignifieth a Section or Diviſion, being a certain Portion of the Kingdom, into many of which, the whole was, as it were, cut or divided. In Latin it was called Comitatus, from the Officer of it in the ſame Language ſtiled Comes, as County at preſent from the Count, in French Comte, which word we reject, though County and Counteſs, thence derived, we retain. At what time, and by whom this Partition of the Land was made, is ſomething controverted, the general opinion following the credit of Ingulphus, who writes, that Shires, were firſt made by King Alfred. Speaking of this Prince, how in ordering the matters of his Kingdom, he was moſt carefull and ſagacious, he tells us the occaſion to have been; "That ſome of his Subjects, taught and incouraged by the example of the Danes, practiſed Robberies, and committed violence upon their Neighbours, whom deſiring to reſtrain, he firſt changed all the Pagi and Provinces of England into Counties, Counties he divided into Centuries or Hundreds, and Hundreds into Tenths or Tithings, that every legal Inhabitant might be found in ſome certain Hundred and Tithing, and if any one was ſuſpected of a Robbery, by his Hundred or Tithing he ſhould either be condemned or acquitted. He adds, that the Governours of Provinces, whom formerly they called Vicedomini, he divided into two Offices, viz, into Judges, whom we now call, ſaith he, Juſtitiaries, and into Vicecomites, who ſtill retain the ſame Name. By the care and induſtry of theſe Men, the Countrey was preſently brought to ſo great tranquillity, that in caſe a Traveller left any money in the Fields or High-ways, if he came the next day, or a month after, he might find it. So much Ingulphus.

A ꞅcyꞃan ſcindere, dividere, adhuc manent, To ſheer, a pair of ſheers, and a ſhare.

The Diviſion of the Land.

Into Provinces, Shires, Hundreds and Tithings.

Their Governours.

51. Before the Diviſion into Shires, we ſee by him there were Pagi or Territories and Provinces. And ſeveral of thoſe we now term Shires, are by Aſſerius called Pagæ, as thoſe of Sommerſet, Suſſex and Cornwall; and Wilſcire he calls by this very Name. Nay much ancienter than this is the word Scire * being found in the Laws of King Ina, who ſpeaks of the Ealdorman forfeiting his Shire, as alſo of * Scirmen. Now as we have ſeen before in the Hiſtory of Alfred, Aſſerius lived in that King's time and wrote his life, and a wonder it is that ſpeaking of many other remarkable things he ſhould make no mention of this famous Diviſion of the Land. To be ſure whether there were thoſe ſame Diviſions we now call Shires, there were thoſe Officers they then in Latin called Comites, who not being merely Titulars ſurely had their ſeveral and relative Diſtricts called Comitatus. For in the Hiſtory of the ſame Ingulphus, in the Charter of the Foundation of Croyland Abby by Ethelbald King of the Mercians, in the Year DCCXVI, we find one Egga ſubſcribing by the Title of Comes Lincoln, another Leucitus by that of Comes Leiceſter, and another calling himſelf Saxulph the Son of Count Saxulph. Nay in the ſame Authour in the Charter of King Kenulph which confirms the other in the Year DCCCVI. mention is made of Thorold Vicecomes of Lincoln, above threeſcore years before King Alfred came to be King. It's certain during the Heptarchy, the ſeveral Kingdoms had their Diſtricts, Territories and Diviſions, ſometimes taken from the Habitation of ſuch and ſuch a People, as the Wiccii, Meanvari, Girnii and Gaini, of whom we find the Father-in-law of King Alfred, to be ſtyled Comes. So that Province of Mercia, lying near Lincoln, or that we now call Lincolnſhire, was anciently divided into three Parts, the very ſame, and by the very ſame names they are now known, viz. Lindſey by Beda, called Lindiſſi from the City, doubtleſs, which he termes Lindecollina Civitas; Keſteven by Ethelwerd, the Hiſtorian, called Ceoſteſne Wood, and Hoyland, which if Ingulphus may be credited, took its name from Hoy, by which our Saxon Anceſtours meant that we now call Hay, or elſe being in quality like to Holland, in the Low-Countries, from the ſame reaſon fetcht its appellation, being as infirm, or hollow as it.

* LL. Inæ 36, & 39.

* L. 8. vide infra in LL. Inæ.

Of the Comites and Vicecomites.

52. Now for the Shires, probable it is that ſuch other Diviſions as were formerly made, during the Heptarchy, being found convenient, ſtill continued; and that others were made as there was occaſion, by reaſon of any newer Town, that was found fitter to be the Head of the Diviſion; for the convenience of reſort to the Folcmote or Shiremote, and by reaſon of the decay of a former place. Of this later nature, we take the Town of Derby to have been, which was not of any note till that Repandune (now Repton) the Seat of the Mercian Kings was decayed, but being a lurking hole of the Danes, whereas it's former Name was Northworthige, from them, as Ethelward witneſſeth, or in their Tongue, received that of Deoraby, contracted as ſome think from Derwentby, becauſe ſituate upon the River Derwent. Ingulphus writes expreſly, that in the time of the Daniſh Kings, the Limits and Bounds of Territories and Shires, were tranſlated and very much altered from the ancient ſtate wherein they had ſtood, as often as rich Men who had money wherewith to bribe, were concerned. In the times of the Danes were thirty two Shires, of which, they invaded ſixteen at one impreſſion, which number, in the time of the Conquerour, as appeareth by Doomſday Book it ſelf, was increaſed to thirty four, although ſome have written of thirty ſix. We ſaid that ſome Diſtricts, during the Heptarchy, might be continued afterward, when the whole Monarchy came to be afterward divided into Shires; but that generally it was not ſo, we may gueſs from a certain fragment, which belonging to ſome time of the Heptarchy, ſhews that the Land had other Regions diſtinguiſhed by Hides after this manner. Myrena contained 30000. Hides, Wokenſetna 7000. Weſterna 7000. Pecſetna 1200. Elmedſetna 600. Lindesfarona 7000. South Gyrwa 600. North Gyrwa 600. Eaſt Winna 300. Weſt Winna 600. Spalda 600. Wigeſta 900. Hereſinna 1200. Sweordora 300. Eyſla 300. Wicca 300. Wihtgora 600. Noxgaga 5000. Ohtgaga 2000. Hwincna 7000. Clinternſetna 4000. Hendrica 3000. Vnecungga 1200. Aroſeatna 600. Fearſinga 300. Belmiga 600. Witherigga 600. Eaſt Willa 600. Weſt Willa 600. Eaſt Engle 30000. Eaſt Sexena 7000. Cantwarena 15000. South Sexena 7000. and Weſt Sexena 100000. Hides. Of theſe Hides, we ſhall onely remark, that from diviſion of ſuch Territories as here are, into but ſo many, the quantity of them muſt be very various, for other reckonings do not agree with this. In ancient times they much uſed the word Setna, for Inhabitants, terming alſo thoſe that lived upon Mountains, Dunſæten. We are told that this Catalogue onely reſpects the Land lying on this ſide Humber; ſo that the Kingdom of the Northumbrians being left out of it, and the five laſt Regions containing ſo many other K[illegible]doms of the Heptarchy, that of Mercia muſt have contained the reſt before mentioned. Pecſetna, was the Seat of ſuch as Inhabited the Mountains, or the Peak, which was with other low grounds, afterward aſſigned to Darby. Lindesfarona, was Lindſey, South Gyrwa and North Gyrwa, were the Fenny Habitations of the Girvii or Gernii, formerly mentioned, part were bolonging to Lincolnſhire, viz. North Gyrwa, and the reſt to the other Counties adjoyning. Eaſt Sexena, South Sexena and Cantwarena, being formerly Kingdoms, and found to be of a proportionable ſize, without much variation, were left and made ſo many Shires of themſelves.

An Alteration of the name of the Shire.

Sed Danicis Regibus Swano, Cnutone, Haraldo & Hardcnuto totam Angliam opprimentibus, & multa immutantibus, plurima privilegia monaſteriorum perdita ſunt ac prorſus ſufflata: limites ac termini Territoriorum, & Comitatuum tranſlati & a ſtatu veteri ſenſim mutati, prout pecunia divitum in mentibus barbarorum qui nihil aliud quam ruinas quærebant, præponderabat. p. 911.

Another diviſion of the Land by the Hides.

53. Some Diviſions therefore or Shires, King Alfred might find, others he might add, and he or his complete the Number which we ſaid were found in the Daniſh times. If he divided not all the Land firſt into Shires, the Shires he ſubdivided into Hundreds, and theſe Hundreds into Tithings. Of theſe after Ingulphus the Monk of Malmesbury writes, that becauſe the Inhabitants, taking occaſion from the Barbarians “ practiſing Robberies, ſo that there was no Travelling without defence of Arms, he ordained Centuries, which they call Hundreds, and Decima's, which they name Tithings; that every Engliſh Man, living honeſtly, might be found in his proper Hundred and Tithing. If it happened that any one were accuſed of a Crime, out of his Hundred and Tithing, he was to produce Sureties or Bail, if none would Bail him, he was to undergoe the ſeverity of the Laws; in caſe any accuſed Perſon, either before or after Bail given, ſhould make his eſcape, all in the Hundred and Tithing ſhould fine to the King. By this Device, he procured ſuch Peace to the ſeveral Countries, that where Highways parted, he cauſed Golden Bracelets to be hung upon Poſts, which derided the avarice of Paſſengers, of whom none dared to take them away. This gives us an account of the occaſion of their Inſtitution, and of the Succeſs. As for the Diviſion of the Land into them, it was neither certain nor equal. Gervaſe of Tilbury wrote, that an Hide of Land conſiſted of an hundred Acres, and an Hundred of certain hundreds of Hides. Sr. Henry Spelman, takes notice, that of purpoſe he aſſigns no certain number, for one Hundred was three or four times bigger than another. Some have held that an Hundred conſiſted of an hundred Villages, as Giraldus Cambrenſis deſcribes the Welſh Cantred. But at preſent, ſcarcely any where are there to be found throughout England, an hundred Villages in one Hundred; ſcarcely half ſo many; they are great ones that contain thirty or forty. Many have but ten, ſome but two, and ſome, as the Hundreds

The occaſion of ſubdividing the Land into Hundreds and Tithings.

De geſtis Reg. Angl. l. 2. p. 44.

This Diviſion not certain nor equal.

Sect. 12.

dreds of Cherham and Marden in the County of Kent conſiſt but of one a-piece. And Stanford in Lincolnſhire, as appears from Doomſday Book, paid for twelve Hundreds and an half.

54. My Opinion is, that at firſt an Hundred conſiſted of 100 Hides, and that afterwards the quantity came to be altered, as all humane Inſtitutions are ſubject to change, and Ingulphus tells us that great alteration was made in the Diviſions of the Land in the time of the Danes. Juſt ſo at Rome when the ſeveral Centuries of the People were firſt ordained, a reſpect was had to the Number, but afterwards when Servius modelled the State anew he increaſed the numbers of People very much in ſome of them, but let the Name ſtill remain as in that Hiſtory we have obſerved to the Reader and given him warning not to take a Century for an hundred Men, but ſuch a Diviſion of the People. The Hundred to be ſure was a part of the Shire, where an hundred men preſided as Preſervers of the King's Peace, being called Hundreders, and in Latin Centuriones and Centenarii. They had Cogniſance of the middle ſort of Cauſes and Suits; the moſt inferiour being heard in the Tithing or Decuria, by the Tithingmen or Decuriones, (each Hundred containing ten Tithings) and the higheſt in the County Court or Sciremote. Over theſe Hundreders and the whole Hundred, one preſided, called the Lord of the Hundred; not in his own right, but of the Count or Sheriff of that Shire, to which the Hundred did belong. Moſt anciently he was choſen by the People, though a Statute of Edward the Second long after appropriated the Election to the Chancellour, Treaſurer, and Barons of the Exchequer. He received money from thoſe that were under his Juriſdiction, and had many Privileges. The Court of the Hundred, by the Laws of King Ina and Edward the Confeſſour, was to be held every Month, except the King's Affairs required haſte, and then ſeveral Hundreds ſometimes were called together for quicker diſpatch. It was not lawfull for any to be abſent, as appears from the Laws of King Edgar. The Thanes here aſſembled, whom Poſterity called Barons and Eccleſiaſtical Judges too, for as the Biſhop was to be preſent at the County Court, ſo others of the Clergy at this, and as there, ſo here both Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Matters were hea[illegible] and determined, till William the Conquerour diſtinguiſhed the Juriſdictions, and commanded the Courts to be held a-part, as is evident from a Writ of his directed to all that lived within the Dioceſe of Lincoln, which prohibits all Biſhops and Archdeacons any more to determine their buſineſſes in the Hundred; or to bring a Cauſe concerning the regiment of Souls before Secular Perſons. But if any application was made about any Cauſe or Crime relating to Eccleſiaſtical Laws, they ſhould appoint a place of meeting where they thought convenient, and there right ſhould be done to God and the Biſhop, not after the cuſtome of the Hundred, but according to the Canons and Epiſcopal Laws.

The Government of the Hundred.

Vide Seldeni Analect. lib. 2. c. 7.

55. The Court day being publiſhed a Week before if any one were abſent the third time, he was puniſhed as Contumacious againſt the King himſelf; and in caſe he paid not his Fine, all his Goods were to be ſeized. When the Court was ſate, the Laws of Ethelred commanded that twelve Elderly men of free Condition ſhould take an Oath together with the Preſident, that they would neither Condemn the Innocent nor Abſolve the Guilty. The Hundred by another name was and ſtill is called a Wapentack from the Saxon Wæpen and Tac, which ſignifies taking or touching or betaking. Hoveden thinks it ſo named from the touching or concuſſion of Weapons or Arms. The ancient Germans indeed, from whom ſo many will have the Engliſh Saxons deſcended, neither met in Council nor in Judicature without their Weapons, and when any Propoſal they liked they teſtified their approbation by the ſhaking together of their Arms, as Tacitus informs us. And from them ſome believe the Inſtitution of Hundreds or Wapentacks it ſelf to have been derived both to us and to the Lombards, from the Laws of whom as alſo thoſe of Charles the Great it is evident that the Courts of the Centenaries both among the Lombards and ancient Franks were ordered by the ſame almoſt Cuſtoms and Laws as ours are and were. But we are told by one very knowing in the Saxon Tongue, that the word Tac with our Anceſtours never ſignified Tactus in Latin or touching, ſo that to derive Wapentack from the touching or Concuſſion of Arms cannot, according to him, be warranted by the Etymology. Brompton the Abbat gives us another derivation, writing that it was called Wapentack from this cuſtome, that when any Lord of the Hundred was new made, thoſe under his Juriſdiction were wont as a Ceremony, and in token of ſubjection, to deliver their Weapons or Arms up to him. Whether this be more agreeable or not to the Etymology, the Germans are wont from ſuch like Ceremony to term their

LL. Æthelſtani. c. 20.
Be ðon ðe ᵹemoe ꝼoꞃꞅıꞇꞇe.

It is alſo called a Wapentack.

Ƿapen arma ᵹeꞇæcan tradere, reddere.

Somner. in Gloſſar. Voc. Wapentack.

their leſſer ſort of Vaſſals, whom otherwiſe they call Arimanni, Wapendemannen, or Gewapende.

De Hundredis & Wapentachiis.

Its Etymology.

56. But if credit be to be given to the Publiſher of the Laws of King Edward the Confeſſour, the former Etymology is the trueſt, the reaſon this. "When any "one, ſay they, undertook the Government of the Wapentack, at the appointed "time and wonted place, all the Elderly men gave him a Meeting, and as he lighted from his Horſe all did him reverence. He erecting his Lance received an "Agreement or Aſſociation according to the cuſtome from all, and all thoſe that "were aſſembled with their Lances touched his Lance, and ſo by the Contract of "Weapons ſtrengthened them, an agreement being thus publickly made. For in "Engliſh Arms are called ƿæpnu, and ꞇaccaꞃe ſignifies to Confirm; as it were a "Confirmation of Arms; or to ſpeak more expreſsly, according to the Engliſh "Tongue Wapentack is the Touching of Arms; for ƿepnu ſignifies Arms, and ꞇac "is Touching. Therefore it may ſufficiently be known, that for this Reaſon all "the Aſſembly was called Wapentack, becauſe by this Touching of Arms they "confederated amongſt themſelves. There were alſo other Diviſions above Wapentacks, which they called þꞃihinꝣaꞅ, which was the third part of the Province. "Thoſe that ruled over them were called þꞃihinꝣeꞃeꝼaꞅ, before whom were brought "ſuch Cauſes as could not be decided in Wapentacks. And ſo what the Engliſh "in general called Hundreds, the Counties of York, Lincoln, Notingham, Leiceſter, "and Northampton, as far as Watlingſtreet termed Wapentacks, and what they "termed three or four Hundreds, theſe called ðꞃihinꝣa. But in ſome Provinces "they were called leð, which theſe called Thrihinge: And what could not be "tried by the Thrihinge, was removed into the Shire. Here the Reader may obſerve what Counties they were that uſed the word Wapentack and the word Thrihinge, which he muſt by no means confound with Tithing; for the one is ſo named from Three and the other from Ten. The Diviſion of Shires belonged to the King, the Diviſions of Hundreds and Wapentacks to the Earl or Sheriff.

Another Diviſion called Thrihingas.

Thrihingas.

Thrihingereſas.

Named alſo Leth vel Laths.

Leth vel Laths

57. Such was the Diviſion, Government, and Governours of the Countries or Provinces. The Cities and greater Towns had alſo their Governours, who were alſo called Ealdormen, which name in them continues to this very day, and their power, as the publiſher of Edward the Confeſſour's Laws affirms, was much like to that of the Governours of Hundreds and Wapentacks. Having told us that Greve was a Name of Authority extending to Shires, Wapentacks, or Hundreds, and to Towns alſo, that it ſignified properly what Dominus doth in Latin, that the Teutonicks, as Friſons, and thoſe of Flanders called their Governours Mergreves, he adds, "That in his time they who had authority over others, "were called Greves, amongſt the Britains in the time of the Romans they were "termed Senatours, and Aldermen by the Saxons, not in reſpect of their Age, ſome "of them being young, but for their Wiſedom and Experience, and their knowledge of the Laws. And that I may confeſs the truth, ſaith he, the Aldermen "alſo in the Cities of this Kingdom in their Bailywicks, in their cloſe Burghs, "their Walled Towns and their Caſtles have the ſame Dignity and manner of "Power as the Governours of Wapentacks and Hundreds have in their Bailywicks "under the King's Vicecomes, or Sheriff, throughout the Kingdom. For it is "their duty to preſerve the Laws, Liberties, Rights, and Peace of the King, as "alſo the juſt cuſtoms of the Kingdom, ſuch as are ancient and approved by our "good Anceſtours, inviolably, without fraud or delay, all manner of ways according to their power. When any ſudden, unexpected, doubtfull, or ill thing "happens againſt the Kingdom or Crown of our Lord the King in their Bailywicks, they ought to ring the Bells, in Engliſh called moꞇbell, to call all the "whole People together, which Meeting in Engliſh they call ꝼolcmoꞇe, that is, "the calling or Congregation of all the People, becauſe all that live under the "Protection and in the Peace of the King, within the ſaid Kingdom, ought to "meet, and there by their Common Council provide for the Indemnity of the "Crown or this Kingdom, and for repreſſing the Inſolence of Malefactours. For "it is ordained, that there the whole People meet once in a year, viz. on the "Firſt of May, and by Oath confederate and unite themſelves as ſworn Brethren "together with the King to defend the Kingdom from Strangers and its Enemies, "with all Fidelity to defend his Territories and Honours, and to be faithfull to "the ſaid Lord the King, both within and without the Kingdom of Britain. "This ought all Princes and Earls to doe, and ſwear together before the Biſhops "of the Kingdom in ꝼolcmoꞇe; and in like manner all the Nobles of the Kingdom, as alſo the Souldiers and all Freemen whatſoever of the whole Kingdom of

The Governours of Cities and great Towns.

De Greve.

Aldermen.

Their Power and Duty.

Theſe Northern Nations of the ſame Original.

Pulſatis campanis quod Anglicè vocant Motbel. In borealibus partibus Angliæ Locum ubi convenire ſolebant oppidani novi vocari ſolitum. The Moote-Hall.

Sect. 12.

“ Britain, ought to doe in full Folcmote before the Biſhops of the Kingdom. He a[illegible]es the firſt Invention of this Law to King Arthur, and ſaith it lay long buri[illegible] Oblivion till raiſed as it were from the dead by Edgar the Engliſh Saxon King.

Two ſorts of Folcmotes and the difference of them.

⁊ hebbe mon þꞃıᵹa on ᵹeaꞃ Buꞃhᵹemoꞇe. ⁊ ꞇꞃa ꞅcıꞃᵹcmoꞇ. c. 5.

58. From what this Writer ſaith, and what farther he adds in the ſame Chapter, the Reader muſt obſerve what formerly we hinted, that there were two ſorts of Folcmotes, viz. That of the whole Shire called Shiremote and this other of Burghers or Citizens termed Burghmote held alſo at ſeveral times, and in this they alſo differed, that by the Law of King Edgar the Shiremote was to be held twice, but the Burghmote thrice in the year. And what he here ſpeaks of Aldermen is not to be underſtood of ſuch as we call Aldermen of Towns at this day conſtituting the Ariſtocratical form of the Government of Corporations between the chief Magiſtrate and the Commonalty; but thoſe we call Mayors and Bayliffs, being the principal Officers. For this preſent ſort of Aldermen is of a much later date coming up much about the ſame time as did the Name of Mayor ſtep into the room of the Saxon Alderman, Portreeve, Burghreeve, and the Anglonorman Bayliff about the Reign of Richard the Firſt. The Folcmote was the Meeting of the Citizens or Burgers, not in their Repreſentative as the Common Council of the City but in their own Perſons, as at London of all Freemen at the Election of the Mayor. And as we ſaid formerly of the Folcmote of the Shire that it was held alſo at extraordinary times by the King's order, if the exigency of his Affairs required. This we find to have been practiſed in London (the mentioning of which City lately brings it to our mind) long after the end of the Engliſh Saxon Polity. For in the one and fortieth year of King Henry the Third, two hundred years wanting ten after the Norman Conqueſt, the Londoners were by the King's Councellours called to Folcmote, and commanded to diſtribute themſelves into Wardmotes, the better to debate and determine the buſineſs of ſupplying the King with Money; and in his fifty fourth year this King himſelf was preſent at a Folcmote of London held at the Temple.

Fabian.

The private Diviſion and Government of the Land. viz. Tenure in Fee.

Feud l. 1. Tit. 1. Feudum eſt jus in prædio alieno, &c.

Lib. 2. Tit. in quibus Cauſ. Feud. amit.

59. We have ſeen the publick Diviſion and Government of the Land, the next thing we ſhall conſider, is its private Diviſion in reference to Propriety and Poſſeſſion: And the firſt inquiry is, whether Lands were held in Fee during the Engliſh Saxon Government before the Conqueſt. By Fee, with Cujacius, we underſtand Right of uſing and enjoying another man's Ground in perpetuum, which the Lord thereof grants on this condition, that he which receives it perform Fidelity to him, with Military or ſome other Service. Or more largely to explain it, A Feudum or Beneficium is that which for good will is granted, ſo from one to another, that the propriety of this Immoveable thing granted, remaining in the Giver, the Uſufructus thereof paſſeth to the Receiver in ſuch manner, that to him and his Heirs Male, and Female alſo, if they be expreſly mentioned, it ſhall perpetually belong, on this condition, that he and his Heirs faithfully ſerve the Lord, whether the Service be by name expreſſed, or the promiſe be indeterminately made. This laſt Definition is more agreeable to a Fee of the Inferiour Age, as our Spelman obſerves, when the Nature of it was altered from its Primitive Inſtitution; but both together lay a ſufficient foundation for our inquiry, with this farther conſideration premiſed, that Fees at their beginning were not tied with ſuch Circumſtances as afterwards, the thing was more looſe, and the Lord not bound by ſuch Bargains and Conditions as following Ages invented. For as elſewhere we have already obſerved what the Feudal Book it ſelf ſuggeſts; In moſt ancient times it was in the power of the Lords to take away the thing by them granted in Fee. Afterward it came to paſs that it ſhould continue certain for a year, and that after that it was continued for term of life to the Vaſſal. But nothing for all this deſcending by right of ſucceſſion to the Sons, at length it was brought down to them, to whomſoever of them the Lord would confirm it, which at this day is ſo eſtabliſhed, that it equally appertains to all the Sons, ſaith the Book.

Lib. 1. Tit. 1.

Vide Spelman. Gloſſar. v. Feudum. Seldenii Tit. Hon. & notas ad Pol.

Somner. Tract. de Gavelkind.

60. Now the general opinion of our learned Countreymen is, that Fees or Tenures were not in uſe in England before the Norman Conqueſt, after which the Conquerour, according to the cuſtome of the Countrey whence he came, diſtributed all England to his Followers, which then began to groan under the burthen of Fees, not heard off in the Age of the Saxons. They urge that the Term or Word Feudum or Feodum, is no where to be found in any Record or Monument of theſe times ſtill extant, and of credit; for it occurs ſometimes in the Laws of King Edgar and Edward the Confeſſour, as alſo in ſeveral Charters mentioned in Ingulphus's Hiſtory, the Text is corrupted, or the Laws are of a later Date; and Ingulphus

Bocland and Folcland.

Vide Lambard in explic. verb. v. Terra ex ſcripto.

The general word in Grants.

gulphus having been Secretary ſometime to Duke William in Normandy before his Conqueſt of England had both his Tongue and his Pen tipt with Words and Phraſes peculiar to thoſe Countries where he had ſo long reſided. They affirm that no other Tenures were in uſe, or to uſe the Scotch expreſſion, Haldings of Land, but theſe two Bocland and Folcland. The former was a Poſſeſſion by Book or Writing, and the latter without. That by Writing was a Freehold and by Charter; hereditary with all Immunities, and for the Free and nobler ſort. That without writing was to hold at the Will of the Lord; bound to Rents and Services, and was for the rural People. But, not much to concern our ſelves about words, whether in the Saxon times the term of Feodum or Feudum was uſed, is not very material, for by the moſt knowing Antiquaries it is granted, that till about the beginning of the Tenth Century. ſcarcely can any Monument whatſoever of any Nation ſhew theſe words, Beneficium being generally uſed before to ſignifie Lands ſo granted. And to come to the thing, as the word Feudum was ſcarcely known in the Saxon times, ſo Fees then were of a more laxe nature, not tied up by ſuch Circumſtances, Laws and Covenants, as in after times, as appears ſufficiently from what we have already ſaid out of the Books themſelves.

Fee and Folcland of the ſame nature.

Vide Somner. in Tract. de Gavelkind. p. p. 114, 115.

Villanage.

Gavelkind.

61. Then again, the moſt learned acknowledge ſome kind of Footſteps of theſe Cuſtoms among the Germans, and that from the Germans our Engliſh Saxons iſſued as well as the Lombards and Franks they ever own. If therefore out of Germany the cuſtome was derived, the Saxons coming out of the Cherſoneſus were as capable of receiving it as the reſt. " If (as the Definition which moſt agrees with the " Primitive Inſtitution of Fees affirms) the nature of a Fee conſiſted in this, that " it was granted for ſome Service or other to be performed (whether Military or " other) and at firſt it was in the Lord's power to take it away when he pleaſed, I can ſee no reaſon why the Folcland they mention may not be accounted of this nature. " For they grant that Folcland was Land letten out, and in op" poſition to Demeſne Land, termed in Servitio, or Tenementalis, that is, granted " out in Service by the Lord to his Tenants, to be holden of himſelf like the " Frenchman's Fief Servant, i. e. Terra Serviens, in reſpect whereof the Tenants " were bound to be Retainers Attendants, and Followers to their Lords, Sui" tours to their Courts, and were thence called Folgarii. There were alſo Villani or Villains, not in that ſenſe the word hath lately been taken for Slaves, but as Fitzherbert expreſſeth it, Baſe Tenants that did Villain Service, but nevertheleſs were no Villains, that is, not in the latter ſenſe, for from Villa a Villain was named. Mr. Sumner contends that Gavelkind is a Tenure, confeſſes alſo, that in its nature is lyable to works, and though he be carried away by the Authority of ſome Learned men, without examining it, to believe that Fees or Fiefs were not in uſe here before the Conqueſt, yet he will have his Gavelkind ancienter, ſuppoſing it to have been an Univerſal Cuſtome in England before the Conqueſt. The Propriety of Land held in Gavelkind was this, that it was partible; and Gerard Niger where he treats of the Original of Fees, tells us, that after a Fee * came to deſcend, to Sons to which of them the Lord would name, at length in his time it was came to be eſtabliſht, that it ſhould belong equally to them all; which, as our learned Gloſſariſt notes, the † Engliſh call them by the Name of Gavelkind.

---

* Sic progreſſum eſt & ad filios deveniret & in quem ſcil. dominus vellet hoc beneficium confirmare. Quod hodie ſic ſtabilitum eſt, ut ad omnes æqualiter filios pertineat. † Hoc Angli Gavelkind dicimus.

The Antiquity of Fees.

They become Military.

61. So Fees ſeem here to have been in uſe before the Conqueſt, as they were in a more lame ſenſe received out of Germany, and as they were in their Infancy. But as afterwards they were clothed with ſtraiter Circumſtances and Laws, ſo were they not in uſe (as little elſewhere before the tenth Century) not ſuch as Littleton writes of in his Book of Tenures, as Fee-ſimple, Fee-Taile, Fee-ferme, Frank-fee, Grand & Petit ſergeanty, Eſcuage, Burgage, or the like. Military Fees ſeem alſo of a later date in England, than the Saxon times, though they might have been very ſerviceable for repelling the inſolent and pertinacious Danes. In after times in all places the chief part of feudal ſervice became military, and for the moſt part that of old Fees was granted out militiæ cauſa, which thing gave occaſion to many Learned Men of Errour, both in denying Fees never to have been where indeed they were, and in defining Feudum by that which Feudiſts call Clientela militaris, that is of a Genus by a Species moſt illogically as Vulteius challengeth upon this account Hotoman himſelf. The general ſervice was that of

Sect. 12.

Generally work was chiefly required.

of works impoſed upon the Folcland, though not all of it, for moſt of that which was called Gafolland, the ſame with Gavelkind Land (for that Gavel comes from Gafol ſignifying Cenſus, Rent, or Tribute, and is not derived from Gineall, Mr. Sumner hath convinced me) was onely ſubject to Rent or Payment, the works were of a divers Nature. * Fleta tells us, that in (or before) the Conqueſt there were Freemen, that freely held their Tenements by free Services, or by free Cuſtoms, but being caſt out of them by thoſe that were more powerfull, afterward they returned and received back the ſame Tenements in Villenage. There were others that were Baſe Tenants amongſt the Saxons, who might be called Villains in this ſenſe, that in Villages they lived, and there performed baſe ſervices to their Lords. But a queſtion may be moved, whether during the Saxon times there are ſuch Villains as are the ſame with Bondmen or Slaves.

* Fuerunt etiam in Conqueſtu liberi homines, qui liberè tenuerunt tenementa ſua per libera ſervitia vel per liberas conſuetudines & cum perpotentiores ejecti eſſent, poſtmodum reverſi receperunt eadem tenementa ſua tenenda in villenagio. lib. 1. c. 8.

Two ſorts of Slaves.

Spelm. Gloſſar. in voc. Servus.

62. Some make a diſtinction of Slaves into Perſonal and Predial, and contend that as well the one ſort as the other, were in uſe not onely with our Norman, but Saxon Anceſtours, the one being received from the Romans, and the other from the Germans. The latter ſort at the pleaſure of their Lords poſſeſſed Lands and Eſtates, and in the Villages did Ruſtick works and baſe Services, whence they were called Villains, and theſe ſeem little or nothing different from the Villains of which we lately ſpake: their poſſeſſing of Lands makes them diſtinct from abſolute Slaves (of whom amongſt the Romans, many wrought in the Fields and Villages, but yet held not ground) and ſhews them like to thoſe of the Germans, who were in far better condition than thoſe of the Romans, as appears from Tacitus. To be ſure Doomſday Book makes ſeveral the Villani and the Servi, as to inſtance onely in that part of it which concerned the Abby of Croyland, and which Ingulphus hath tranſcribed into his Hiſtory. Speaking of Goundnaneſlound Hundred in Adington, he ſaith St. Guthlack hath had, and hath two hides of Land, the Ground is of four Carucates. One is in Dominio and two ſlaves (Servi) and ſix Villains and three Bordarii, &c. Again ſpeaking of Wendlingborough in Ausfordeſhew Hundred, and what St. Guthlack, or the Monaſtery had both formerly, and at that time there, he adds in Dominio is one Carucate with one Slave, and one and twenty Villains with the Church and the Prieſt. Afterward he mentions in Badeby, being in Dominio Eight Carucates, Eight He-Slaves (Servi) five She-Slaves (Ancillæ) and twelve Villani. All theſe are in the ſame Page. In the next we meet with four Cotages and three Slaves, and again there is one Slave. Now he ſaith St. Guthlachus habuit & habet, St. Guthlack, both had and hath, which had refers to the times of Edward the Confeſſour, or before the Conqueſt. It's true indeed, that there are many words which are purely Norman in that Deſcription of England, and Ingulphus having lived in Normandy, made uſe of ſuch in his Tranſlation of Engliſh Charters, but if Servi and Villani had been the ſame, he would not have uſed ſeveral words to expreſs them. But he plainly diſtinguiſheth them by the Number of each; and if any ſhould yet doubt that this Diſtinction was brought in after the Norman times, this may ſatisfie him that Slaves were before the Conqueſt, becauſe they are frequently mentioned in the Saxon Laws, particularly thoſe of King Ina, by the Name of Theowum. One of this King's Laws mentions thoſe who were for Theft deprived of their Liberty and called Wite Theowum, ordaining that if ſuch Slaves ſteal again they ſhould be hanged, and no compenſation therefore made to their Lords. In caſe any body killed him, nothing upon that account was to be forfeited to his Kindred, except they had redeemed him within ſix Months. As for the Villanus or Countreyman he was called by the Name of Ceorl or Ceorliſcmon, and in the League between King Alured and Guthrum, is deſcribed to be one that occupieth Gafolland.

The difference betwixt a Villain and a Slave.

P. 909. Sanctus Guthlacus habuit & habet duas hidas terræ & quatuor carucat. in Dominio eſt una & duo ſervi & ſex villani.

The Saxon Name of a Slave.

ƿite þeoƿum, c. 23.

That of a Villain a Countreyman.

Ceoꞃl. Ceoꞃlıꞅcmon.

Folcland anſwerable to Fee.

Allodium what.

63. For, ſo in a larger ſenſe were all called, that held that ſort of Land called Folcland, whether it was Gafolland eſpecially ſo called, viz. that for which Rent was paid, or the other for which Services belonged. This Folcland anſwered to Feudum or Fee, at leaſt ſuch of it as was held by ſervice, and that to which we muſt now ſpeak, viz. Bocland anſwered to that which was oppoſite to Feudum, and termed Allodium. As Feudum or Feodum was ſo named as Feo-hode or Feh-hode, as one would ſay Feeſhip, or that to which a Mercenary Fee or Payment of ſervice did belong; ſo was Allodium called from All-hode, as one would ſay Totality, Allſhip (hade hode head hept, and the like as before we have obſerved, ſignifying what in Latin do ſtatus qualitas or conditio) which now are expreſſed by the word ſhip, as Worſhip, Ladyſhip, Lordſhip, &c. Yet Man-hood, Woman-hood, Maiden-

Maiden-head and others continue) becauſe it was poſſeſſed totally and wholly, being hereditary, perpetual and patrimonial, free without all condition, and in the Power of the Poſſeſſour to diſpoſe of it wholly how he pleaſed, without dependence or asking leave of any. This was of a quiet contrary nature to a Feodum or Fee, which when firſt inſtituted was but perſonal, not (as afterward) perpetual, patrimonial or hereditary, or holden as our ancient Engliſh Lawyers phraſe it, ad remanentiam, but as a Clergyman holds his Benefice onely for life, the Tenant being but a mere Stipendiary, a Termer, at beſt, as one expreſſes it, but a Freeholder for life, an uſufructuarius, or not ſo much, for ſome held onely ad voluntatem Domini or precario, not unlike our Tenants at Will. In proceſs of time indeed as we have already ſhewn degenerating, and receding from its firſt Inſtitution it became perpetual and hereditary, yet holden ſtill as formerly with a condition of ſervice on the Tenants part, and by way of Salary, Penſion or Stipend from the Lord, wherewith to gratifie and recompence his Man for his ſervice, to which he was obliged under peril of forfeiture. The Fee was holden but in ſervice, and though the Dominium utile was in the Tenant, yet the directum or the propriety remained in the Lord, together with a Power of reſtraining his Tenant from alienation, and conſequently ſuch Land was but partially, conditionally granted out, not totally and abſolutely held by the Poſſeſſour, as was Allodium, the Poſſeſſour of which had Dominium, both directum and utile, held it pleno jure, integrè, ex toto and ex ſolido, as they ſay, quit of all ſervices, independently without acknowledgment of any ſuperiour Lord, not unlike the Prince of Haynault, who held as Sir Henry Spelman obſerves de Deo & Sole, or as other abſolute Princes Dei gratiâ, or to ſpeak in a word anſwerable to the Etymology, in Totality. Hence the terms of Prædia immunia, terra propria, fundus proprii juris, patrimonium and the like, and in Charters of Foundations given to ſuch Poſſeſſions.

Vide Somnerum in Tract. de Gavelkind.

Bocland the ſame with Allodium.

64. Anſwerable to this was that by our Saxon Anceſtours called Bocland, which Interpreters into Latin tranſlate by the very word Allodium * as alſo terra † hæreditaria, terra ‖ libera, and terra * teſtamentalis. It took its Name from the Lands booking or entring in a Codicil or little Book, named a Charter after the Conqueſt, which in caſe the Land was made over to a Lay Perſon, was in way of ſeiſin delivered to the Party, and if to a Monaſtery was ordinarily laid and left upon the Altar. Thence was ſuch an Inſtrument known in thoſe times by the Name of Landboc, and in Latin Telligraphium, and ſometimes Codicillus. The Creation of Bocland (in Latin termed terram hæreditario jure conſcribere and liberam proclamare) was a Prerogative Royal, and not in the Power of a Subject, yet done it ſeems not without the conſent of the great Council of the Realm. Hence Mr. Somner tells us, that paſſages often occur in Grants made by Subjects of Lands in perpetuity to the Cathedral of Canterbury, and other places of ſuch and ſuch a King, that he made them hereditary, and proclaimed them abſolutely free. And as it is proper for him that makes to eſtabliſh, hence King Ethelred's Privilege, or Confirmation of their whole Poſſeſſions, to that Cathedral is by one of the Subſcribers called Cyninges bocung. Nay this Land was very ſeldom alienated by the Poſſeſſour without (what the Law of Mortmain afterward required) a concurrent, at leaſt a ſubſequent Confirmation from the King, whereof Examples he tells are obvious in the Liſt of that Churches Lands and Benefactours publiſhed in the Antiquities of Canterbury, as alſo of the Concurrence of the Nobles of ſuch Bocland grants. Particularly in the year of our Lord DCCCXXXVIII. King Egbert and Ethelwulf his Son granted to Chriſtchurch in Canterbury, Mallings in Suſſex, which Manor King Baldred had formerly given to that Church, but becauſe it was not done by conſent of the Nobles of the Kingdom, that gift was not valid. As Bocland originally flowed from the Crown, ſo upon all Forfeitures particularly that of the Eſtate of the Poſſeſſour for deſerting the Wars, there being no mean Lord betwixt the King and him, by the Laws of Ethelred and Canute, to the Crown it reverted.

The manner of paſſing it.

The King's Conſent neceſſary thereunto.

* Textus Roffenſ.
† Ll. Aluredi c. 47. apud. Bromton. Canuti, c. 104.
‖ Ll. Ethelredi, c. 2. in Bromton.
* Ll. Canuti. c. 32.

hiꞇ ᵹebo-ked on ece yꞃꝼe.

Cyninᵹeꞅ bocunᵹe.

Quod viz. manerium prius eidem Eccleſiæ dedit Baldredus Rex ſed quia non fuit de conſenſu Magnatum Regni, donum id non potuit valere. Et ideo, &c.

By whom tenable.

65. Bocland was properly tenable by Thanes, as Folcland by Ceorles, and thereupon in King Cnute's Laws Thegn and Bocland in the Original Saxon, meet as Relatives, as in the Latin Tranſlation do Thegen and Allodium. Not but that it was ſometimes held by Ceorles, who were not abſolutely incapable of holding it, but when it ſo happened it was placed as improperly, and as much out of decorum, as ſince and at this day, Knights Fees proper to Knights, and the Nobler ſort of the People are in the Hands of Socagers, Sochmen or Ceorles, whoſe proper tenure was that of Gafolland. So proper was this Bocland to the Thanes, that thoſe who in the Latin Charters of St. Auſtin's are called Allodiarii in the very ſame Charters

C. 11. par. 1. Text. Roffenſ. Vide Somnerum ubi ſuprà. Hinc illud ſolenne legis buꞇan ðæm Ceoꞃle þe on ᵹaꝼol-lanð ꞅiꞇ.

ters exhibited in Engliſh (like as in thoſe of Chriſt-church) they are ſtyled Thegnes. Though their name came at firſt from Miniſtring, yet being the King's Miniſters, the word afterwards came always to be taken in an honourable ſenſe, denoting in general a Gentleman, one nobly or generouſly deſcended, a Man of worſhip, of honour, whether he was the King's Thane, properly ſo called, or a Thane of inferiour degree; for ſtill was he accounted Noble. But to come to Bocland, it was termed terra hæreditaria, to diſtinguiſh it from Folcland, otherwiſe called Gafolland, wherein the Tenant being but as a Leſſee, Uſufructuary or Termour, and having no propriety, upon his death bed, or other expiration of the term, it reverted to the Lord, and deſcended not upon the Heir as Bocland did, at leaſt might doe, being becauſe the poſſeſſion in propriety, hereditary, if not alienated by him in his life time, as it might be in regard it was terra libera, as well as hæreditaria, which Folcland never was. It was called terra teſtamentalis, in regard of the publick Teſtimony of the Shire, required and uſed in paſſing of it otherwiſe than by Will. Probable it is that the conveyance thereof was recorded and inrolled, and entred in the Shire book, in the publick Shiremote after Proclamation there made, for any to come in that could lay challenge to it. It was alſo called Teſtamentalis becauſe deviſeable, but yet here a queſtion is moved whether it was indeed in the Power of the owner to diſpoſe of it at pleaſure.

Thanes who.

The difference betwixt Folcland and Bocland.

Hinc Ðeᵹena ᵹilð. Generoſum Collegium. Ðeᵹnboꞃen Generoſus Þeᵹnꞅciꞃe Thani dignitas.

66. Sr. Henry Spelman was of opinion that it could neither be given away nor ſold, but was to be left to the Heir except the Writings or Conveyances otherwiſe permitted it; and that thence it had the Name of Terra hæreditaria. He grounds himſelf upon a Law of King Alfred concerning Bocland which runs thus: He that hath Bocland, and left him by his Anceſtours, we ordain that he give it not from his Kindred, if there be any writing or witneſs that it was forbidden him to convey it to ſtrangers by thoſe that gave it to him, and that it was done in preſence (or witneſs) of the King or Biſhop, his Kindred being preſent. Now againſt Sir Henry Spelman his Concluſion, Mr. Sumner juſtly excepts that this Law clearly makes for the contrary, foraſmuch as it allows unto the Poſſeſſour a Power of Alienation, ſaving where his Hands were tied from it by an expreſs Proviſion, and prohibition to the contrary made by thoſe from whom the Land came to him, a Caution of the ſame nature with that exception which as we ſay, firmat regulam in non exceptis. That Bocland was alienable he proves by a paſſage, he cites out of a Charter of Archbiſhop Wilfred, who died about the year DCCCXXX. which ſufficiently ſhews, that the Poſſeſſours might grant it away in their life time as pleaſed them, either by Act or Grant, or by Will. So it was before the Conqueſt. But afterward that Cuſtome of deviſing it by Will ceaſed, as did withall the deſcent of Land generally, by equal diviſion amongſt all the Sons. For as the Engliſh Laws and Cuſtoms in general, from that time ſuffered a daily Eclipſe and Declination by degrees, ſo this in particular (ſaving where they were more tenacious of it than elſewhere; or in ſuch places as London, which by ſpecial privilege were ſuffered to retain it) languiſhed, and was at length ſupplanted by that other kind of Deſcent, which now regularly takes place throughout moſt of the Kingdom. Inſomuch, as where Partible Deſcent cannot, to uphold it ſelf, juſtly plead Antiquity and ancient Cuſtome, it quite fails and falls to the ground. But yet we muſt know, that notwithſtanding the Introduction of new Tenures by the Conquerour, yet did not the Engliſh preſently forgoe their Bocland (that kind of Tenure Mr. Sumner tells you he means) but reteined it both name and thing, as he proves in ſeveral Inſtances. And evident enough this is from Doomſday Book, where though happily not the name of it (as neither of Folcland, Saxon terms both) yet the thing is very obvious, and often occuring under the name and notion ſometime of Tainland, becauſe as we ſaid properly tenable by Thanes, otherwhile and oftner of Allodium. And as Bocland, ſo Folcland ſurvived the Engliſh Saxon Government, continuing after the Conqueſt, and remaining unto this day, though not in the very name, yet in the thing and ſubſtance. For as aforetime the Saxons had their Ceorles, Gebures, Folcmen, and the like, as the Normans, afterward had their Villani, Bordmanni, Cottarii, and others; ſo what the former held was called Folcland, Gafolland, &c. and was oppoſed to Bocland; what the later Villainage, and in ſome ſenſe Socage, oppoſed to Chivalry, Knight-ſervice, &c. and in all likelihood intended by Ruſticana ſervitus, occurring in a Charter of one Walchelinus Maminiot, of which Mr. Sumner and Mr. Selden may be conſulted.

Be boclanꝺe. Semon ꞅeþe boclanꝺe habbe. ⁊ him hiꞅ maᵹaꞅ læꝼꝺonþonne ꞅeꞇꞇon ꞅe ꝥ he hiꞇ nemoꞅꞇa ꞅẏllan oꝼhiꞃ. Mæᵹeboꞃh ᵹiꝼ ðeꞃbið ᵹeꞃꞃiꞇ, oþþe ᵹeꞃiꞇnyꞅꞅe ꝥ hiꞇ þæꞃa manna ꝼoꞃboꝺ, &c.

Bocland alienable.

Why called Tainland.

Inde clomare ad Tainland. Tenere in Allodio.

Hiſt. of Tithes. c. 11.

Their Juriſdiction and Privileges.

As Sac.

32 H. 8.

67. Thoſe that held Bocland, had ſeveral Juriſdictions and Privileges, over and amongſt thoſe that held Lands of them. Their Franchiſes or Extents of their Juriſdictions and Privileges, or the Territories, Precincts, or Circuits, where they were exerciſed, they called Soc, Socne, Soken and the like. Beſides Doomſday Book, Ingulphus mentions the Soca de Dounedike, Soca de Beltisford, Soca de Tad, and Soca de Acumesbury. And in Notinghamſhire, as appeareth by a Statute of Henry the Eighth, Lordſhip and Soke, were in his time indifferently uſed, as indeed ſtill in the Northern Parts, Soke ſignifies a Franchiſe, of ſuch and ſuch a Place, as the Soke of Oſwelbeck, mentioned in the now cited Statute. The Tenants that held Lands in this Franchiſe, might be called Soc manni, and their Service Socagium, in Latin, agium, as a great Engliſh Lawyer ſaith, being a legal termination, ſignifying Service or Duty, as in Homagium, Eſcuagium, or the like;) but this Term of Socage, after the Conqueſt became more abſtruſe, and as ſuch we ſhall leave it, as neither belonging to us in theſe Saxon matters. But he that was poſſeſſed of theſe Privileges and Franchiſes, uſually was ſaid to have Sac, Soc, Tol, and Team, Infangthef and Outfangthef. Sac, as St. Edward's Laws deſcribe it, was this. * In caſe any one was accuſed of any thing, and he denied it, the forfeiture for proof or denial ſhould be his. It ſuppoſed therefore the Cogniſance and Juriſdiction which the Lord had in his Court in Controverſies and Suits, ariſing amongſt his Vaſſals, ſo as to hold Pleas, and impoſe, levy and collect Fines and Amerciaments thence ariſing. The Power of holding the Pleas, and having all his Vaſſals follow his Court; it ſeems they expreſſed by Soc for the Laws, thus obſcurely deſcribe it. Soca is, in caſe any one ſeek for any thing in his Land, the Juſtice is his whether it be found or not. In this ſenſe therefore it muſt ſignifie what the Lawyers call Secta, in Latin Sequela, Sectatio or Conſecutio, and what in French is called Suite de la Court, although in general, as we ſaid, the word ſignifies a Franchiſe or Immunity. Of Thol or Tol, the Laws ſpeak more plainly, telling us that Thol (which we call Tholonium) is that a Man hath liberty of ſelling and buying in his own Land. It was the privilege of holding a Market, there being no other word to expreſs the ſaid Privilege, till that of Mercat was brought in by the Normans, which ſeems yet originally from the word Merces, to ſignifie great Fairs and Marts, rather than theſe weekly meetings of the adjacent Countrey People, which are meant by the word Tol, which in a ſecondary ſenſe came to ſignifie tribute paid to the Lord of the Market, for the liberty of ſelling within his Juriſdiction, and in after times, it was as Fleta teſtifies, brought to ſignifie freedom from ſuch cuſtome of payment. Concerning Theam, the Laws are again very obſcure.

Soc.

Toll.

Team.

Quod Socage à Soc vel Socne, i. e. Immunitate vel privilegio derivatur, non autem à Soc aratro, vide Somnerum fuſè probantem in ſupra dicto Tractatu de Gavelkind.

Sachae*ſ: quod ſi quilibet aliquem nominatim de aliquo calumniatus fuerit & ille negaverit, foriſfactura probationis vel negationis (ſi evenerit) ſua erit.

Derivatur à Saxon ꞅac Cauſa, adhuc dicimus, for God's ſake. vide Spelm. in voc.

A Græc. θέλω.

Team what.

Infangthef.

68. But its agreed that it ſignifies two things. The firſt is Advocatio or Avoury, or Garranty, of which the Lord had Juriſdiction, viz. concerning thoſe that as the Lawyers phraſe it, are vocati ad warrantiam. Again, it ſignifies an Offſpring or Generation, and here particularly it's applied to the Iſſue or Off-ſpring of a Lord's Villains, and is defined to be a Royalty, which whoſoever enjoys, hath his propriety in his Slaves or Villains within his own Franchiſe or Fee, and power of diſpoſing of them as of his other things, moveable or immoveable, at his pleaſure. Infangthef, was another Royal Privilege, and by St. Edward's Laws, is ſaid to be a Man's Juſtice over a Thief, viz. of his own Man, if he was taken upon his own ground, as Outfangthef (though theſe Laws ſpeak nothing of it) was Juriſdiction over a Thief that did not belong to the Lord, but being a ſtranger, was taken within his Juriſdiction. To what St. Edward's Laws ſay of Infangthef, they add, they which have not theſe cuſtoms, may doe right before the King's Juſtice in Hundreds, Wapentacks, or in Shires. But as it appears by Bracton, in the Norman times, this Juriſdiction over Thieves onely belonged to the King, growing out of uſe amongſt Barons, who formerly had had this Royalty, rather than taken away by any Law, which yet happened to the Hundreds and Shires, which ſeem to have been deprived of this Privilege by the Great Charter. Concerning ſuch Perſons as enjoyed theſe Royalties of Sac, Soc, Tol, Team and Infangthef, we muſt add what the often mentioned Laws farther hint to us. Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and all that have Sac, Soc, Thol, Theam and Infangthef, may have their own Souldiers, (Free Tenants Sr. Henry Spelman reads it) and their own Servants, viz. their Sewers, Butlers, Chamberlains, Bakers, and Cooks under their Friborg; as alſo theſe their Squires, (Armigeri) or others that ſerve them under their Friborg, in caſe they proved faulty, and Hue and Crye was made after them, by the Neighbours, they ſhould ſee right done in their own Court. Thoſe I ſay that have Sac, Soc, Thol, Theam, and Infangthef. By Friborg is meant, what what the Normans called Frankpledge, in Latin, Fidejuſſio; the meaning is, that for all theſe, their Lords were ingaged, and as it were gave ſecurity that they ſhould well demean themſelves.

Vide Skenæum de Verb. ſignif. Spelman. Gloſſar. in voce. Somneri Gloſſar. & Lexicon Saxonic. item in voce & Cowellum. Team autem derivatur à ꞇyman propagare, parturire, unde noſtratium a Teeming.

Ab in i intus, ꝼanᵹan capere, prehendere, (unde digiti hodie Fingers quibuſd. Fangs) & Ðeoꝼ fur.

Friborg what.

That of a Town or City.

A Saxonic. ꝼꞃeoh i. e. liber & Boꞃheꞅ fidejuſſor, vas.

69. Here it is ſeaſonable for the better diſcovery of our Saxon Government, to take notice that generally in every Town there was a Friborg or College, Company or Society of ten of the Principal Men, who were each of them Fidejuſſors for the King, and anſwerable one for another, invented, as it's ſaid, by that glorious King Alfred. From the Number (as in Latin, Decuria, Decania, Decima, Deceana, Fidejuſſio, Decemviratus, and the like) it was called ꞇeoðunᵹ and ꞇien anꞇale or the number of ten men. The chief of them who preſided over the reſt, was alſo called ꞇeoðunᵹman, ꞇienheꝼoꝺ: Boꞃheꞅealꝺeꞃ, and ꝼꞃeoboꞃheꞅheoꝼoꝺ, as in Latin, Decurio, Capitalis Decemvir, Vas Senior, Capitalis Plegius, Capitalis Friborgus, & Juſtitiarius Friburgi. Their Office, Employment, and the effects thereof, are ſet forth at large by the Laws of Edward the Confeſſour, in this manner. Farthermore, there is another the greateſt and moſt principal ſecurity, through which all are firmly eſtabliſhed in their ſeveral Conditions, viz. that every one eſtabliſh himſelf under the ſecurity of this Frankpledge or Surety-ſhip, which the Engliſh call ꝼꞃeoboꞃᵹeꞅ, yet the Yorkſhire Men, and they alone, call it, ꞇien manna ꞇala, which is as much in Latin, as the number of ten men. This Security came to paſs in this manner, viz. that all Inhabitants of every Town whatſoever, in the Kingdom, ſhould be under this decennal Suretyſhip. Inſomuch, as if one of the ten proved faulty, the nine were to have one forthcoming for Juſtice: if he fled, the Law allowed one and thirty days; if he was found out in the mean time, he was led before the King's Juſtice, and was compelled at his own charge to make reparation for what he had done, and if his Crime was ſuch, Juſtice was done upon his Body. But in caſe he could not be found within the compaſs of one and thirty days, there being in every Friborg a Principal whom they called ꝼꞃiboꞃᵹeꞅheoꝼoꝺ, this Principal was to take two of the beſt of his Friborg, and out of the three neareſt Friborgs, from each a Principal, with two others of the beſt of every Friborg, if he could procure them, and ſo he being the twelfth, ought to purge himſelf and his Friborg, if he could, from the offence and flight of the aforeſaid Malefactour; if he could not doe it, he and his Friborg were to make ſatisfaction out of the Goods of the Malefactour, if it could be had, or if not, out of their own Eſtates, ſo much as they were legally condemned in. And what they could not doe with the aſſiſtence of the three neighbouring Friborgs, they themſelves were to ſwear that they would not be in fault for the time to come, and if they could recover the Malefactour, they would bring him before the Juſtice, or declare to the Juſtice where he was.

Prætereà eſt quædam ſumma & maxima ſecuritas, &c. c. 20. de Friborgis.

The Power and Duty of the chief Friborg.

Cùm autem contingeret quòd quidam ſtulti & improbi gratis & nimis conſuetè erga vicinos ſuos, &c. c. 32.

70. The occaſion of making over theſe Friborgs certain Juſtitiaries they afterwards declare, foraſmuch as, it ſeems, the other conſtitution did not ſufficiently accompliſh its deſign. But whereas it ſo happened, that certain fooliſh and naughty Perſons, too frequently and freely committed Inſolencies againſt their Neighbours, wiſe Men began to conſult about it, and over every ten Friborgs conſtituted Juſtitiaries, which (in Latin) we may call Decani, but in Engliſh, were named ꞇienheoꝼoꝺ, or the head of ten. Theſe handled Cauſes amongſt the Villages and Neighbourhoods, and according to the offences, puniſhed and made agreements, viz. concerning Paſtures, Meadows, Corn-fields, and concerning differences amongſt Neighbours, and other innumerable contentions which infeſt humane frailty, and inceſſantly make War againſt it. But whenas any greater Cauſes happened, they were referred to their Superiour Juſtitiaries, whom the above-named wiſe Men appointed over them, viz. over the ten Decani, whom therefore we may call Centurions or Centenaries; for that they were Judges over an hundred Friborgs. Thus we have taken a view of the Polity of our Engliſh Saxons, as to the manner and form of the Government. The next that we doe, muſt be to conſider of their Laws, in the diſcovery of which, much will be farther made out as to the Cuſtoms reſpecting the Government; the faults to which the Nation was incident, the ſorts of their puniſhments, with many other incident matters.

Theſe Northern Nations of the ſame original.

Lex Angliorum, Werinorum & Thuringorum.

71. The Engliſh Saxons and Jutes coming out of the Cherſoneſus of Germany, muſt doubtleſs have brought ſome ſuch Cuſtoms with them as were then in uſe with thoſe Northern Nations, but what they were, as our Learned Gloſſariſt before us, we cannot but very much doubt, there being very little light concerning theſe ancient matters. We reade indeed of the Laws of the Anglii in Germany, but with the Anglii are joyned the Werini and Thuringii, and theſe Laws were confirmed by Charles the Great. We alſo reade of the Law of the Saxons of Germany, which ſome aſcribe to Herald the Dane, who yet flouriſhed, but about the year of our Lord, DCCCCLXXXIV. Lindenbrogius, indeed will have thoſe of Herald much later than thoſe which he himſelf hath publiſhed, together with thoſe of the Friſons; foraſmuch as the Copies both in the ancientneſs of the Parchments, and Hand he imagines to have exceeded the times of Charles. But by our Spelman he is adviſed to take heed what he ſays, for ſome things in them relate to the Church, ſome things to the ſafety of the King of the Franks, and it's well enough known, that till the Reign of Charles, the Saxons were not converted to the Chriſtian Faith; nor had ſubmitted to the Yoke of the Franks. Yet that the Saxons had ancient Laws or Cuſtoms, not found amongſt thoſe that are publiſhed, we may eaſily admit: but theſe we may alſo object, were after they came into Thuringia, after the diſperſing of this People into thoſe ſeveral Quarters from the Cherſoneſus. But our Saxons came as we formerly inculcated from the ancient Saxons, our Angli from that place we formerly deſcribed, and could not deſcend from thoſe Colonies, which after their coming into Britain, were ſent into many places Southward in the Continent. But as they were of the ſame Original with thoſe other Colonies, no wonder if ſome affinity may be found amongſt their Laws and Cuſtoms.

Their Language and Cuſtomes the ſame.

72. For, when as all theſe Gothick or Scandian Nations, viz. the Goths, peculiarly ſo called, the Saxons, Lombards, Vandals, Franks, Danes, Normans and others, had carried their victorious Arms throughout the Weſtern Parts of the Roman Empire, and had begun as it were a Gothick Teutonick, or a Scandian World, no wonder that agreeing in Original, Language and Cuſtoms, impoſing their Laws upon the conquered Nations, and retaining many of their own ancient Terms and Rites, (however in ſome places their Language, for the main, might afterward be ſwallowed up by the multitude of Speakers of that of the place) it ſhould come to paſs, that betwixt us and the Germans, French, Italians, Spaniards, Sicilians, and betwixt all thoſe themſelves, being all of us deſcended from theſe fore-named People, ſo great agreement there ſhould be, as well in the Canon of ancient Laws, as the Names of Magiſtrates, Officers and Miniſters, not to ſpeak of an infinite number of vulgar words. To thoſe Northern Cuſtoms we muſt aſcribe then the very firſt Original of our Saxon Laws, not to any that are now extant in Print. Cuſtoms I call them, for they were ſcarcely written in thoſe Ages, when Hengiſt and Horſas came into Britain. The Runick Letters I confeſs might be more ancient, but they were rather employed upon Mythological matters, and things relating to their ſuperſtition. The firſt beginning of all humane Laws, was imperfect and rude, and our Neighbours lately mentioned, as to their municipal Laws, have no more reaſon to brag than we. * Let them boaſt that will, ſaith our Learned Spelman, of the Antiquity of their Municipal Laws, yet the Original of them, how inconſiderable ſoever, and barbarous, is not to be fetcht from elſewhere, as ſhall appear from what follows. For what Conquering People will wink under the Laws of the Conquered, eſpecially when the one is caſt out, and the other poſſeſſeth its Seat?

* Jactent igitur qui volunt legum ſuarum municipalium antiquitatem (nam & hoc ineptiæ prudentes carpit) earum tamen origo quantulacunq; ſit & barbara, aliunde nuſquam videtur expetenda, ut è ſequentibus elucebit, quis enim victor populus ſub victi legibus, &c. præſertim cum ejecto iſto ſedem ille incoluerit? Spelm. in voc. Lex.

Which prevail'd with the Conquerours.

73. Theſe laſt words are well and cautiouſly added by Sir Henry, for as we have elſewhere obſerved both of Laws and Languages, when theſe Northern People (or indeed any other People any other place) conquered thoſe parts of the Roman Empire, if they imbodied with the conquered People, and were exceeded by them in Numbers, the Language and Faſhions of the Conquered would prevail, as we ſee in the caſe of the Franks conquering Gall, and the Normans conquering England; but in caſe the Victours overpowered the ſubdued People in Numbers, or drove them out of their Poſſeſſions, then both Language and Laws of the victorious People muſt needs prevail as in our preſent caſe, when the Engliſh Saxons drove up the Britains into the Weſtern Mountainous places, deſtroyed them, or forced them to quit the Iſland. But here now it comes fitly to our remembrance, that ſome there are who would have ſeveral Laws and Cuſtoms to have been by the Engliſh Saxons received from the Britains, many of whom, as they contend, continued among them, incorporated with them, and were never driven out. They inſtance in ſeveral Charters made to the Monaſtery of Glaſſenbury, wherein is mention made of the Britiſh Inhabitants as well as Engliſh, and they urge, that had not Britiſh Husbandmen and inferiour ſort of People been ſuffered to continue and Till the Ground, Bread would preſently have failed the Invader himſelf, and he ſhould have wanted ſtrength to Conquer, becauſe he had not whereon to live. That every where, and abſolutely the Britains were driven out no man will affirm; but yet for all this objected, that very few of them continued in the conquered places, we muſt be perſwaded by ſeveral Arguments. One is the general change of the Names of Places, very few Countrey Towns retaining Welſh or Britiſh Names, and thoſe great Towns that did, having ſome addition made unto them. Then the Language evidently makes out the thing in queſtion; for in deſpight of all Laws, Preſcriptions, and Orders, (as we ſee after the Conqueſt by Duke William) the Vulgar will be Maſter of Speech, and the greateſt multitude of Speakers overpower the reſt, each one being addicted to his own Native Language, and however ſome particular Perſons may have an affectation after the Foreign, uſing his own Dialect as moſt eaſie to him. Neither are there ſo many Welſh words crept into the Engliſh as can argue any greater Conjunction and Union than with other neighbouring Nations, with which the Engliſh hath had Traffick and Commerce.

74. But as for that Objection of Tillage, it's eaſily anſwered from what we have already written in its place of the perpetual ſwarming of theſe Engliſh Saxon Nations into Britain, which overpowered the poor Inhabitants by their Numbers, and by their Crowds forced them to quit both Seats and Arms and either paſs the Seas or ſeek for ſhelter in the Mountainous and hardly acceſſible places. Therefore do we reade that thoſe places, whence ſome of them came, were left deſolate, and void of People, Old and Young, Noble and Ignoble, Man, Woman and Child; as well he that handled the Mattock, as he that managed the Sword, haſting to be partaker of that Booty and Fertile Land, of which they had heard ſo much Commendation, and of its worth had aſſurance from this, that none that once came over were willing to return to their former Seats. Some Faſhions and Cuſtoms, while they held Correſpondence in times of Truce, or afterward when the War was finiſhed, they might receive from the Britains, as the Britains alſo from them, there being a kind of Commutation and Re-action in thoſe Caſes, but that any great matters is no way probable. Many Nations agree in ſeveral Cuſtoms, not ſo much out of Communication and from their learning one from another, as that thoſe things are either agreeable to humane Prudence in general, of which all People participate, and conſequently it dictates to them all the ſame things, (the Laws of Nations flowing from this Principle) or that as in Words, in Faſhions, and all other things relating to Mankind there is no Infinity, but Neceſſities, Uſes and Conveniences, being the ſame; ſeveral People as ſeveral men muſt ſometimes light by accident upon the ſelf ſame things. If any conſiderable Laws can be ſhewn to have been derived from the Britains, they were rather thence borrowed by ſuch Saxon Princes as finding a great defect at home, were glad to ſeek elſewhere and provide from abroad Supplies for Domeſtick Wants, for anſwering thoſe new Exigencies which continuance of time and ſettlement in a peaceable condition daily produced. So King Alfred is ſaid to have tranſlated and made Engliſh the Laws of Milmatius the ancient Britiſh King, of which anon.

Unwritten Cuſtoms the firſt original of the Engliſh Saxon Laws.

75. The firſt Original therefore of the Engliſh Saxon Laws were ſuch unwritten Cuſtoms as they brought along with them from beyond the Seas, which were increaſed by the Dictates of natural Prudence according to convenience, and the Exigency of Affairs, and by Obſervation and Communication in proceſs of time came to be more full, certain and ſolemn, in reference to Cuſtoms, or to be by Legiſlatours framed into poſitive and written Precepts. The firſt of theſe, viz. Cuſtoms were according to the People from which they proceeded various, and not fully the ſame throughout the Land, though by reſemblance they ſhewed themſelves near akin, and anſwerable, poſitive Laws they had joyned to them, either firſt made or received by their reſpective Legiſlatours. The Jutes in Kent had their peculiar Laws, but being reduced under the Government of the Weſt Saxon Kings, they alſo ſubmitted to the Laws of the Weſt Saxons. The Angli or Engliſh properly ſo called, uſed the Law called Mercian, and the Laws of St. Edward tell us, that Ewerwickſhire, or Yorkſhire, (or as in the Margent is noted Warwickſhire) Nicolſhire as the Normans called it (which ſhews theſe Laws to have been worded after the Conqueſt) or Lincolnſhire, Notinghamſhire, Leiceſterſhire and Northamptonſhire, as far as Watlingſtreet and eight Miles beyond were under this Law. Afterwards when the Danes came to ſettle and domineer in England, they impoſed their Cuſtoms or Laws upon the Provinces of Eaſt England and Northumberland. So came it to paſs, that in the Land were in force three ſeveral Laws, viz. that of the Then that of the Weſt Saxons.

Of the Mercians.

And the Danes.

the Weſt Saxons called Weſtſeaxnalaga, that of the Engliſh or Mercians called Myrcnalaga, and the other of the Danes called Denelaga. This of the Danes is by the forementioned Laws called Lex Norvorum & Danorum, viz. The Laws of the Norwegians and Danes, and to have been the received Law of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Gratabridgeſhire, or Cambridgeſhire, as alſo of Deira, with the Weſtern and Northern Iſles, as thoſe of Man, Catheney, the Orcades and others, and ſuch as inhabited Gurth, that is the Fenny places. As for the Norwegians, though generally thoſe Northern People that invaded the Land go under the Name of Danes; yet as we have formerly hinted, the People of Norwey, otherwiſe called Normans, are to be underſtood as Partners in the Expeditions; for as under the Names of Norwegians and Normans, the Danes are alſo to be underſtood, ſo under that of Danes are alſo comprized the Norwegians and Normans. The Danes as they ſetled in England by degrees induced their Cuſtoms, which ſeem to have been inforced after that Guthron from King Alfred received the Provinces of Eaſt England and Northumberland; and afterward became the moſt owned Laws of the Land when King Canute had brought the Sceptre into the hands of that People, where it continued from the days of Ethelred to Edward the Confeſſour, during which time the Law of the Engliſh is ſaid to have been mute. Edward when he came to the Crown would not endure that one and the ſame Kingdom ſhould be govern'd with three ſorts of Laws, ſurveyed them all, ſelected and digeſted out of them that which from the thing was called Lex Communis or the Common Law, and from him the Law of St. Edward the Confeſſour.

ƿeꞅꞇ ꞅeaxna laᵹa Mẏꞃcna laᵹa. Ꝺenelaᵹa.

Out of which the Common Law was compiled by Edward the Conſeſſour.

76. So much of the Laws in general, as they reſpected the whole government of the Land. To come to particular Legiſlatours, the Firſt that we know of, who made any written Laws, was Ethelbert King of Kent, he who firſt received Chriſtianity of all the Nation. Concerning him Bede writes, that among other good things he did for the Nation, He ordained for it Decrees of Judgments, according to the Examples of the Romans, with the Council of Wiſe Men. Which being written in the Language of the Engliſh, are hitherto kept and obſerved by it. In which he firſt placed how he ought to make amends that ſhould ſteal any thing from the Church or Biſhop, or the other Orders, reſolving to protect thoſe whom with their Doctrine he had received. That he ordained was Decrees of Judgments (Decreta * Judiciorum) which may be explained by what follows, concerning Sacrilegious Perſons, that they ſhould be puniſhed or make amends (the Parliaments in France in their Arreſts of Condemnation of Criminals to death, uſe ſtill the Term of making honourable amends, anſwerable to the Latin Emendare here uſed by Bede) and this was according to the * Examples of the Romans. Theſe Decrees of Judgments then were Judicial Laws inflicting Puniſhments upon Offenders, and were taken from the Roman Books. It was about the year of our Lord DLXI that Ethelbert (according to Sir Henry Savill's Faſti) began his Reign in the thirty fifth year of Juſtinian, and he reigned about ſix and fifty years, in which time (Bede tells not in what year) he ordained and publiſhed theſe Decrees of Judgments. But publiſh them in what year he would, Juſtinian's Law, or his New Model, was not then known to the European Nations, nor many years after. What therefore he took from the Roman Laws muſt have been out of Theodoſius's Code (which determines of matters as well Eccleſiaſtical as Civil) out of the Fragments of Gaius, Paulus or Ulpian, or a ſmall part of the Pandects which then was known to the Europeans. So Alarick the King of the Viſigoths in Gall had near an hundred years before cauſed the Code of Theodoſius to be abbreviated by Anianus his Chancellour, and publiſhed for the benefit of his People.

Ethelbert the firſt Law-maker.

Lib. 2. c. 5. Qui inter cætera bona quæ genti ſuæ conſulendo conferebat, etiam decreta illi Judiciorum juxta exempla Romanorum, cum concilio ſapientium conſtituit. Quæ conſcripta Anglorum ſermone hactenus habentur & obſervantur ab eo. In quibus primitus poſuit, qualiter id emendare deberet qui aliquid rerum vel Eccleſiæ vel Epiſcopi vel reliquorum ordinum furto auferret, volens ſcil. tuitionem eis quos & quorum doctrinam ſuſceperat, præſtare.

* Rex Alfredus vertit ꞅƿẏlceꞃe ꞃihꞇꞃa ꝺoma ᵹeꞅeꞇneꞅꞅe.

* Æꝼꞇeꞃ Romana bẏꞅena.

77. What theſe Decrees of Judgments were which Ethelbert publiſhed, we do not certainly know. Yet are there certain Laws in a Manuſcript Book of Rocheſter, called Textus Roſſenſis, an ancient Monument indeed, but ſuch as in this matter we cannot fully truſt. For neither do theſe Laws of his ſeem to be taken from the Roman Books; nor doth their Language ſeem to be near ſo ancient as King Ethelbert, nor doth Bromton the Abbat of Jornal mention them, though carefull to deliver ſuch Laws of thoſe Saxon Kings as he then found, and thought authentick. And therefore ſhall we exhibit onely ſuch as are found in him and Mr. Lambard's Edition. The next Legiſlatour to Ethelbert, at leaſt whom he can receive as ſuch, was Ine or Ina the King of the Weſt Saxons, who began his Reign well nigh an Sect. 12. hundred years (four wanted) after that Ethelbert ended his, and made his Laws by the Advice of Cenred his Father, Hedda and Erhenwald his Biſhops, all his Senatours, and the Elders of the Wiſemen of the People in a great Aſſembly of the Servants of God for the Salvation of their Souls, and the common preſervation of his Kingdom, that lawfull Marriages and juſt Judgments might be eſtabliſhed throughout all his Dominions, and that no Senatour or other of his Subjects might tranſgreſs his Laws. After this Preface follow the particular Laws, many whereof relate to Church Matters, and in that Hiſtory are to be exemplifi'd, of ſuch as reſpect the Civil State we ſhall here make mention. If any one fight in the King's Court, let him forfeit all his Eſtate, and let it be in the King's power whether to put him to death or not. Let him that fights in a Church forfeit an hundred and twenty ſhillings; he that commits the like Offence in the Houſe of a Senatour or any other Wiſe and Honourable Perſon ſixty ſhillings. If any one fight in the Houſe of a * Countreyman paying Rent, or any Husbandman, let him forfeit thirty ſhillings, and ſix ſhillings to the Man himſelf, if in the open Field let him be fined an hundred and twenty ſhillings. If at a Feaſt there be any falling out, let ſuch as abuſe the reſt incurr the Mulct of thirty ſhillings. The next that follows ordains, That if a man ſteal without the knowledge of his Wife and Children, he be fined ſixty ſhillings, but if all the Family be knowing and conſenting, (a) all of them be condemned to Servitude. And it declares, That a Boy of Ten years old is to be eſteemed guilty of Theft. The next enacts, That (b) If any one deſire of the Shiremen (c) or other Judges that Right be done him, and cannot obtain it, neither can have any Caution given him, the Judge in ſuch caſe be fined thirty ſhillings, and yet that Right be done the Man within a (d) ſevennight. The ninth Law commands, That In (e) caſe any one revenge his own Quarrel privately, before he require Juſtice to be done him, he ſhall reſtore what he took, pay the full value of the thing, and further, be fined thirty ſhillings. The Tenth impoſes (f) Upon ſuch as rob within the Kingdom, or make Booty of any thing, a Mulct of ſixty ſhillings, beſides the reſtoring of what was taken. The next appoints, That if (g) any one buy his own Countreyman, be he Bond or Free, and ſend him over Sea, though he guilty of any Crime, ſhall pay (h) the whole rate or price of his Head; and further, give ſatisfaction to Almighty God. The next Sentences Such as bear falſe Witneſs before the Biſhop, or falſly produce their Pledges, to pay an hundred and twenty ſhillings.

* Gıꝼhe ðonne on ᵹeꝼolᵹılðen huꞅ. oþþeon ᵹebuꞃeꞅ ᵹeꝼeohꞇe XXX ꞅcill. ꞇo ƿıꞇe ᵹeꞅylle. ⁊ ðæm ᵹebuꞃe ꞅyx ꞅcill.

C. 7. Be ꞅꞇale.

(a) ᵹanᵹen hi ealleon ðeoƿeꞇ ⁊ ꞇẏnƿınꞇꞃe cnıhꞇ maᵹ beon ðeoꝼþe ᵹeƿıꞇa ⁊

(b) C. 8. Be ꞃıhꞇeꞅbene ⁊

(c) ꞅcıꞃmen.

(d) binnan ꞅeoꝼan nıhꞇe.

(e) C. 9. Be ðam ƿꞃæcenðan ⁊

(f) C. 10. Be ꞃeaꝼlace.

(g) C. 11. Be leoð bẏᵹenæ ⁊

(h) ꝼoꞃᵹẏlð hıne be hıꞅƿæꞃe.

(i) C. 12. Be ðam þe heoꞃa ᵹeƿıꞇnẏ ꞅꞃe ᵹeleoᵹaþ ⁊

78. The thirteenth Law, concerning Thieves or Robbers, ordains, That if any ſuch be apprehended he be put to death, or elſe pay the value of his Head. Now (ſaith he) we call them Robbers as far as the number of ſeven men; from ſeven as far as five, and thirty we call a Troop or Company; if above, we name it an Army. Concerning ſuch as are found in the Troop or Company, the next Law enacts, That ſuch an one purge himſelf by an hundred and twenty Hides of Land by Oath, or make an anſwerable Compenſation. He that is found in the Army, the fifteenth Law commands, That he redeem himſelf by the price of his Head, or make ſatisfaction. But this Oath muſt be made one half by Maſters of Families or Houſhoulders. And in caſe the Thief be in the King's Cuſtody this Redemption cannot be admitted. Concerning theſe Oaths made by an hundred Hides, and by Houſhoulders, the Reader muſt call to mind what lately we ſaid concerning Friborgs, and Caution given about Malefactours, as alſo refer to what is ſaid afterward concerning the valuation of Heads. The ſixteenth requires, That he that hath killed a Thief make Oath that he killed him as a Criminal, this done he is to be diſcharged. The next is made about ſuch as find ſtoln fleſh and hide it, that it may be lawfull, if they will, to prove it their own. Such as give notice of it are to be rewarded. The next that follows is, A Countreyman if he often ſtole, and at laſt be taken in the Fact, let him looſe an Hand or a Foot. The next ordains, That the King's Husbandman or Looker to his Cattel, if the price of his Head be twelve Hundred Shillings, and he be an Houſhoulder, his Oath be taken for ſixty Hides. The

C. 13. Be ᵹeꝼanᵹenum ðeoꝼum.

C. 14. Behloþum.

C. 15. Be heꞃᵹe.

C. 16. Be ðeoꝼſleᵹe.

C. 17. Be ꝼoꞃꞅꞇolenum ꝼlæꞅce.

C. 18. Be ceoꞃlıꞅcum ðeoꝼum ᵹeꝼanᵹenum ⁊

C. 19. Be Cẏnınᵹeꞅ ᵹeneaꞇ ⁊ twentieth willeth, That if a Travellour or Stranger wander up and down the Woods, and neither cry out nor wind an Horn, as a Thief be put to death, or redeem his life. If any require the value of any one ſo ſlain at the ſlayers hands, he that killed him, if he make Oath that he ſlew him as a Thief is to be indemnified both againſt the Aſſociates of the ſlain and his Lord. But if he diſſembled the Crime, and afterwards it appeareth, then gives he advantage to the Kindred of the ſlain man by Oath to purge their dead Kinſman of the fault. That which follows directs, That if any ones Vaſſal ſteal and flie for it, his Maſter call * upon ſuch as ingaged for him, if there were any; if not, he himſelf muſt pay the value of the thing, no Remiſſion being to be uſed in the caſe. And the two and twentieth wills, That if a Foreigner be ſlain, the King have two parts of the value of his Head, and his Children or Kindred the third; if he have no Kindred, the King is to have half of that, and his Companion or Gild-fellow the reſt. After the ſame manner an Abbat or Abbeſs, if they be concern'd may ſhare with the King. A Welchman that pays yearly Rent is to be eſteemed at an hundred and twenty ſhillings; his Son at an hundred, and his Servant at ſixty or fifty; let a Welchman redeem a beating with twelve ſhillings. If he poſſeſs five Hides of Land, let his value be ſix hundred ſhillings.

C. 20. Be ꝼeoꞃꞃan Cumenum men ⁊

C. 21. Be þon þe monneꞅ geneaꞇ ꞅꞇalige ⁊

* gif ðu hæbbe boꞃgaꞅ mana ðone ðæꞃ angyldeꞅ.

C. 22. Be ælðeoðgeꞅ manneꞅ ꞅlæge ⁊

De his Capitum æſtimationibus vide quæ infra dicimus ad LL. Æthelſtani.

79. Ine by his twenty third Law commands, That if an Engliſhman, deprived of his Liberty, ſteal again, he be hanged, and no Compenſation at all be made to his Lord. In caſe any one ſlew him, that nothing upon that account be paid to his Kindred, except they redeemed him within a Twelvemonth. By his twenty fourth, That if a Merchant that trades by Land buy any thing, he get Witneſs of what he buys. For in caſe any ſtoln thing be found with him which he cannot prove he bought by good Witneſs, he is bound to make it good, that he neither ſtole it nor was privy to the Theft, or elſe muſt pay ſix and thirty ſhillings. By his twenty fifth he takes care, That for the Maintenance of a Child expoſed and found, ſix ſhillings be allowed for the firſt year; twelve for the ſecond, and thirty for the third: That afterward the allowance be inlarged according to the goodlineſs of the Child. By his twenty fixth, To him that takes a Thief he gives as a Reward Ten ſhillings, and declares, that the King is to have the Thief. Here the Thief's Kindred are to take an Oath that they will not interpoſe on his behalf. In caſe he Contumaciouſly made reſiſtence, or fled for it, he is to be taken as guilty of the Offence. If he free himſelf he muſt doe it with reſpect to the value of the thing, and the greatneſs of the Mulct. By the twenty ſeventh he enacts againſt Such as beget Children clandeſtinely, ordering that if ſuch Children be killed they ſhall looſe the prices or valuation of their lives, which the King and their Lords ſhall have. The twenty eighth requires, That if one lend another man's Servant his Sword; if it be loſt, a third part of the value of his Head is to be paid; if a Spear, the half; and if an Horſe, that the whole value of the Slaves life be paid. By vertue of his twenty ninth, If a Countreyman was accuſed of relieving a Fugitive, and could not clear himſelf, he was to pay the value both of his own and the Fugitives life. And by his thirtieth, If any one bought a Woman and paid not for her what was agreed, he was to pay double the price, and over and above be ſeverely puniſhed, as if he had broken ſuretyſhip, which they termed Borhbryce. The one and thirtieth ſets the value of the Head of a Welchman, if he have an Hide of Land, at one hundred and twenty Shillings, if but half an Hide at eighty Shillings; if he have no Land at all at ſixty. But the thirty ſecond excepts the King's Stable-Groom being a Welchman, ordaining, That if he was fit to carry a Meſſage, the valuation of his Head ſhould be at two hundred ſhillings. By this we learn, that the Kingdom of the Weſt Saxons, bordering part of it upon Wales, ſome Welchmen lived amongſt the Engliſh. That according to Lambard's tranſlation of the word, the King was wont to have a Welchman to look to his Horſes, for the Phraſe is, not the King's Horſe-Groom, or his Horſes Maſter, but the King's Horſe Welchman, yet we may call him the Gentleman or Maſter of his Horſe, becauſe of his other imployment that follows. We reade in the Saxon Annals of Wulfric King Alfred's Horſethegne or Miniſter, who was alſo Governour of Wales. Yet Mr. Sumner by no means will allow of Lambard's

C. 23. Be ƿiꞇe þeoꞃum.

C. 24. Be Cyꞃmanna on lande.

C. 25. Be ꝼundeneꞅ cildeꞅ ꝼoꞅꞇꞃe.

C. 26. Be ðeoꝼeꞅ onꝼeng.

C. 27. Be ðam ðe deaꞃnunga beaꞃn ꞅꞇꞃýneð.

C. 28. Be þam þe hiꞅ ƿæpnic onlæne.

C. 29. Be þam þe ꝼlyman ꝼeoꞃmige.

Boꞃhbryce.

C. 31. Be Cyliꞅceꞅ moneꞅ land hæꝼene.

C. 32. Be Cyningeꞅ hoꞃꞅ Ƿealh.

Sect. 12.

bard's Interpretation of the word Wealh here for a Welſhman, but affirms it ſignifies onely a Servant, as Mr. Lambard himſelf alſo ſometimes interprets it. For it appears, that the Saxon Kings were wont to ſend their Domeſticks upon Meſſages, both from this Law and what we have formerly out of Ingulphus obſerved concerning Oſlat the Butler of King Ethelwulf, who was preſent at the Council held by Bertulph King of the Mercians, and in the name of his ſaid Maſter, his Sons and all the Weſt Saxons ſigned the Charter granted to the Monaſtery of Croyland, both in quality of his Butler and of his * Ambaſſadour.

* Ego Oſlat pincerna Regis Ethelwulf & Legatus ipſius Domini mei, &c.

80. The three and thirtieth Law provides, That in caſe any was preſent at the killing of a man, he ſhall purge himſelf according to the value of his Head, or elſe be puniſhed for his preſence according to the value of his life that was ſlain. As if the valuation of his Head was of two hundred ſhillings, let him pay fifty; and let the ſame courſe be taken in thoſe that are born of any nobler Families. The thirty fourth ſays what formerly had been ſaid, That if any one ſlay a Thief he muſt make Oath that he killed him as a Malefactour, and farther adds, that he muſt make faith of this by Oath of men not choſen on purpoſe for the buſineſs, to the Kindred of the ſlain. In caſe he deny the fact and it become manifeſt he muſt pay the value of the mans Head. The next Law provides, That if any one be ſued for keeping another mans Goods, and by Oath preconceived hath denied the having of them, and fears not again to ſwear to the ſame purpoſe he ſware according to the penalty and the value of the thing. But in caſe he refuſe this Oath, that he pay double for his Perjury. That which follows again, *Requires the value of the Thiefs Head of him that ſhall let him eſcape. If * he be an Alderman he is to forfeit his Shire, except the King think fit to pardon him.* The next impoſes Forfeiture of Hand or Foot upon a Countreyman, who having been often accuſed of Theft hath been ſold or convicted any other way. The thirty eighth Law provides, That if a Countreyman have Children and die, the Children abide with their Mother, and to keep them that ſhe have ſix ſhillings, with a Cow in Summer and an Oxe in Winter; and that the Kindred keep the Seat till the Children come to age. That which follows directs *Concerning ſuch as flie from their Lords, and lurke in any other * Shire, that they be thence ſent back, and moreover ſixty ſhillings paid to their Lord.* The fortieth requires that the Field of a Countreyman adjacent to his Houſe be fenced as well in Summer as in Winter. If any gap lie open and ſo let in his Neighbours Cattel, the Countreyman muſt expect no ſatisfaction, but muſt himſelf take care for keeping out the Cattel and alone go away with the loſs. The one and fortieth gives liberty to deny ſuretyſhip, in caſe he knows that he doeth well.

C. 33. Be manslyhte.

C. 34. Be ðeofslihte.

C. 36. Be ðon ðemon þeof forlæte.

* gif he ealdorman sýþoligehis scire, butan hun Cýning arian wille ⁊

C. 37. Be Cýrlisces monnes betogennisse.

C. 38. Be þon þe riht gehiþan bearn hæbban.

C. 39. Be una lýfedum fære fram his hlaford.

* Oþþe on oþre scire hine bestele. Vides his antiquitatem vocis Shire.

C. 40. Be ceorles ƿeorþige.

C. 41. Be borges onsæce.

81. The forty ſecond Law ordains concerning Common Ground, in this manner. If Graſs-ground or any other belong to ſeveral Countreymen, and ſome will fence their part, and others refuſe to doe the ſame by theirs: if Cattle break into the Ground on that part that lay unfenced, let ſuch as owe this part make ſatisfaction to the other, and the owners of the Cattle to them, according to Right and Juſtice: but if there be any Beaſt that breaks Hedges and is troubleſome, and the owner thereof either cannot or will not keep it at home, he that finds the Beaſt in his Ground may kill it, and the owner of it ſhall have the Carkaſs, and no other compenſation made. The forty third enjoyns, that If any one ſet fire to the Trunk of a Tree lying in a Wood and be thereof convicted, he be puniſhed for it, and beſides that pay ſixty Shillings, for this reaſon, becauſe Fire is a clandeſtine Thief. If any fell Trees in a Wood and be convicted thereof, that for the three firſt Trees he pay thirty ſhillings, and undergo no greater puniſhments how many ſoever there be of them, becauſe an Axe by the noiſe diſcovers the Fact, neither can it eaſily be concealed. The next impoſes a penalty of ſixty ſhillings upon him that ſhall fell a Tree, the Branches whereof can cover thirty Swine: that which follows makes an Annual Livery, a ſort of Garment given to the Family of the value of ſix pence. The forty ſixth impoſes penalties upon Breaches of the Peace: as If the Peace be broken in the Town of the King, an hundred and twenty ſhillings; in the Town of an Alderman or Senatour eighty ſhillings; in that of the King's Thane or Miniſter ſixty ſhillings; if in the Town of the chief Man of the Hundred, having Land, five and thirty ſhillings; and the purgation of the crime is to be anſwerable. The forty ſeventh takes order, that If any one be accuſed of Theft, or of receiving a ſtoln thing he,

C. 42. Be Ceorla gemænum land.

C. 43. Be ƿudu bærnet.

C. 44.

C. 45. Gafol-hƿitel.

C. 46. Be burhbrýce.

C. 47. Be stal týhtlan.

he free himſelf from the crime by ſixty Hides, if he be accounted fit to ſwear. If an Engliſh Man ſteal, that he purge himſelf by a double number. If a Welſh Man, that he be obliged to no greater a number of Jurours. And that it be lawfull to any one both to prevent by oath the penalty of receiving Thieves, and the valuation of one ſlain in caſe of capital enmity, if he can, and be not aſhamed to doe it. That which follows ordains, that If any ſtoln goods be intercepted, one of ſervile condition muſt not be taken for a Voucher, as bought of him. And the next to that, In caſe any one for his crimes be condemned to ſlavery, and he be accuſed that he ſtole ſomething while he was free, the Accuſer may beat him once: and the Thief, according to the value of what he ſtole, is to be beaten how unwilling ſoever.

C. 48. Be-ꝼoꞃꞅꞇolene ceap beꝼangene.

C. 49. Be-ƿiꞇe ðeoƿum mannum.

82. The fiftieth Law is concerning him that finds Swine feeding upon his Maſt, or Acorns, without leave, that he take a pledge worth ſix ſhillings: if they never were there before let him that owns them pay one ſhilling, and according to the value of the Swine, let ſatisfaction be given that they never were in before; but if it ſhall appear that they had been in oftner, let two ſhillings be paid. He that takes in Hogs to feed upon Acorns, of thoſe that are three fingers thick in fat, let him take every third; of thoſe that are two fingers, every fourth; of ſuch as are the thickneſs of ones thumb in fat, every fifth. The fifty firſt forbids him whom theſe Laws call Geſithcundmon (being of condition below a Thane, and above a Ceorle, probably as we have already tranſlated it, the Chief of the Hundred) if he petition the King or his Alderman, for his Family; or the Lord for any Slave or Free-man, to ſue for any remiſſion of a Mulct, becauſe he had not inflicted deſerved puniſhment upon Offenders at Home. That which follows enacts again concerning this ſame ſort of man, that If he held Lands and refuſe to go to War, he loſe his Land, and pay one hundred and twenty ſhillings: if he have no Lands, that he pay ſixty ſhillings. A Ceorliſeman or Countreyman, if he offend in this ſort, he muſt pay thirty ſhillings. By the next, He that is accuſed of a Clandeſtine crime muſt purge himſelf according to an hundred and twenty Hides of Land, or elſe pay ſo many ſhillings. The fifty fourth provides, that In caſe another Man's Slave be found with a Man, and he be dead of whom he pretends he bought him, that the Buyer go to his Grave, and there according to the rate of forty Hides, make Oath that he bought this Slave of him, which done he is to be acquitted, and the Slave is to return to his former Lord. The ſame is to be obſerved in other ſtoln things. But in caſe it be known who had the goods of the Deceaſed, he is to be gone too, and to be deſired to clear the ſale except he make it good, that the Slave never belonged to the dead man. The fifty fifth orders, that If one be accuſed to have been at deadly enmity with a ſlain man, and the value of him be required at his hand, and he will ſwear that he gave him not his mortal wound; in ſuch caſe the Oath called the Royal Oath, according to the rate of thirty Hides is to be duly adminiſtred, whether thoſe called Geſithcundmen, or Meor Ceorles be joyned with him. In caſe he be found guilty, yet he may give his Corſlet and his Sword to whom of his Companions he will, though he be not able to pay the value of the ſlain. A Welſhman deprived of Liberty, muſt make this ſort of Purgation, according to the Rate of twelve Hides. A Slave muſt be beaten. An Engliſhman muſt ſwear according to the Rate of four and thirty Hides.

C. 50. Be unalẏꝼeꝺeꞅ mæꞅꞇeneꞅ onꝼenᵹ.

C. 51. Beꞅiþcunꝺeꞅ monneꞅ ᵹeþinᵹe.

Vid. Sonnerum in Gloſſario voc. Sithcundus.

C. 52. Be ðon ðe ᵹeꞅiþcunꝺman ꝼẏꞃꝺ ꝼoꞃꞅiꞇꞇe.

C. 53. Be ðẏꞃnum ᵹeþinᵹþe.

C. 54. Baꝼoꞃꞅꞇoleneꞅ manneꞅ ꝼoꞃꝼenᵹe.

C. 55. Be ƿæꞃꞃæh þe ꞇẏhꞇlan.

83. The fifty ſixth, “Sets the price of an Ewe and her Lamb at one ſhilling, till a Fortnight after Eaſter. The next, Gives leave to any one that has bought imprudently any faulty thing, and diſcovers the fault within thirty days to return it to the Seller, except he will take his Oath that at the time of ſale, that fault was unknown to him. The fifty Eighth, Acquits the Wife of Theft, though conſcious to her Huſband's ſtealing, becauſe ſhe is to be obedient to him. And upon his condemnation, if ſhe refuſeth not to ſwear that ſhe had no part of the thing ſtoln, ſhe may poſſeſs the third part of his Goods. The next ordains that “He that cuts off the Horn of an Ox pay ten pence, the Horn of a Cow two pence. If the Tail of an Ox four pence, if that of a Cow five pence. Whoſo puts out the Eye of an Ox muſt pay five pence, if the Eye of a Cow one ſhilling. That which follows concerning Rent Barley is imperfect in Mr. Lambard”s Copy, neither doth Brompton's Tranſlation make it much more intelligible. By the ſixty firſt, “If a Countreyman hired a Yoke of Oxen, and had Fodder

C. 56. Be eoƿeꞅ ƿẏꞃþe

C. 57.

C. 58. Be Cẏꞃliꞅceꞅ monneꞅ ꞅꞇale.

C. 59, Be Oxan.

C. 60. Be ꞃeᵹaꝼol.

C. 61. Be hẏꞃe Geôc.

Sect. 12.

" der ſufficient, he was in that kind to pay the whole hire, if not ſufficient, then " half in Fodder, and half otherwiſe. The next commands " The firſt fruits of " Corn, due to the Church to be paid out of that Houſe, where a Man lives at " Chriſtmas. Of this we muſt ſpeak in Church matters. The ſixty third gives order, " That if an accuſed Perſon be required to give pledge, and is not able to " doe it before the Trial, in caſe another Man offers to doe it for him, on condition that he give himſelf up into his Power, till ſuch time as he can give him ſatisfaction for what he now depoſites; and now a ſecond time Caution is demanded of the accuſed Party, and he who aſſiſted him before now refuſeth to help " him the ſecond time; if he be caſt, let him looſe what he laid down for him " when the ſuit began. The next concerning him called Geſithcundman ordains, " That if he change his Habitation, it may be lawfull to him to take along with " him his Officer or Baily, his Smith, and his Child Foſter or his Nurſe. Here the word Smith, Lambard tranſlates, Fabrum Ferrarium, viz. Backſmith; but Smith in Saxon, anſwers fully to Faber in Latin, not onely Faber Ferrarius, but Faber Lignarius, or any of the other ſort, the reaſon why it is become the moſt general ſirname now in England.

C. 62. Be Cyꞃic ꞅceaꞇꞇe.

C. 63. Be ðon ðe mon ꞇo ceape ꝼoꞃꝺꞃæꝼe.

C. 64. Be ᵹeꞅiþcunꝺeꞅ monneꞅ ꝼaꞃe.

84. By this ſixty fifth Law King Ina enacts, That whoſoever poſſeſſeth twenty Hides of Land and removes his Habitation, ſhall leave twelve Hides ſown with Corn. He that occupies ten ſhall leave ſix, and he that poſſeſſeth three ſhall leave one and an half. This we may ſuppoſe done in reſpect of the want of Corn, this Iſle and all in ancient times abounding with wood, which long after the time of Ina, procured Laws for cutting it down, though now we be in the other extreme. By that which follows he provides for him, That hath hired and ploughed a Yardland, that if the Landlord exact other ſervices from him beſides the Rent, he ſhall not need to pay them nor abſtain from tilling the ground, except he aſſign him alſo an Houſe to dwell in. Againſt Geſithcundman the next ordains, That in caſe he be baniſhed, he ſhall not have the liberty to return to his Houſe. The ſixty Eighth Commands, That a Sheep be not ſhorn till Midſummer, otherwiſe the Fleece is to be redeemed with two pence. The ſixty ninth is concerning Valuations of Mens Heads, that, If a Man in his Life-time was valued at two Hundred ſhillings, thirty of them ſhould be deducted to make his Lord recompence for his death. If one was valued at ſix hundred, in ſuch caſe Eighty ſhould be deducted; if at twelve Hundred, then were to be deducted One hundred and twenty. The ſeventieth concerning maintenance exacts, that, From ten Hides of Land be allowed ten Fatts or Barrels of Honey; three Hundred loaves; twelve Runlets of Welſh Ale; thirty of the ſmaller Ale; two grown Oxen, or ten Wethers, ten Geeſe, twenty Hens, ten Cheeſes, one Pott of Butter, five Salmons, twenty Pound weight of Fodder, and an Hundred Eeles. That which follows wills, that, If one be required to pay the Value of his Head, and being now to ſwear, confeſſes what before he denied, he pay nothing by way of Mulct, till he have firſt ſatisfied for the value of his Head. The ſeventy ſecond requires, that, If a Thief who had formerly paid the value of his Head be taken, and make his eſcape the ſame day, the whole mulct be not again required, he being taken about Night: but in caſe the Theft was committed the Night before, ſuch as formerly apprehended him, muſt pay as the King or his Officer ſhall ordain.

C. 65. Be lanꝺ hæbbenꝺum.

C. 66.

C. 67. Be ᵹeꞅiðcunꝺeꞅ monneꞅ ꝺꞃæꝼe oꝼ lanꝺe.

C. 68 Be ꞅceapeꞅ ᵹanᵹemiꝺ ꝼleoꞅ.

C. 69. Be ƿeꞃum.

C. 70. Be ꝼoꞅꞇꞃe. ꞇyn ꝼaꞇa huniᵹeꞅ. Oþþeꞇyn ƿeþeꞃaꞅ. ꞇyn ᵹeeꞅ. ꞇƿenꞇiᵹ henna. ꞇyn cyꞅaꞅ. ambeꞃꝼulne buꞇeꞃan. ꝼiꝼ leaxaꞅ. ꞇƿenꞇiᵹ punꝺ ƿaᵹa ꝼoꝺꞃeꞅ. ⁊ hunꝺ ꞇeonꞇiᵹ æla, vide quam parum diſtant iſta rerum nomina ab hodiernis.

C. 71. Be ƿeꞃꞇyhꞇlan. C. 72. Be ƿeꞃᵹylꝺ ðeoꝼeꞅ ꝼoꝼenᵹ.

Vide hic Spelman. in voc. Firma omnino.

85. The ſeventy third ordains, " That if a Welſh Slave kill an Engliſh Man, his " Maſter ſhall give him up into the Hands of the Lord, and the Kindred of him " that was ſlain, or elſe redeem him with ſixty ſhillings. If he will not part with " his Money, that then he ſet at liberty his Slave, and the Kindred of the ſlain recover the value of their Kinſman, if the other have any Kindred to bear him " out. If not, let him expect miſchief from his Adverſaries. A Freeman need " not pay with a Slave (except to buy off Capital Enmities or deadly Feuds) " neither a Slave with a Freeman. The next ordains concerning ſtoln Goods, " If they be found with another Man, and the Seller will neither own the Goods " nor that he ſold them, and yet confeſs that he ſold the Party ſome other things, " in ſuch caſe it muſt lye upon the Buyer to prove, that he ſold him theſe very " Goods and none other. The ſeventy fifth and the laſt is concerning him that " kills ones Godfather or Godſon, That, he pay as much to the Kindred of the " ſlain,

C. 73. Be ðon ðe ðeoƿ ƿealh ꝼꞃiᵹne man oꝼꞅlea ⁊

C. 74. Be ꝼoꞃꞅꞇoleneꞅ ceapeꞅ ꝼoꞃꝼenᵹ ⁊

C. 75. Be ᵹoꝺꝼæðeneꞅ oþþe ᵹoꝺꞅuneꞅ ꞅlyhꞇ ⁊

"ſlain, as ought to be paid to the Lord for the loſs of his Servant. And the Payment muſt be more or leſs according to the value of him that was ſlain, and "that which was to be made to the Lord for his loſs. But in caſe it was the "King's Godſon that was ſlain, ſatisfaction muſt be made to him aſwell as the "Kindred. In caſe a Kinſman ſlew him, abatement muſt be made of what is to "be paid to his Godfather, as if it had even to his Lord. If the ſlain was the "Son of a Biſhop, abatement muſt be made of the half.

86. Theſe are the Laws of King Ina, which we have tranſcribed, becauſe they are the firſt of the Engliſh Nation, now extant: of ſuch as follow we ſhall make mention with relation unto them. The next Legiſlatour after Ina, was Offa King of the Mercians, whom we may very well take for Authour of the Mercian Law, and not Martia the Widow of Guenthelin King of Britain, though ſome fanſie her to have enacted it while ſhe held the Regency of the Kingdom in the Minority of her Son, about three Hundred and fifty Years before the Birth of our Saviour. That Offa the King of the Mercians, made Laws is evident from the Preface of King Alfred to ſuch as he enacted, though now there be no Body of them extant. For the next Legiſlatour after Offa was Alfred himſelf, to whom St. Henry Spelman gives the Epithetes of Pius, Inclitus, Felix, and, amongſt perpetual and moſt bitter troubles, of Victor and Triumphator, Alfred never ſufficiently to be commended King alſo of the Weſt Saxons, but to whom all both Engliſh and Saxons voluntarily ſubmitted themſelves, to whom alſo Guthrun the Daniſh King ſwore obedience, and held the Provinces of the Eaſt Engliſh and Northumbrians as his Vaſſal. He himſelf tells us in the Concluſion of his Religious preface "That "whatſoever he found worthy of Obſervation, either in the time of Ina his Kinſ"man, or of Offa King of the Mercians, or of Ethelbert the firſt Chriſtened King, he "gathered them all together, and omitted the reſt, in which work he uſed the "advice, and had the conſent of the wiſeſt Men about him. Having reviſed the Laws of theſe Princes, he tranſcribed ſuch of them as he liked into his own, and by conſent of thoſe Wiſemen he uſed Collection, commanded them to be obſerved by all Engliſh Men, under which Name the Saxons and Jutes were then included.

Offa.

Alfred.

Leland Ceſtrienſis Monachus, apud Spelman. v. Lex. Merciorum.

Ac ꝺa ꝺe ic ᵹemeꞇꞇe ahƿæꞃ oþþeon Ineꞅ ꝺæᵹemineꞅ mæᵹeꞅ. oþþe on Offam Myꞃcna cyninᵹeꞅ, &c.

87. The firſt of his Laws commands, an Oath and a pledge to be ſtrictly regarded. "If any by neceſſity was compelled to ſwear or depoſite a pledge, where"by he is bound either to lay ſnares for his own Lord or unjuſtly to aſſiſt any "Perſon, he is adviſed to recede, rather than to ſtand to his obligation. But in caſe "he engaged to perform any thing which might juſtly be done, and doth not doe "it, his Arms and all his Fortunes are to be put into the Hands of his Friends, "and he is to be put into the King's Priſon for forty days, till he undergoe that "puniſhment, which the Biſhop according to his Deſerts ſhall lay upon him. If he "have not wherewith to ſuſtain himſelf in the mean while, his Kindred are to "provide him Victuals, if they be not in condition, the King's Officer muſt doe it. "If by force he be conſtrained to give up his Arms, he muſt forfeit both his "Arms and all his Eſtate, and if in making reſiſtence he dye, nothing is to be paid "as the valuation of his Head. In caſe he fly before his time be out and be taken, he "is to be returned back again to priſon for other forty days. If he eſcape he is to "have no benefit of the Laws, and to be excommunicated in all Churches. If "any ingaged for him he muſt pay his forfeit, and undergo ſuch penance as the "Prieſt ſhall ſet him. The ſecond bears the Title of the immunity of the Church, and we ſhall ſpeak of it in the Eccleſiaſtical concernments. The third is concerning the breach of Suretyſhip. "If the Suretyſhip was in behalf of the King, "ſatisfaction muſt be made according to the Damage received, and the breach "farther puniſhed by a mulct of five pounds of Mercian Penies. The Violati"on of Suretyſhip, or the Peace, made to an Archbiſhop, is puniſhed by a fine of "three pounds, to Biſhops or Senatours (Ealdermen) by one of two. The fourth Law, "upon one that either by himſelf alone or by his Servants, and Aſſaſſi"nates, lays treacherouſly in wait againſt the life or ſafety of the King, inflicts the "loſs of life and fortunes. If he will purge himſelf he may doe it with reſpect to "the Valuation of the King's Head. The ſame is to be obſerved in all Degrees of "Men, whether * Noblemen or Countreymen. Whoſoever conſpires againſt his "Lord, let him be puniſhed with loſs of life and fortunes, or elſe pay the Valua"tion of his Lord's Head.

C. 1. Be aþum ⁊ be ƿeꝺꝺum ⁊

C.. 2.

C. 3. Be boꞃhbꞃyce.

C. 4. Be hlafoꞃꝺ ꞅyꞃƿe ⁊

* Saxonicè ᵹe ceoꞃle ᵹe eoꞃle. Comes ſcil. & villanus intelligitur ſummus & infimus apud eos ordo vel gradus quamvis Ceoꞃl non nunquam pro marito uſurpetur, hinc Ceoꞃlian pro nuptum dari.

Sect. 12

88. The ſeventh Law “To the ſixth of Ina, which gives the King Power of life and death over him that fights in the Court, gives the ſame Power over him, that ſhall but draw his Weapon in the ſame place. Farther provides that If the Offender flye and be taken, he pay the value of his Head, and according to his offence farther be puniſhed by the payment of a Mulct, or the Value of his Head. The ninth ordains, “That if one kill a Woman with Child he pay the full Value of her Head, beſides half the value of the Head of one of her Husband's Children. If the value of the Head come not to thirty ſhillings it is to be made up, and a farther Mulct of an Hundred and twenty ſhillings to be impoſed. And whereas formerly ſuch were more grievouſly puniſhed as ſtole Gold, Stallions or Bees, and other more heavy Mulcts were impoſed upon other Offenders, by this Law the ſame reſpect ſhall be had to all; onely he that ſteals a Man ſhall pay an hundred and twenty ſhillings. The tenth requires, that “He that lies with the Wife of a Man whoſe cenſe or value of his Head, is twelve Hundred ſhillings, pay the Summ of one Hundred and twenty ſhillings to him for the offence. If the Man's value be ſix hundred, that the offender pay to him an hundred ſhillings. He that lies with the Wife of a Ceorl or Countreyman ſhall pay forty ſhillings; for payment of which, if need be, all a Man's Cattel are to be ſold, but no Mankind. The next wills, “That if any one wantonly handles the Breaſts of a Countreyman's Wife, he pay down to the Woman five ſhillings: if he caſt her down upon the ground, but lies not with her, ten ſhillings; if he enjoys her, ſixty ſhillings. If another had committed Adultery with her before, one half of this Mulct is to be paid. If he be ſued for it, either according to the rate of ſixty Hides, he muſt purge himſelf or pay down half of the Fine. If violence be offered to a Woman of greater Birth, the Mulct is to be increaſed according to the valuation of her Head.

C. 7. Be ðon ðe mon on cẏninᵹeꞅ healle ᵹeꝼeohꞇe ⁊

C. 9. Be ðon ðe mon oꝼꝼlea beaꞃn eacnenꝺ ƿiꝼ ⁊

C. 10. Be ꝼoꞃleᵹeꞃum ⁊

C. 11.

89. The twelfth Law, concerning Burning of Wood, alters the forty third of Ina, concerning this Subject, “Impoſing upon him that ſhall ſet fire to the Trees of another man, or fell them without his leave, for every greater Tree a Mulct of five ſhillings, for every ſmaller five pence, beſides a fine of thirty ſhillings. That which follows willeth, “That if in felling a Tree a Man accidentally be ſlain, the Kindred of the ſlain ſhall have the Tree, if within thirty days they fetch it off the ground; otherwiſe it is to remain with the owner of the Wood. By the fourteenth, “The Father of a dumb or deaf Man, is to repair the Damages cauſed by him. By the fifteenth, “Fighting in the preſence of an Archbiſhop, is puniſhed by a fine of an hundred and fifty ſhillings, in the preſence of a Biſhop or Senatour with one of an hundred. By the next, “ſuch as ſteal a Mare or a Cow, and drive away Foal or Calf from them are to pay the Value of the Mare or Cow, and farther a Mulct of forty ſhillings. The ſeventeenth requires, “That if a Man borrow any Cattel which chance to dye in his Hands, if thereto required he make oath, that he is not guilty of any fraud as to the death of the Beaſt. The Nineteenth ordains, “That if one Man lend to another any Weapon to kill a third Perſon, both of them if they pleaſe may pay the Valuation of his Head. If they refuſe to doe it together, that he that lent the Weapon, himſelf lay down the third part, and then he may make faith, that he meant no harm when he lent out the Weapon. The latter part of the Law, Commands reſtitution to be made of ſuch Swords or other Weapons as have been put into the Hands of Artificers, onely for mending or making into other ſorts of Inſtruments. The two and twentieth Orders, “That if a Man ſue another before the King's Officer in Folcmote, and afterwards let fall his Action, he make it appear if he can where the Right lies, or otherwiſe be fined the value of the thing. The next in order is concerning the “Biting of a Dog impoſing a mulct of ſix ſhillings upon his Maſter if he ſtill keep him, for the firſt offence, if he bite again of twelve ſhillings, and if the third time of thirty; and now though the Dog be killed, yet is the fine to be paid. If he live and afterwards doe more miſchief and his Maſter ſtill keep him, he muſt either pay the value of the Head, or make other Compenſation according to the miſchief done. That which follows is concerning Cattel, “if an Ox rent or wound a man he is to be ſeized, except the owner of him redeem him. The twenty fifth “Puniſheth him that raviſheth the Maid-ſervant of a Countreyman, with the payment of ſix ſhillings to the man, and a mulct of ſixty ſhillings beſides: a Man-Slave that lies with a She-Slave with the loſs of his Member; and him that raviſhes a Virgin of tender Age, as him that lies with one of riper years.

C. 12. Be ƿuꝺu bæꞃnette ⁊

C. 13. Be ðon ðe mon oþeꞃne oꝼꝼẏlle ⁊

C. 14. Be ðumbꞃa manna ꝺæꝺum ⁊

C. 15. Be ᵹeꝼeohꞇum.

C. 16. Be ðon ðe mon mẏꞃe oþ cu ꝼoꞃꞅꞇele.

C. 17. Be ðon ðe oþꞃıc hiꞅ unmaᵹum oꝼꞅæꞅꞇeþ.

C. 19. Be ðon ðe heoꞃe ꞅapne ænaþ ꞇo manꞅlihꞇ.

C. 22. Be eoꝼeꞅꞇeꞅ anꝺeꞇlan.

C. 23. Be hunꝺeꞅ ꞅliꞇe.

C. 24. Be nẏꞇena miꞅꝺaðum,

C. 25. Be nẏꝺhæmed.

90. The

Sect. 12.

90. The twenty ſixth Law inflicts Puniſhments upon thoſe, "Who kill men "by Troops or Companies. If the ſlain innocent Party, or he that had received a "mortal wound, was valued at two Hundred ſhillings, he that ſlew him muſt pay "the value of his Head and a Mulct; and every one that was in the Troop or "Company, muſt alſo pay thirty ſhillings. In caſe he was worth ſix Hundred "ſhillings, every one in the Company muſt pay ſixty ſhillings, and he that killed "him pay the value of his Head, and the Mulct beſides. If he was valued at "twelve Hundred ſhillings, they muſt pay an hundred and twenty a-piece, and "the ſlayer both the value and the mulct. In caſe every Man deny, that he gave "the mortal wound, all are to be impeached together, and amongſt them muſt "pay both the Value and the Mulct. Now concerning theſe Troops or Companies which our Saxon Anceſtours called Hlothum, how many Men made up one of them, the Reader may remember he was told by the fourteenth Law of King Ina: The twenty ſeventh orders, "That if a Man in a Quarrel killed another, "and had no Kindred by the Father's ſide, ſuch Kindred as he hath by the Mo-"thers ſide, ſhall pay the third part of the value of the Head, another third thoſe of "his Gild or Society, and for the third he is to ſuffer baniſhment. In caſe he have no "Kindred neither on his Mothers ſide, thoſe of his Gild muſt pay one half, and he be "baniſhed for the other. If he that was ſlain had no Kindred, one half of the value of "his Head is to be paid to the King, and the other half to thoſe of his Gild or Society. Thoſe of his Gild in Saxon called Gegyldan, were ſo named from Gyldand ſignifying to pay, aſmuch as one would ſay Fellow Paymaſters. And they were ſo called for two Cauſes, firſt becauſe they contributed Money according to the Cuſtome, together with their Fellows that had killed a Man, viz. The valuation of the Head of the ſlain, as they alſo received money for a ſlain Brother of their Gyld. Another was becauſe they contributed toward publick Feaſts, which at certain times they obſerved. Hence afterward in the Laws of King Henry the Firſt, they are called Crocca Cowellet, as thoſe whoſe Pot boils together. In Germany the Bores call their publick Feaſts by the Name of Gilde, to which all contribute. A Society or Company in Saxon is called Gebeorſcipe and Gyldſcipe, in the low Countries Ghildſchap, and hence comes our more modern Name of Gilde, uſed to expreſs ſome Societies of Religious men, as alſo of Tradeſmen and Artificers, which now we call Companies, and moreover of Gildhall, the place of their Meetings and judicial Aſſemblies.

C. 26. Be manꞅlihꞇ mıꝺ hloþe.

C. 27. Be mæᵹleaꞃum mon num.

ᵹeᵹẏlꝺan.

A Saxon cꞃocca olla & ƿællen bullire.

Co præpoſito quod ut Con in Compoſitis ſimul notat ut in Co-partner Co-operate, Co-ordinate, Co-incident, &c. vide Somneri Gloſſar. ut Congildones.

91. The twenty eighth Law of Alfred was made againſt the Spreaders of falſe News, and commands that "ſuch being convicted, be not ſlightly puniſhed, but "their * Tongues cut out except they redeem them by payment of the whole "value of their Heads. The thirtieth orders that "Merchants when they land, "bring ſuch as come aſhore with them before the King's Officer in Folcmote, and "declare their number, and then keep them with them that they may be ready "to anſwer any thing that ſhall be demanded of them in Folcmote. And if out "of neceſſity they bring many with them from Sea, into the Haven thereof, "they are alſo to certifie the King's Officer in that Aſſembly. Conſidering the dangerous times wherein King Alfred lived, when was ſuch flocking of ſtrangers into England, this Law ſeems very prudently made. The one and thirtieth inflicts "upon him that ſhall put into bonds a Countreyman who no ſuch thing "deſerves, a mulct of ten ſhillings, upon him that beats ſuch an one, twenty "ſhillings; if he hang him up aloft, thirty ſhillings. If he clip his hair like a "fool, ten ſhillings; If he ſhave his head like a Prieſt and bind him not, thirty "ſhillings: In caſe he cut his beard, twenty ſhillings; and if he bind him and "cut his hair like a Prieſt, ſixty ſhillings. That which follows "requires of "him who carries on his back a ſpear ſo negligently that another by chance falls "upon it, the value of his head without a mulct: but in caſe he bore the head "of the ſpear in his hand and another falls upon it, the Law impoſes a mulct "upon him. If he be accuſed to have done it on purpoſe, it's lawfull for him "to clear himſelf according to the nature of the mulct; if the point of the ſpear "was three fingers higher than that part behind his back; if the point and all "the reſt of the ſpear was of the ſame height it blames him not. The next directs that if "a ſervant paſs from one place to another, he muſt doe it with the "knowledge of the Alderman or Governour of that County where he former-"ly ſerved. Otherwiſe, he that receives him into his Family muſt forfeit an "hundred and twenty ſhillings to the King, whereof one half to be paid in the "Countrey whence the ſervant came, and the other in that where he is now re-"ceived. And in caſe before his removal he committed any fault, he that laſt "received him muſt make amends, and fine to the King an hundred and twenty "ſhillings beſides.

C. 28. Beꝼolc leaꞅunᵹum ᵹeƿẏꞃhꞇum.

* þonnehim mon aceoꞃꝼ ꝺa ꞇunᵹan oꝼ.

C. 30. Be Cẏpmannum.

C. 31. Be Ceoꞃliꞅceꞅ manneꞅ binꞇelan.

C. 32. Be ꞅpereꞅ ᵹẏmeleaꞅꞇe.

C. 33. Be bolꝺᵹeꞇæle.

C. 34. Be ᵹeꝼeohꞇe beꝼoꝛan ealdoꝛmen.

C. 35. Be Cyꝛlıꞅceꞅ monneꞅ ꝼleꞇꞇe ᵹeꝼeohꞇe.

C. 36. Be buꝛhbꝛẏce. cẏnınᵹeꞅ buꝛhbꝛẏce. Æꝛcebıꞅceoꝑeꞅ buꝛhbꝛẏce. Ceoꝛleꞅ eoꝺoꝛbꝛẏce.

92. The thirty fourth Law "Impoſes upon him that ſhall ſtrike or fight in Folcmote before the King's Alderman, both the value of his own head and ſuch a fine beſides as ſhall be thought fit, beſides an hundred and twenty ſhillings to be paid to the Alderman, upon him that by his weapons ſhall make any diſturbance in Folcmote, a mulct of an hundred and twenty ſhillings to the Alderman. If he be not preſent, but the thing be done before his Subſtitute or the King's Prieſt, an amerciament of thirty ſhillings. Here by the King's Prieſt is meant the Biſhop, as we may very well conjecture, who, as we formerly ſaid, in thoſe times preſided alſo in Folcmotes, and there diſpatched buſineſs relating to the Church. The thirty fifth ordains that "He that fights at the Homeſtall of a Countreyman, pay the ſaid Countreyman ſix ſhillings; if he drew his Sword, but ſtruck not, half as much. If the offence be committed in the Homeſtall of a man valued at ſix hundred ſhillings, three times as much is to be paid as laid upon him that fights in that of a Countreyman; If it be done at the Houſe of a Man valued at twelve hundred ſhillings, the double of that which is to be paid for fighting in the Yard of one valued at five hundred. The thirty ſixth Law of Burhbrice or breach of the Peace in a Town "confirms that part of King Ina's forty ſixth Law of this Subject; for what concerns the breach of the Peace in the King's Town or City, impoſing upon the offender the ſame mulct of an hundred and twenty ſhillings. But if it be done in the Archbiſhops Town, a mulct of ninety ſhillings; in that of a Biſhop or Alderman ſixty ſhillings. In the Town of a Man valued at twelve hundred ſhillings, a fine of thirty ſhillings; half as much if done in the Village of one worth but half as much. Him that breaks the Hedge of a Countreyman, it fines five ſhillings: and double the ſum, if it be done during an expedition in War, or in time of Lent. Him that in time of Lent draws the Holy Courtain before the People without leave, it fines an hundred and twenty ſhillings.

C. 37. Be Boclanꝺe.

C. 38. Be ᵹeꝼeohꞇe alias ꝼæhþe.

93. The thirty ſeventh, is that Law concerning Bocland, which we have already occaſionally mentioned. By virtue hereof "He that holds ſuch Lands left him by his Anceſtours, hath no power to alienate it from his Heirs to others, in caſe it can be proved by writing or teſtimony before the King or Biſhop, his Kindred being preſent, that he who firſt granted it, forbade him all alienation, and laid on him this condition. Upon occaſion of this Law, Mr. Selden tells our common Lawyers, that here they may behold Fee-tail, much more ancient than the thirteenth year of Edward the Firſt. The thirty eighth concerning quarrels or deadly feuds "Forbids any Man to attacque his Enemy, if he find him in his Houſe, except he firſt demand of him what is right. If he can Beſiege the Houſe, he may doe it for ſeven days, during which time, if he give up himſelf and his Arms into his hands, he may keep him thirty days, but then offer him ſafe and ſound to his Kindred and Friends. In caſe he flye to a Church, the honour of the Church muſt be preſerved: If he cannot Beſiege him, he may deſire the aſſiſtence of the Alderman, which if he cannot obtain, he muſt go to the King. If any one by chance light upon his adverſary, knowing not that he keeps himſelf at home, and the other will deliver up his Arms to him, he ſhall keep him ſafe thirty days, and then offer him to his Friends. But in caſe he will not deliver up his Arms, then may he inſtantly force him. In caſe he be willing to deliver up himſelf and his Arms to his Enemy, and any other Man ſets upon him, let ſuch a Man pay the value of his head, or give ſatisfaction for his wounds if any be given him, according to the fact, beſides, let him be fined, and looſe all that may fall to him by reaſon of Kindred. A Servant may lawfully fight for his Maſter if any one ſet upon him, and a Maſter for his Servant. In like manner, if any one unjuſtly fall upon ones near Kinſman, he may fight for him againſt all men, except his Lord, which is not to be ſuffered. It may be lawfull alſo for any to ſet upon him whom he finds locked up under the ſame covering with his Wife, or with his own Daughter, his Siſter or his Mother, lawfully Married to his Father.

C. 40. Beƿundum.

94. The laſt of theſe Laws of King Alfred, is concerning wounds and maims, which though ſomething long, we ſhall add to the former. "If any Man wound another in the head, ſo as the bone on both ſides be pierced, let him pay to the wounded thirty ſhillings: If the outward bone onely be pierced, fifteen ſhillings. If the Man be wounded to the quantity of an Inch under the hair, let the mulct be one ſhilling; but if the wound was beſides the hair, two ſhillings. If an Ear be cut off, thirty ſhillings; in caſe the hearing be loſt by the wound, ſixty ſhillings. He that digs out the Eyes of another, let him pay ſixty “ ſix ſhillings ſix pence, and the third part of a penny; but in caſe the Eye be “ ſtill in the head, yet ſo wounded that the ſight is loſt, let the third part of the “ mulct be abated. Let him that cuts off a Noſe pay ſixty ſhillings. Him that “ ſtrikes out the firſt Teeth, eight ſhillings to the ſufferer; if thoſe called the “ Wang-teeth (Dentes Canini) be ſtrucken out, four ſhillings; if the Grinders, “ ſixteen ſhillings. He that wounds another on the Cheek, let him pay fifteen “ ſhillings; that cleaves his Chin-bone, twelve ſhillings; that pierces the Throat, “ twelve ſhillings. He that cuts out the Tongue as much as he that pulls out the “ Eye. He that wounds in the Shoulder to the breaking of the Member, thirty “ ſhillings; that breaks an Arme above the Elbow, fifteen ſhillings; that breaks “ both the bones of the Arme, thirty ſhillings. Let him that cuts off a Thumb, “ forfeit to the Party thirty ſhillings: that cuts off the nail of a Thumb, five “ ſhillings: he that cuts off the firſt Finger let him pay fifteen ſhillings: the nail “ of this Finger, four ſhillings; if the middle or longeſt Finger, twelve ſhillings; if the nail of it, two ſhillings; if it be the Ring-finger, ſeventeen ſhillings; if the nail, four ſhillings; if the little Finger, nine ſhillings; if its nail “ onely one ſhilling.

ᵹif hiꞇꞅyꞅe ƿonᵹꞇoþ.

95. “ If one receive a wound in the Belly, let him receive from the offender “ thirty ſhillings; and if the weapon pierced through the Belly, twenty ſhillings “ for each Orifice. If a Man be run through the Thigh, he that did it ſhall pay “ him thirty ſhillings, and if the bone be hurt, other thirty ſhillings. He that “ pierces a Man through the Leg, let him pay the wounded Party twelve ſhillings; but if the bone be broke, thirty ſhillings. If one Man cut off the great “ Toe of another he ſhall pay him twenty ſhillings; if the next to that, fifteen “ ſhillings; if the third, nine ſhillings; if the fourth, ſix ſhillings; and if the “ leaſt, five ſhillings. If a Man be ſo wounded in the Genitals, that the faculty “ of procreation be thereby taken away, the offender ſhall pay him eighty ſhillings. He that cuts off an Arme ſhall incur the mulct of eighty ſhillings. Let “ the puniſhment for every wound, beſide the Hair and the Sleeve, and beneath “ the Knee, be doubled. He that breaks a Mans Loins ſhall pay him ſixty ſhillings; if he prick them with a weapon, fifteen ſhillings, if he pierce them “ through, thirty ſhillings. If a Man receive a wound on his ſhoulder he ſhall “ receive eighty ſhillings: If the outward part of his Hand be bruiſed or wounded, yet ſo as it may be cured, twenty ſhilling; but if he looſe half of his “ Hand, ſixty ſhillings. If a Rib be broken, though the Skin be whole, the offender ſhall pay ten ſhillings, but if the Skin be broke and ſome bones be forced “ out, fifteen ſhillings. If an Eye be pulled out, an Hand or a Foot cut off; let “ there be the ſame penalty, viz. ſixty ſix ſhillings, ſix pence and the third part “ of a penny. If the Leg be cut off above the Knee, the mulct ſhall be eighty “ ſhillings; if the Shoulder-blade be cut off, twenty ſhillings; if it be bruiſed ſo “ that bones come out, fifteen ſhillings; if the greater Sinews be cut, yet ſo as “ they may be healed, twelve ſhillings; but if the Party fall lame and his lameneſs cannot be cured, thirty ſhillings; if the ſmaller Sinews be cut, ſix ſhillings. If a Man receive a wound on his Neck, ſo that all his life he goes infirm and deformed, let the offender by way of Compenſation pay him an “ hundred ſhillings, except in the opinion of wiſe Men more ought to be given “ to him. Theſe be the Laws of King Alfred, made by himſelf and his wiſe Men; for the Government of all his Subjects. In the League betwixt him and Guthrun the Dane, there were others made by the conſent of both Nations; whereof ſuch as reſpect the Civil ſtate we have already mentioned in the Hiſtory of Alfred's Life. The reſt which reſpect matters Eccleſiaſtical, muſt to ſuch matters be referred,

96. The next Legiſlatour in order of our Engliſh Saxon Kings, was Edward the Elder, the Son and Succeſſour of glorious King Alfred. In the Preface to his Laws, he ſtrictly charges and commands all his Officers, that as much as in them lies, they doe Juſtice according * as it ſtands in the Judicial Book, and without all fear boldly diſpence the Common Law, and that they ſet and appoint certain days for Determination of the ſeveral Cauſes depending before them. The firſt Law is concerning Traffick, and in way of confirmation of the fourth Article of the League made betwixt his Father and the Daniſh King Guthrun ordains that If a Man buy any thing, he have one that will vouch, warrantize, and make good the ſale. That no

Be ꝺome ⁊ ꞅpꞃæce.

C. 1. Be Ceapunᵹe.

Man

---

* ⁊ hiꞇ on ðæꞃe ꝺom bec ꞅꞇanꝺe. De iſto libro Judiciali frequens in his legibus mentio nec tamen conſtat quis fuerit. Ethelbertum legimus Decreta Judiciorum Compoſuiſſe. Aſſerius etiam prodit Alfredum Judiciorum decreta Saxonicis mandaſſe literis.

Sect. 12. Man without the Town buy any thing, but (a) have the Portreeve for witneſs, or other Men worthy of Credit, otherwiſe he ſhall (b) undergoe the penalty of Contumacy againſt the King, and the vouching or warrantizing ſhall alſo proceed from one to another till it be ended; we farther ordain that whoſoever calleth to warrantize a Party of whom he bought the thing, in queſtion, either produce his Teſtimony that he did rightly call him, or by interpoſition of his Oath ſatisfie the Demandant. In the ſame manner we determine concerning that that was ones own; for if he contend that it was not received from elſewhere, but was his own, and ſo uſed it, let him either produce his Witneſſes, or with ſome other perſons (if he can) not choſen on purpoſe, let him ſwear that the thing is not the Demandant's. If he cannot doe it, let ſix Men be ſummoned out of the Neighbourhood, and one Man ſwear for every Cow, or any thing of ſuch a value, or more if the thing be of a greater price. We farther Decree, that if any Pawn another Man's Goods, he take his Oath that he did it not deceitfully, but without all fraud and evil deſign: then let him with whom the Goods ſhall be found be at his choice, whether he will plead that they are his own, or go to Vouching. This calling to Vouching or Warrantizing, our Engliſh Saxons expreſſed by the word Team, which properly ſignifies Propago, Soboles, or Off-ſpring, but ſecondarily, and by way of tranſlation, to make known, call forth or produce another. In reference to the matter in hand: it was the Cuſtome of the Ancients, that if one had ſold to another any ſtoln Goods, and this Man had alienated them to a third, and the third to a fourth, &c. yet might the true owner ſeize them wherever he found them. Then was he with whom they were found obliged to produce him that ſold them to him, to own and make good the Sale, which in Latin they term Advocare. Then was he that was thus called out or produced (Advocatus Cauſæ) bound to produce his Chapman alſo of whom he bought the Goods, and this Chapman another, till at length they came to the Thief himſelf. From this continuation and progreſs from one to another, it had the Name of Team, as in the Old Norman Law French, Voucher al Garantiæ; ſo hence in Barbarous Latin come Garandia, Garantia, Garantum, Garantizare and Garentizare, otherwiſe written Warrantia, Warrantum, and Warrantizare, the Root of all which, ſeems to be the Saxon word Waran, which ſignifies to defend. For the French inſtead of the Saxon W, always uſe G, and all theſe words have their proper ſignification amongſt the Lawyers of England, France and Germany, which no one Roman or Latin word can expreſs. As for the Portreeve mentioned in this Law, it ſignifies the Chief Governour of a City or Town, he of London and many other Cities in ancient times being known by this Title.

(a) Ac hæbbe ðæꞅ poꞃꞇᵹeꞃeꝼan ᵹeƿiꞇnẏꞅꞅe. (b) ðonneꞅẏ he cẏninᵹeꞅ oꝼeꞃhẏꞃnẏꞅꞅe ꞅcẏlꝺiᵹ. ⁊ ᵹanᵹe ꞅe ꞇeam ðeah ꝼoꞃþ, &c.

ꞇeam.

ꞇẏman propagare ꞇeam ſoboles & hinc ꞇeam tam pro ſequela quam vocant nativorum vel mancipiorum propagine, de quâ prius; quam pro advocatione Authoris laudatione vel productione. Hinc etiam partum Teeming dicimus, à teeming Woman.

Advocatio alio ſenſu eſt jus patronatus vel præſentandi, noſtratibus vulgo Advowſon.

Vide Lambard. Gloſſar. in voc. Advocare, Spelman. in voc. Garandia & Somneri in v. Advocare.

97. The ſecond of King Edward's Laws ordains, that Whoſoever denies another Man his Right, either in Bocland or Folcland, demanding it before the King's Juſtice, whenas he hath no Right in either of theſe ſorts of Land, ſhall pay to the King for the firſt offence thirty ſhillings, as much for the ſecond; and if he offend the third time, that he pay an hundred and twenty ſhillings for his Contumacy againſt the King. The third determines of One that hath forſworn himſelf, or born falſe witneſs, that no credit be given to him for the time to come, and that he be put to Ordeal. The fourth declares, that King Edward lying at Exeter, and conſulting with his Wiſemen, ſtudiouſly enquired by what means he might beſt provide for Peace and Tranquillity, for he perceived that theſe things were not ſo much regarded as they ought to be, and as he had ordained. He intreated therefore and required all that would be corrected and amended, and would with him enjoy common ſociety, and would proſecute with love and hatred the ſame things as he did both by Sea and Land; that they would look to this one thing, viz. that they did injury to no Man. He that doeth contrary let him (as was formerly ordained) pay thirty ſhillings to the King; if he offend the ſecond time, as much; and if the third, an hundred and twenty ſhillings. The fifth commands, that That Reeve or Judge that doeth not Juſtice according to the Teſtimony of ſuch as are ſummoned, pay an hundred and twenty ſhillings for his contumacy againſt the King. The ſixth wills, That if a ſervant be accuſed of Theft, he that recommended him to his Maſter, or other of his Friends (if any he have) be ſureties

C. 2. Be ðone ðe oþꞃum ꞃihꞇeꞅ ƿẏꞃnþ.

C. 3. Be manꞅƿoꞃenum.

C. 4. Be ꝼꞃẏðe.

C. 5. Be ᵹeꞃeꝼan þe miꝺ ꞃihꞇ ne amaniᵹe.

C. 6. Be ðẏꝼþe beꞇoᵹenum.

ties for him, that he diſcharge himſelf of what is depoſed againſt him. If he have none to interpoſe on his behalf, thoſe that are concerned may ſieze his Goods. If he have neither Goods nor Friends, let him be taken into Cuſtody. The ſeventh abſolutely requires, that Thoſe always be had in readineſs that will not goe to their own Homes, and that for no reward they be protected.

98. The eighth Law enjoyns that "No man knowingly and voluntarily, have "peace with or harbour one that is condemned for a Crime: he that acts contrary "and thereby breaks his Oath and the faith given by him, and all the People, let "him undergo the Mulct preſcribed in the Judiciary Book. That if he refuſe to pay, "he is to be deprived of the King's and all other Mens friendſhip, and farther for"feit all his Eſtate. And if any afterwards relieve him, let him alſo incur the pe"nalty expreſſed in the ſaid Judiciary Book. Farther, ſaith he, whoſoever ſhall "relieve a fugitive either in this our coaſt, or in the Eaſtern or Northern parts of "the Kingdom, let him be puniſhed as in the Articles of Peace is ordained. That "which follows provides that, If one deprived of liberty for ſtealing, ſteal "again and all his kindred forſake him, ſo that none will ingage for him, he be "ſet to ſervile works as opportunity ſhall be, and his kindred looſe the Valuation of his Head. The tenth Law "forbids any Man to receive another Man's Ser"vant without his leave, and he hath fully ſatisfied his Maſter: he that doeth o"therwiſe muſt be puniſhed as Contumacious againſt the King. The eleventh and laſt commands that "about every fourth Week every Reeve, or Judge, hold "the Gemote or Aſſembly, Adminiſter Juſtice to every Man, and determine "all cauſes at the appointed days. If he doe otherwiſe he is to be puniſhed as "was before ſaid. Theſe are the Laws made by King Edward the Elder himſelf. After them follows the league made betwixt him and Guthrun the Dane conſiſting of ſuch matters as had been formerly agreed of betwixt the ſaid Guthrun and King Alfred which we have already mentioned, at ſuch time as the Engliſh and Danes made Peace and imbraced one another. Theſe Articles were often afterward repeated by wiſemen, and to the common utility of the Realm, as the Preface words it, increaſed and amplified. But foraſmuch as they reſpect Religion we muſt as before we hinted refer them to another place.

Sect. 12.

C. 7. Be ðon ðe heora agen secan nyllon.

C. 8. Be ðon ðe full friþiaþ. bete swa dom boc tæce. bete swa seo dom boc secge.

C. 9. Be ðon ðe his freot forwyrce.

C. 10. Be ðone ðe oþres mannes man underfeþ butan leafe.

C. 11. Be gemote andagum.

99. The next Legiſlatour after King Edward the Elder was King Æthelſtan his Son. After a Religious Preface, the firſt Law he enacts is againſt Thieves, requiring that "If a Thief be taken in the fact, no Man ſpare him if he be above "twelve years old, and have ſtole any thing above the value of eight pence: if "any one doe contrarily he ſhall pay the value of the Thief's Head, or make amends "for the fault, and yet for all that the Thief ſhall not be ſpared, who if he con"tumaciouſly make reſiſtence, or flye for it, for the time to come ſhall obtain no "favour: a Thief caſt into Priſon, ſhall there ſtay forty days, and then after the "payment of an hundred and twenty ſhillings, be diſcharged. But the kindred "muſt give ſecurity for his good behaviour, after which if he ſteal again, they "muſt either pay the value of his Head, or bring him back to Priſon; and in "caſe any one reſiſt them he ſhall pay to the King, or to any other it concerns "the value of his own Head, and if any ſtand by him, he ſhall pay to the King an hundred and twenty ſhillings. The ſecond is againſt "ſuch as have no Maſters, ordaining, that "of thoſe that are not of any Man's family, and conſequently none can "have right againſt them, the kindred ſhall give caution for their juſt demeaning "of themſelves and in Folcmote put them into ſome ones ſervice: which if they "will not or cannot doe, let ſuch Maſterleſs men be eſteemed as fugitives, and "be beaten as Thieves, as they are light upon. If any one afterward relieve them "let him pay the value of his Head, or according to that value, diſcharge himſelf of the guilt. But the third commands that "if a Maſter denies to doe another "man right and defends a naughty and knaviſh Servant, ſo that of him com"plaint is made to the King, he pay the value of the thing in demand, and farther "to the King forfeit an hundred and twenty ſhillings. But in caſe any make "complaint to the King, before he demand his right as it is preſcribed, he ſhall "incur the like Mulct as the other ſhould have done for denying Juſtice. If the "Maſter be convicted to have been privy to the Theft of his Servant, he ſhall "looſe his Servant and pay the value of his own Head for the firſt offence, for "the ſecond ſhall looſe all he hath. The ſame puniſhment ſhall the King's Trea"ſurers and Reeves undergo if guilty of the ſame offence. The fourth ordains concerning "ſuch as conſpire againſt their Maſters, that if thereof legally accuſed, "and if the fact cannot be denied, the offender being convicted by threefold Ordeal, "it ſhall be Capital.

C. 1. Sax. Be ðeofum. apud Jornal. C. c. 4. & 5.

C. 2. Sax. Be hlafordleasum mannum. Jornal. c. 6.

C. 3. Sax. Jornal. C. c. 7. & 8.

C. 4. Sax. Be hlaford syrwum. Jornal. c. 9.

Sect. 12.

100. The ſixth Law of King Æthelſtan is againſt "Witchcrafts, Inchantments "and ſuch like deeds as procure Death, that if any one by thoſe that uſe them be "made away and the thing cannot be denyed, ſuch practicers ſhall be put to death, "if they endeavour to purge themſelves and be caſt by the threefold Ordeal, let "them lie in Priſon, an hundred and twenty days, which ended let their kindred "redeem them by the payment of an hundred and twenty ſhillings to the King, "and farther pay to the kindred of the ſlain, the full valuation of the parties "Head. And then muſt the criminals procure Sureties for their good deportment "for the time to come. The ſame puniſhment ſhall be inflicted on Incendiaries "and ſuch as reſcue Thieves. Nay let ſuch as endeavour to reſcue them, though "no Man be wounded in the attempt, pay an hundred and twenty ſhillings to "the King. As for Inchantments mentioned in this Law, the Saxon word is Liblacum which ſignifies the Art of Conjuration or Witchcraft, yet not all in General, but that ſort of it properly called Faſcination, or Inchantment uſed with certain Ligatures, Faſciæ or Bands. The Romans called this ſort Obligamentum Magicum, Phylacteria and Ligaturæ. Hence Nectere came to be a Magical word, as in that verſe of Virgil, Necte tribus nodis ternos Amarylli colores. This he wrote, as Turnebus obſerves, from the Ancient Cuſtome of Inchantments wherein were reckoned knots, bands and neceſſities. In thoſe matters alſo the word Ligare came to be uſed. And as Iſidore writes, to theſe things belong Ligatures of execrable Medicines which the Art of Phyſick condemns, whether in precantations, Characters or in any other things to be hung and bound about one, in all which is the Art of Devils ſprung from a certain peſtiferous ſociety, or compact of evil Men and Angels. Upon which account they are all to be ſhunned by Chriſtians to be rejected and condemned, with all execration poſſible.

C. 6. Sax. Be ƿiccecꞃæꝼꞇum ⁊ Jornal. C. c. 11. & 12.

A Saxon. lẏblac voce compoſita à lẏb obligamentum & lac munus. q. munus ligandi vim habens. Vide Somnerum in Gloſſar. v. Liblacum.

101. The ſeventh of King Æthelſtan's Laws ordains concerning ſimple Ordeal that "If one accuſed ſeveral times of Theſt be caſt by it, and have no body "to be ſurety for him, he be ſent to Priſon, and thence freed by his kindred, as was before ſaid. The eighth appoints that "If any man having no Houſe nor Land "of his own, goes to ſerve in another Shire, and returning to the place whence "he came to ſee his Friends, doeth any miſchief, he that received him ſhall "give caution that he ſhall be ready to make ſatisfaction, or elſe doe it him"ſelf to the party aggrieved. The ninth provides that If any one challenge Cat"tel as his own in another Man's hands, five Men out of their Neighbourhood "ſhall be called, whereof one ſhall ſwear that he rightly challenges them. But "if another Man contend they are his, twenty Men ſhall be taken out of the "Neighbourhood, whereof two ſhall ſwear with him, that he bred them. This "may be done without the Common Oath of all; but otherwiſe if the value of "the thing exceed twenty pence. The tenth forbids any Commutation of Goods "but in the preſence of the Reeve, the Prieſt of the Town, or the Lord of the "Soil, or ſome other credible Perſon, under the penalty of thirty ſhillings, "and the forfeiture of the thing changed to the Lord of the Soil. And if any of "theſe bear falſe witneſs, let him be infamous, or no credit be given to him "ever after, and let him forfeit beſides thirty ſhillings. The eleventh pre"ſcribes the manner of accuſing a Thief that's killed. Firſt let there be three in "number (if they will take it upon them) two Kinſmen on the Father's ſide, "and one on the Mother's, which ſhall ſwear, that they knew no reaſon why "their Kinſman ſhould have been ſlain upon the account of Theſt. Then let there "be twelve impanelled, which by their Oaths ſhall lay Theſt to his charge, and "then if the Kindred of the ſlain Party do not appear, thoſe who firſt endea"voured to clear him of the crime ſhall each of them forfeit an hundred and "twenty ſhillings. The twelſth confirms the firſt part of the Law of King Ed"ward the Elder, Decreeing that no Man buy any thing out of Town which "exceeds the value of twenty pence, but within the Town, in preſence of the "Portreeve, or ſome other creditable Perſon, or elſe in preſence of the King's "Reeve or Juſtice in Folcmote.

C. 7. Sax. Be anꝼealꝺum Oꞃꝺale. Jor. c. 13.

C. 8. Sax. Be lanꝺleaꞅum mannum. Jornal. c. 14.

C. 9. Sax. Be ðonne ðe ẏꞃꝼ beꝼehꞇe. Jornal. c. 15.

C. 10. Sax. Be ẏꞃꝼa ᵹehƿeꞃꝼe. Jornal. c. 16.

C. 11. Sax. Be ðon ðe ꞅcẏlꝺᵹunᵹe bæꝺe eꞇ oꝼꞅleᵹenum. Jornal. c. 16.

C. 12. Sax. Be þon þe mon ne ceapiᵹe buꞇan poꞃꞇe. Jornal. c. 17.

102. The thirteenth decrees, that "All Towns or "Caſtles be repaired within fourteen days after the time of "Proceſſion or Perambulation, and that all Bargains be "managed within the Town. The fourteenth appoints, "that throughout the King's Dominions one and the "ſame Money be current which ſhall not be Coined "out of Town. If any Minter or Coiner imbaſe the Coin, "let him looſe his hand, which being cut off ſhall be

C. 13. Sax. Be buꞃᵹa ᵹebeꞇꞇunᵹe. Jornal. c. 18.

C. 14 Sax. Be mẏneꞇeꞃum. Jornal. c. 19.

“ affixed to the Workhouſe. If any be accuſed of adulterating Money, and will purge himſelf, let him by the Ordeal of hot Iron cleanſe his hands of ſuch wickedneſs “ but if by the Ordeal he be caſt, let him be puniſhed “ as now was ſaid. At Canterbury let there be ſeven Minters or Coyners, whereof four for the King, two for the Biſhop, and one for “ the Abbat. At Rocheſter let there be three, whereof two for the King, and the “ third for the Biſhop. At London eight. At Wincheſter ſix. At Lewes two. “ At Haſtings one. At Chicheſter one. At Hamton two. At Werham two. At Exceſter two. At Shaftsbury as many. And in every other “ Town one. The next Law requires, that no Target be “ made of Sheeps Skins under penalty of thirty ſhillings. “ That which follows commands, that for every Plough “ a Man keep two well furniſhed Horſemen. The ſeventeenth ordains, that he that receives reward from a “ Thief, and thereby hinders another Man's Right, be amerced the full value of his Head. The eighteenth forbids Horſes to be tranſported, except ſuch as be ſent upon free Gift. The nineteenth ordains, that If a Servant “ be Caſt by the Ordeal, the juſt and ſimple value of the “ thing be paid, that the Slave be thrice beaten; or if the full “ value of the thing be reiterated, this puniſhment is to be abated.

Eandem ſupplicii formam iis qui adulterinum percuterent nummum, addito inſuper, ut eorum abſcinderentur pudenda, reſuſcitavit Henricus primus ut monuit Seldenus in Jano Angl.

C. 15. Be ꞅcylꝺƿyꞃhꞇum. Jornal. 20

C. 16. Sax. Jornal. 21.

C. 17. Sax. Be þæm þoæꞇ þeoꝼe miꝺ ꞅceaꞇꞇe nimaꝺ. Jornal. 22.

C. 18. Sax. Be hoꞃꞅum. Jor. 23.

C. 19. Sax. Be ðeoꞃman ðe ꝼul ƿuꞃþe æꞇ oꞃꝺale. Jornal. c. 24.

103. King Æthelſtan by his twentieth Law enacts, that “ If any one abſent “ himſelf from Folcmote thrice, he be puniſhed as contumacious againſt the King, if “ ſo be that the Holding of the Aſſembly was declared a Seven-night before. In “ ſuch caſe if he refuſe to doe right, and pays not his mulct to the King, the “ ancienteſt Men of the Countrey are to go and ſeize upon all he hath, and take “ ſecurity for his appearance. If any one refuſe to go with his Neighbours for “ Execution of this Law, he is alſo to be puniſhed as contumacious againſt the “ King, when the Aſſembly is opened let it be proclaimed, that all enjoy Peace “ whom the King will have to enjoy it, and that every one abſtain from Theft “ upon pain of looſing his Life and his Eſtate. And if afterward any one be guilty “ of Theft, let the ancienteſt men of the Countrey ride thither, and ſeize on all “ he hath, one half to the King, and another to their own uſe, and take ſecurity “ for his appearance, in caſe no ſecurity can be had, let his Perſon be ſeized; “ if he ſtubbornly make reſiſtence, and flye not, he may be killed. If any one “ concern himſelf for him, and kill a third Party, let the King and all that love “ him ſet themſelves againſt ſuch an one, and if any relieve him if he make his “ eſcape, let him be fined the value of his own Head, except he make it out that “ he knew not that he was a Fugitive, and then according to the value “ of the Fugitive's Head. The twenty firſt gives order, that if “ any “ one would get off his puniſhment of Ordeal, if he be able to procure Pardon of the Party that received the Injury, but by no means that he eſcape the “ penalty inflicted by the Law. The twenty ſecond confirmation of former Laws requires, that “ No man receive another * Man's man (as this Law words it) “ into his Family without leave firſt obtained of his Maſter. He that doeth otherwiſe ſhall reſtore the Man, and pay the mulct of Contumacy againſt the “ King. And no man is to put away his men that are accuſed of any Crime, till “ they have firſt made ſatiſfaction. By this it appears how ancient in this Nation, the Cuſtome is of calling a Servant by the word uſed for the whole ſpecies, a thing in uſe as well with the Romans, and others more ancient, as with modern People.

C. 20. Sax. Be ðon ·ðe ᵹemoꞇ ꝼoꞃꞅiꞇꞇe. Jornal. C. c. 25. & . 26.

C. 21. Sax. Be ðæm ðe ꝼoꞃ Oꞃꝺale ðinᵹiaꝺ. Jorn. c. 27.

C. 22. Sax. Be ðon ðe oþꞃeꞅ manneꞅ manunꝺeꞃꝼehð. Jorn. c. 28. & 29.

* Neunꝺeꞃꝼo nan man' oþꞃeꞅ manneꞅ man, &c.

104. The twenty fourth concerning Traffick in Confirmation of former Laws ordains, that “ If a man buy any thing with witneſs, which another man challenges for his own, the Seller make it good, and ſecure the bargain, whether “ he be bond or free. But on the Lord's day let no market be held, under penalty “ of forfeiture of the wares, and a mulct of thirty ſhillings beſides. The next “ Law as a terrour to ſuch as ſhall forſwear themſelves commands, “ That ſuch “ being convicted ſhall not onely not bear Teſtimony for the time to come, as “ People to whom no faith is to be given, but be forbidden alſo Chriſtian burial, “ except the Biſhop of the Dioceſe will certify, that he had done all things, that “ were injoined him. Of this the Prieſt of the Place is within thirty days to give “ notice to the Biſhop, or elſe to be puniſhed as the ordinary ſhall think fit. The “ laſt of theſe Laws gives directions, that In caſe any of the King's Officers refuſe “ to

C. 24. Sax. Be ðam ðeyꞃꝼe hycᵹaþ. Jorn. c. 31. ꞅy ꞅƿa ðeoꞃe ꞅƿa ꝼꞃeoh.

C. 25. Sax. Be manꞅƿoꞃum. Jorn. c. 33.

C. 26. Sax. Jorn. c. 32.

Sect. 12.

“ to put theſe his Ordinances into Execution, or be remiſs in his Adminiſtration, he be puniſhed as Contumacious againſt the King, who will put in another that will be more carefull of his Duty. The receiving of the mulct he commits to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe. If any one contemn theſe his Laws and Commands, for the firſt offence he ſhall incur a penalty of five pounds, for the ſecond the value of his own Head, and if he offend the third time forfeit all the Eſtate he hath, together with the Amity of the King and all his People. After this it follows, that theſe matters were ſetled and determined in the great Aſſembly at Greatanleage, at which was preſent Archbiſhop Wulſhelme, together with all the Noble and Wiſemen, that Æthelſtan called together.

Ealle ðiꞅ ƿæꞅ ʒeꞅet-teð on þam miclan ꞅẏ-noþ æꞇ Gꞃeaꞇanleaʒe, &c.

105. After theſe Laws follow others of this ſame King in the Saxon Edition to which Æthelſtan prefaceth in this manner. “I Æthelſtan King, make known to all that I have diligently inquired the Cauſe why our Peace hath not been ſo well kept as I deſired, and was formerly enacted at Greatanleage, and from the moſt knowing Perſons in my Kingdom I received this Anſwer, that it happened by reaſon of too much patience, and ſuffering Crimes to go unpuniſhed. Moreover lately keeping Chriſtmas at Exeter, and there attended by my Wiſemen, I found them all moſt ready to venture themſelves, their Wives and Children, to procure thoſe Violatours of the Peace, to procure theſe Violatours of the Peace, to be ſo driven out of the Kingdom, that they might never return again into it, which if any of them ſhould doe, he ſhould be puniſhed as a Thief taken in the Fact. And in caſe any one cheriſh or hold correſpondence with any of them or their Servants, they ſhould forfeit both Life and Eſtate. For hence we believe it comes to paſs, and for no other reaſon that Oaths are ſo often violated, ſuretyſhip is ſo commonly broken, and Pledges ſignify ſo little as they do. Then follows a Law injoyning, that If any one entertained in his Houſe another Man's Servant, which he has removed from his Family for his miſdemeanour, and as one he cannot govern, ſuch an one pay the full value of the Servant's Head to his Maſter, and beſides that a mulct of an hundred and twenty ſhillings to the King. But in caſe the Maſter of any Servant unjuſtly afflict and abuſe him, let him purge himſelf if he can of what is laid to his charge in Folcmote, and then put himſelf into any other Family he pleaſeth. For we gratiouſly grant, that if ſuch an one prove himſelf juſt and honeſt, he may ſerve whom he pleaſeth. And if any Reeve or Judge paſs this over, or unwillingly tranſacts it ſo as his fault be evidently proved, let him be puniſhed as contumacious againſt the King, and if for a reward he hath perverted Juſtice, let him both be puniſhed as contumacious againſt the King, and be farther noted with Infamy as was ſaid before; let a Thane ſo offending be puniſhed in the like manner; and let the Reeve or Judge chuſe out Men faithfull, and of Integrity the beſt he can light on within his Precincts, and make them Witneſſes and Overſeers of all Controverſies. And according to the value of the thing of Controverſie let the Oaths of honeſt men, without any picking or chuſing of them be interpoſed. The ſecond Law requires, that If one purſue any Cattel by their Footſteps, and find them in another Man's ground, the owner of the ground ſhall, if he can, trace their Footſteps to another Man's ground, if not the Footſteps of the Cattel in his Ground ſhall, when the owner comes to make out his right, be taken as much in evidenee as a firſt Oath.

C. 1.
Be ðon oþ ꞃeꞅ monne man undeꞃ ꝼehþ 7.

C. 2.
Be ðon ðe ẏꞃꝼe beꞅpẏꞃiʒe 7.

The valuation of Mens Heads.
Of the King's.
Of an Archbiſhop or Earl.
A Biſhop or Alderman.
Of a General.
Of ſpiritual or temporal Thane or Prieſt.
Of a Countreyman or Ceorl.
Of a wealthy Welſhman.
A wealthy Ceorl or Countreyman.

Be ƿeꞃum 7.

106. The next thing that follows relating to the Civil State, is the valuation of mens Heads, which we have often heard mentioned by the Laws, but never yet to what particularly it amounted. Firſt then ſaith the Text. The valuation of the King's Head according to the Common Law of the Engliſh, is thirty thouſand Thrymſes, whereof fifteen thouſand are properly the value of his Head, the reſt being due for the Kingdom: the laſt fifteen belong to the Nation, the firſt to the Kindred. An Archbiſhop's or Earl's Weregild (as the Saxons called it) *or valuation is fifteen thouſand Thrymſes. A Biſhop's and Ealdorman's Eight thouſand. A General's of an Army or an High Marſhall's four thouſand Thrymſes. The valuation of a Spiritual Thane or Prieſt, as alſo of a Temporal Thane two thouſand Thrymſes. That of a Countreyman (Ceorl) by the Daniſh Law is two Hundred ſixty ſeven Thrymſes. If a Welſhman grow ſo rich as to maintain a Family, have Land and pay yearly Rent to the King, he ſhall be valued at two Hundred and twenty ſhillings: if he poſſeſs half an Hide of Land, at Eighty ſhillings. If he have no Land, yet if he be a Freeman, the value of his Head ſhall be ſeventy ſhillings. If a Ceorl or Countreyman be ſo wealthy as to poſſeſs five Hides of Land, in caſe he be killed the price or value of his Life ſhall be two thouſand Thrymſes. But if he come to have a Corſlet, an Helmet and a gilt Sword, thou gh he have no Land let him paſs for a Sithcundman.*

The valuation of the Mercians.

And if his Children or Grandchildren grew ſo rich as to poſſeſs five Hides of Land let all their Poſterity be reckoned as ſo many Sithcundmen, and be valued at two thouſand Thrymſes. The Mercians value a Countreyman at two Hundred ſhillings, a Thane at twelve Hundred. They are wont to equal the ſingle value of a King's Head with ſix thouſand of Thanes, that is thirty thouſand Sceats; for ſo much is the value of the King's Head, and as much more muſt be paid as a recompence for his death. The value of his Head belongs to his Kindred, and the Compenſation of his death to the People. He that is valued at twelve Hundred ſhillings, his Oath ſhall be of the ſame eſteem as thoſe of ſix Countreymen, for were ſuch an one ſlain, ſix Countreymen would ſatisfy over and above for the value, therefore let the value of him and all them be the ſame. By the Engliſh Law the Oaths of a Prieſt and a Thane are of the like eſteem, and in reſpect of the ſeven Church Offices, to which by God's Gift he is riſen, let his Place and Rank be equal with that of a Thane.

Oaths how valued.

Puniſhments by Fines and Mulcts not with death.

107. By theſe valuations of Heads from the higheſt to the loweſt Rank, we may perceive, that in thoſe ancient times puniſhments conſiſted rather in Mulcts than in Bloud, contrary to our preſent Cuſtome, whereby ſmall offences in compariſon (eſpecially if reiterated) are become capital which whence it hath proceeded, whether from this Conſideration that Crimes in latter Ages do more abound, or from other reaſons is not evident. The Wiſedom of Legiſlatours is moſt ſeen in this, to ordain ſuch Puniſhments, as by example and terrour may beſt prevent thoſe Crimes againſt which their Laws are enacted, no other end or deſign can be called properly theirs; this is that which vindicates their Puniſhments from the Imputation of Fury * and Tyranny. And if leſs than Capital will doe it, as Men and Chriſtians, they ought to be ſparing of bloud, and as Politicians where the Countrey hath not too many Inhabitants. Therefore ſlavery, rowing in Gallies and digging in Mines, moſt Nations anciently preferred before Capital Executions, as thoſe which would more terrifie than death it ſelf, eſpecially high ſpirited Fellows, ſuch as have ſpent their Fortunes, and whom ſhame of begging provokes to rob upon the High-ways. This was ſo much practiſed in the middle Ages, that the Law of the Boii tells us, that No offence is ſo great, but Life may be granted for the Fear of God. Amongſt others the ancient Germans, and other Northern People who afterward gave Laws to Europe, puniſhed the greater ſort of Crimes and Homicide amongſt the reſt with Fines or Mulcts. For the Germans, Tacitus witneſſeth, who writes that Homicide was expiated by a certain Number of Cattel, whereby all the Houſe received ſatisfaction. For the Cimbri and Danes even till the time of Chriſtian the third, Crantzius produceth evidence. Our Saxon Anceſtours as well as others, as we have ſeen by ſome of their Laws, deprived Perſons of Liberty, and Mulcts generally they uſed, not commonly inflicting death upon Offenders, but where the value of the Head could not be paid, for the Murtherer was bound to pay the value not of his own Head but of him he had ſlain, and according to the Crime ſometimes a double, treble, nay nine or eighteen values. Their Mulcts or Fines were either greater or leſſer. The Greater took away all or much of their ſubſtance, being the ſame with that which we call the valuation of the Head by them called Were, which word originally ſignifieth a Man, and this valuation or payment ſecondarily, and by way of Tranſlation. The leſſer ſort of Mulcts they called Wite, which differed from Were both in this that it was leſs, as alſo in that it was uncertain, ſometime more and ſometime leſs, whereas the other was ſetled and conſtant, at leaſt for ſome time. The firſt anſwers to the word Redemption, or as it's now uſed in Engliſh, Ranſome, and the laſt to Fine, and Amerciament properly.

Lib. de moribus Germanorum.

De bello Rithmar.

Two ſorts of them.

Werewulfe, Lycanthropos.

Men diſtinguiſhed by Were.

108. But by this Valuation of the Head or Were, men were diſtinguiſhed into certain Claſſes or Ranks. Of theſe there were three, viz. The Loweſt, the Middle and the Higheſt. The loweſt conſiſted of ſuch as were valued at two hundred Shillings, thence in Saxon called Twyhyndnemon, in Latin Vir Ducentenus. The middle were of ſuch, whereof each was valued at ſix hundred ſhillings, called Sixhyndnemon and Vir Sexcentenus. The higheſt comprized thoſe that were valued at twelve hundred ſhillings apiece, thence termed Twelfhyndnemon and Duodecies Centenus. In like manner their Wives were termed Ceorliſſa or Twyhynda, (for Ceorle and Twyhyndmon were the ſame) as alſo Syxhynda and Twelfhynda. Hence comes it to paſs, that from theſe Claſſes, going by Hundreds, the word Hyndene is inꞇƿyhynꝺemon.

ꞅixhynꝺemon.

ꞇƿelꝼhynꝺemon.

Hynꝺane Societas Lambardo.

---

* I caſtighi ſe non hanno per fine il dar Eſempio ſono furori e non Caſtighi. Manzini nell Furori, &c. p. 91.

Nulla ſit culpa tam gravis, ut vita non concedatur propter timorem Dei. Tit. 1. Cap. 7. §. 3.

According to the degrees of valuation their Oaths were more valid.

terpreted a Society of Men. According to the degrees of the valuation of Mens Heads, they were to purge themſelves of Crimes by ſuch and ſo many Compurgatours. Herein he that was richer was thought more worthy of Credit, and his Oath was the ſooner taken, and therefore we reade that the Oath· of a Thane was equivalent to the Oaths of ſix Countreymen or Ceorles. As a Man's Value or his Wealth was more or leſs, ſo he might be a Purgatour for, or purge leſſer or greater Crimes, and therefore do we hear ſo often of Purgation according to the rate of twelve Hides of Land or more or fewer. For there it's obſervable, from the late mentioned Laws, that if a man was ſlain, his Kindred ſometime received the value of his Head, which payment was called Mægbote. In like manner were they bound on the other ſide to pay the value of the Head of one ſlain by their Kinſman, in caſe he became not reſponſible, and that to the Kindred of the ſlain party, which in the Saxon Tongue they termed Cynegild and Cynebote, the ſame in ſignification as Mægbote, now mentioned.

Mægbote what.

Cynegild.

Mæᵹ cognatus progenies, boꞇe compenſatio. Cyne cognatio ᵹilꝺ ſolutio.

Satisfaction was made to three ſorts of People.
To the Kindred.
To the Lord.
To the King.

109. Thus was the Offender variouſly puniſhed both in himſelf and Kindred for the ſame Offence, which puniſhment was ſometimes ſo heavy, that not able to undergoe it, though Pecuniary, his life was taken for ſatisfaction. Part of the Were or valuation the Kindred received, ſo called as we have now ſaid; another part was paid to the Lord for the loſs of his Vaſſal, which they called Manbote; and a third Mulct was paid to the King for the breach of his Peace, called Fridwile and Fridgild. This latter was in uſe with the ancient Franks, who termed it Fredus and Fredum, as appears both from Gregory [*] Turonenſis, and the Salick [†] Laws. As to the Cynegild or Mægbote, it appears alſo from Tacitus, that the whole Family received ſatisfaction for a Kinſman ſlain. And the Cuſtome might ſeem to be taken from Moſes his Law, who ſaith, That in caſe a price of bloud be required of him that had killed a Man, he ſhould give whatſoever was laid upon him. But thus much concerning the valuation of Heads, called Weres, the payment whereof they termed Weregild, to which we ſhall onely add, that theſe valuations by King Æthelſtan were very moderate, and that was the reaſon why many Weregilds were by after Laws put upon Offenders, ſometimes two, ſometimes three, and ſometimes nine. Therefore in the Charter of Liberties to the City of London did Henry the firſt grant as a Privilege, that a Citizen ſhould be but taxed or judged at one Were or an hundred Shillings, at which value he ſet a Londoner. And that in his days Weres alſo were moderate, appears from this, in that he ordained that whoſo broke or ſet at naught a Law, for the firſt Offence ſhould pay his Were; for the ſecond Offence double his Were, and in caſe he the third time offended, ſhould forfeit all he had. This is certain, that in the times of the Engliſh Norman Princes Weres and Weregilds were in faſhion. They grew obſolete by degrees, but when utterly laid aſide it is not certain. And the word Fredum (which was never in uſe with our Writers) grew alſo obſolete abroad after the Age of the Emperour Frederick the Second.

Man famulus Servus Vaſſallus.

Ꝼꞃıꝺe pax. Germ. Frid.

[*] De Mirac. St. Martini. lib. 4. c. 26.
[†] Tit. 55. §. 2.
Recipitque ſatisfactionem univerſa domus.

Exod. 21. 30.

Which was called Weregild.

The value of a Londoner.

LL. Henr. I. c. 13. Qui legem apoſtabit Weræ ſuæ ſit reus prima vice; Si ſecundo fecerit, reddat bis Weram ſuam; qui tertio præſumat, perdat quicquid habet.

The value of Thrymſa.

And other Saxon Money.

110. We have the Hiſtory of the Valuation of Heads or Weres, but ſtill ſhall we be in the dark if we know not the price, and that cannot be, except we ſomething underſtand the value of theſe Thrymſes, by which they are rated in Æthelſtan's Laws. That the word Thrymſa comes from the Saxon word Threo, the ſame with our preſent Three is agreed, but in what reſpect it anſwered to Three is a little controverted. One was of opinion that it contained the third part of a German ſhilling, anſwering to their Tremiſſis. Another thought it to contain three Pennies; but moſt probable it is, that it contained Three Shillings Engliſh Saxon, without any relation to German or Foreign Money, although the Mercians ſeem to have differed from the other Engliſh in its value. As for the other ſorts of Money; five Pennies in thoſe days made a Shilling, and thirty Pennies made a Mancs (in Latin Mancuſa) as Ælfric tells us in his Saxon Grammar. Of thoſe Pence two hundred and forty made a Pound, which conſiſted of forty eight of their Shillings; and then as Mr. Lambard obſerved from ſome Silver Pence of King Ethelred, which he ſaw, two hundred and forty Pence equalled a pound in weight, that which ſeven hundred and twenty of ours now will not doe, although two hundred and twenty of our Pence alſo make Selden.

Somner.
Lambard.

Lıbꞃa on leꝺen ıꞅ Punꝺon englıꞅc. ꝼıꝼ ƿenıngaꞅ ᵹemacıᵹað ænne ꞅcılınᵹe ⁊ XXX ƿeneᵹa ænne mancꞅ ⁊̇ in extremo fine Gram.

a Pound in value. The Word to expreſs the moſt Money in thoſe days was the Sceate or Scate, which according to Mr. Lambard contained a vaſt ſum, to the value of five thouſand Pounds of Silver. Some are of opinion that it ſignified alſo a ſmall piece of money to the value of an Half-penny. Beſides this Half-penny (if an Half-penny they had) they had alſo the Feorthing, Feorthling, or Farthing containing the fourth part of a Penny as we may ſuppoſe. In ſhort, we are told, that theſe ſeveral ſorts and ſums of Money were in uſe amongſt our Engliſh Saxon Anceſtours, viz. Feorthling, Peneg, Oſe, Scæt, Scilling, Thrymſa, and Pund. Concerning Oſe I have hitherto read nothing, but ſuppoſe Ore is meant, which was worth ſixteen pence. Fifteen Ores alſo in a Book ſeen by Sir H. Spelman, was put for a Pound, and from a Manuſcript Regiſter of the Abby of Burton in Leiceſterſhire, he obſerved that the word Ora ſignified the ſame as Vncia. From that time the value of it was reckoned for ſixteen pence, and ſometimes for twenty pence, whence proceeded the difference of having Ora for twenty pence ſo often in Doomſday Book.

Sceaꞇ nummum in genere ſignificat ut Belgis Schat Schot. in Borealibus etiam Angliæ partibus Shot adhuc uſurpatur pro potus puta Cereviſiæ, pretio. Etiam Shot-pot.

ꝼeoꞃðlinᵹ, peneᵹ, oꞅe, ꞅcæꞇꞇa, ꞅcilling, þꞃymꞅa, punꝺ.

111. To proceed with our Laws, all that we find of King Æthelſtan's in the Saxon Edition of Mr. Lambard we have already related, there are others, though not in the Saxon Language, to be ſeen in the Chronicon of John Bromton the Ab-bat of Jornal, of which alſo we muſt make mention, ſuch eſpecially as we judge moſt convenient to be known. The firſt Catalogue we meet with conſiſts of nine ſeveral Laws, whereof the Firſt ſhews how the Court of the Hundred ought to be 1.
kept, declaring, that to the number of four Abbats meet, and that Right be done to all men in that Court. The ſecond appoints how a Thief is to be proſecuted from 2.
the Hundred to the Tithing. The third impoſes upon him that ſhall reject the Sen- 3.
tence or Judgment of the Hundred, ſo that it paſſeth againſt him the ſecond time, for the firſt offence the fine of thirty Pence to the Hundred, for the ſecond offence ſix-ty Pence, whereof one half to the Hundred and the other half to the Lord. For the third offence the loſs of all he hath, and be Baniſhed, except the King otherwiſe diſpenſe with him. The fourth confirms what had been ſaid concerning ſtray Cat- 4.
tel, that no man ſhould keep them without the knowledge and Teſtimony of an Hun- dred or Tything man, otherwiſe no benefit of Vouching ſhould be allowed him. The 5.
fifth requires, That when one Hundred makes Hue and Cry, or purſues Cattel into another Hundred, this Hundred doe the like or forfeit thirty Shillings to the King.
The ſixth requires, That if any one decline the Law or make any eſcape, he that was 6.
the Procurer ſhall pay the value of the thing in queſtion. The ſeventh again com- 7.
mands, That right and publick Juſtice be done in the Hundred, and in every other publick Meeting, and that a day be prefixed for every buſineſs, which whoſoever tranſ-greſſes, except hindred by the Command or Order of ones Lord, or by viſible Infirmity ſhall forfeit thirty Shillings, and yet be obliged to doe what he ought to have done at another appointed time. The * eighth is very hard to be explained, and the Kernell 8.
not worth the labour of cracking the Nut. And the laſt is concerning Ordeal, 9.
of which in another place.

112. After this follow certain Judgments, as they are termed, which Wiſemen are ſaid to have ordained at Exeter by the Council of King Æthelſtan, which were afterward confirmed both at Feverſham a Town in Kent, and at Thundresfeld.
Herein firſt are reinforced all the Laws formerly made at Greatley, except what con- cerned the Market of the City and the Lord's day. The reſt contain ſevere Animad- verſions upon Thieves and ſuch as receive them, viz. " Confinement into ſome place " of the Kingdom which the King ſhall chuſe. Nay, if one that ſtole after the " Aſſembly held at Thundresfeld ſteal again, let he or ſhe be what they will,
" they are condemned to death, together with ſuch as harbour, or ſpare them if " they meet them. And as to the manner of their death here are certain odd " Circumſtances. If ſhe was a Free Woman that ſtole, ſhe ſhould be caſt down " from an high Cliff or Hill, or elſe drowned. If a Slave, he ſhould be ſtoned
" by twenty of like condition; and in caſe any one's blow thrice failed he ſhou'd
" ſo many times be beaten. And when the Thief was dead, every one of theſe " Slaves or Servants ſhould pay three Pence to his Lord. If the Thief was a She-

---

* Pecoris ticimum & canis Oppa & blanhornum & de quibus ſic Somnerus in Gloſſar. Locus mirè ænigmaticus & meliori Oedipo relinquendus.

“ ſlave eighty Women of the like condition ſhould each of them bring three “ Faggots or pieces of wood, and therewith burn her, and pay moreover ſo “ many Pence as the He-ſlaves were to do, or elſe be beaten. Another of theſe Laws forbids the receiving of another man's Servant, whom he cannot rule under pain of the forſeiture of an hundred and twenty Shillings to the King, and the return and reparation of the Servant to be made beſides. Another ordains, That a Lord ſhall not deny Hlafordſocna, or his Protection, Defence, or the like, to a Freeman, who (being a Vaſſal) does him right in all reſpects. The laſt decrees, That ſuch Judge or Officer as breaks, or hath not ſufficient regard to theſe Ordinances forfeit an hundred and twenty Shillings to the King, be he Thane or any other kind of man.

Wiſe men appointed by the King to manage the Government in particular Counties.

113. Theſe Judgments or Ordinances bear not the Name of the King himſelf, but of the Wiſemen of Exeter, who deviſed them there by the King's Advice or Conſent, whoſe allowance gave them the Power and force of Laws, and thoſe were the Wiſemen whom he mentions in the Preface of other Laws to have been with him at that City in Chriſtmas Holydays. Theſe were alſo confirmed at Feverſham and at a place called Thundresfeld. From theſe and other Paſſages it is evident, that in the days of this King Æthelſtan, the Wiſemen, or knowing Perſons of particular Countries, Provinces and Cities, by the King's conſent and allowance were wont to aſſemble and lay their Heads together, for the framing of ſuch Ordinances as ſhould be moſt convenient for the government of their particular Countries, and ſecurity of their Eſtates, and for the receiving what was enacted at the General Aſſembly of the Eſtates for the whole Kingdom; as in matters Eccleſiaſtical the Decrees of General Councils were wont to be received, or (as the Word was) confirmed in particular Synods, although of ſufficient authority in themſelves. And where in the particular Shires or Provinces ſuch knowing men might be wanting, or for other reaſons the King ſometimes ſent down certain from himſelf to conſult with the Bodies of the Shires and Cities as well Noble, as Ignoble, and to convey to them ſuch Ordinances or Laws as were thought moſt fitting for them. A notable acknowledgement hereof we have of the County of Kent in an Addreſs made to the King, wherein with much Humility and thankfulneſs they make mention of certain Laws he had ſent them; and teſtifie their acceptance of them. This becauſe of the Rarity of the thing, and for that it makes very much for the knowledge of the Mode of Addreſs of that Age, and illuſtrates the Polity or manner of the Engliſh Saxon Government, as well as confers to the farther knowledge of their Laws, we ſhall as well as we can tranſlate from the difficult Latin of the Abbat Bromton.

The form of a Saxon Addreſs.

114. Moſt dear, your Biſhops of Kent with all Kentſhire, Thanes, Counts, and Countreymen, give thanks to you their moſt beloved Lord, for that you were pleaſed to give us orders concerning our Peace, and inquire and conſult concerning our Advantage in a matter of ſuch conſequence to us both Rich and Poor. And this we have faln upon with all the diligence we could, by the advice of thoſe Wiſemen, whom you ſent to us. And, moſt Dear Lord, the Firſt is concerning our Tithe, to the which we are very deſirous and ready to conform our ſelves, giving you moſt humble thanks for your Admonition. The ſecond is concerning our Peace, which all your People deſires may be obſerved as your Wiſemen propounded at Greatley, and as now is appointed in the Council held at Fefreſham. The third is, that all are very thankfull for the grace you were pleaſed to beſtow on guilty Perſons, in that all Forfeitures are pardoned, for ſuch Thefts as were committed before the Aſſembly held at Fefreſham, *on condition that they commit no offence hereafter, and confeſs all their Robberies and ſatisfie your Majeſty. The fourth, that none receive another Man's Servant without his leave, to whom he formerly * belonged, neither within nor without the Limits. As alſo that a Lord deny not a Freeman his* Hlafordſocna, that is, his Defence or Protection, in caſe he have been faithfull to him. The fifth thing is, that he that acts contrary to this is worthy of thoſe puniſhments which are preſcribed in the Inſtrument of Peace drawn up at Greatley. The ſixth, that if ſo be a man be ſo Rich, and of ſuch Alliance that he cannot be chaſtized, and will not ceaſe to commit his former Outrages, that you will cauſe him to be taken away and removed into ſome other quarter of your Kingdom, as it is ſaid in the Weſtern Parts, let him be what he will Alderman (or Count) or Countreyman. The ſeventh, that every one hold all his men in his own Warranty againſt all Theft. If any there be that hath ſo many Kariſſime, Epiſcopi tui de Kent, & omnis Kenteſcire, Thayni, Comites & Villani tibi domino dilectiſſimo ſuo gratias agunt quod nobis de pace noſtra præcipere, &c.

* Cui prius folgavit nec intra Marcam nec extra. Folgare eſt tradere ſe alicui in Clientelam, ſervire, ſequi, ſectari, ut olim ſolebant ii qui Anglis dicebantur Reteiners. Saxonice ꝼolᵹian unde noſtrum hodiernum to follow, g (ut ſæpe) in u vel w mutato. Hinc etiam Folgarius, pro Cliente ſectatore, a Reteiner. Marca propriè ſignum eſt veterioris limitis à Saxon. Meaꞃc hodie Marke.

ny men that he cannot keep them all, let him appoint an Overſeer in every of his Villages, whom he can truſt, and who will truſt his men. And in caſe this Overſeer dare not truſt ſome of his men, let theſe men find out twelve Perſons of their Kindred who will be ſecurity for them. And in caſe the Lord or Overſeer, or any other infringe this Ordinance, or depart from hence, let him be thought worthy of what was agreed on at Greatley, except any other kind of Juſtice better pleaſe the King. The eighth is, that what you ſaid concerning the working of Shields contenteth all. Our Lord we beſeech you of your mercifulneſs, that if we have in this matter either exceeded or been defective, you will order it to be amended, as you your ſelf ſhall think convenient. And we are devoutly prepared for all things which you ſhall pleaſe to command us, and which any way lie in our power to perform.

115. Next after this follow ſome other Articles, which are ſaid to have been deviſed by the Biſhops and Officers belonging to the Court of London, by them publiſhed, and confirmed by the Oaths of the Ealdormen (or Counts, he terms them Comites) and Countreymen, or the ordinary ſort of men in their Fridgild, Aſſociation, or Publick Meeting, with the addition of thoſe Laws or Judgments which were firſt ordained at Greatley, and afterward confirmed at Exeter and Thundresfeld. All theſe Articles now agreed on tend to the prevention of Theft by the puniſhment of Thieves and ſuch as harbour or protect them. Theft is now confirmed to be Capital, and not onely Aſſociations are allowed and incouraged but alſo the raiſing of publick ſtocks for defraying the Charges of proſecution, and the Incouragement of ſuch as ſhould ſhew themſelves induſtrious in that behalf. We cannot but here ſuggeſt to the Reader what Remark he ought to make of theſe times, how the Crime of ſtealing, which generally indeed is taken notice moſt of in all the Saxon Laws, and moſt care taken for the prevention of it, grew more common than ever in the days of Æthelſtan; the Engliſh having, as Ingulphus obſerves, in the days of Alfred imitated the Example of the Danes, and becauſe they thought the blame would ſtill be laid upon the Danes given themſelves to Robbing: For by the ſtrength and ſharpneſs of the Remedy we may judge of the violence of the Diſeaſe. But formerly a Wite or Were, a Fine or value of the Head would ſerve for the Puniſhment, now nothing but death it ſelf, to be inflicted both on the Maleſactours themſelves, and thoſe that abetted, received, or would not kill them if they met them. And whereas Gilds, Aſſociations, or Societies were in uſe among Free People, whereby the Company in general was reſponſible for each number in particular; the like for prevention of Theft muſt be erected even amongſt Servants and Slaves of both Sexes, they being both condemned to execute one another by the cruel Deaths of ſtoning and burning, and alſo to pay Money, as it were a Fine to the endamaged Party, as if bound to be Sureties for one another. We ſee what a neceſſity of ſhewing an Example and Prevention can make lawfull as to puniſhments; and may hence take an account of the ſeverity of our modern Cuſtoms in particular Towns, and of the Publick Laws againſt Theft and Robbing. If we in England be more ſevere againſt Thieves than in other Countries, and make ſmaller Offences Capital, it is becauſe our Legiſlatours ſaw the great proneneſs of the Natives to this Crime, and in their Judgments this way of puniſhment ſeemed more terrible than any other, (and perhaps more than later Ages have found it) and conſequently the beſt way for prevention. Yet cannot I ſee why, of thoſe two ill qualities which are aſcribed to Iſlanders, from the condition of their Habitation, inclination to Theft ſhould be as proper and Connatural as Inconſtancy.

Theft made Capital.

Exemplo namque Danorúmque colore etiam quidam indigenarum latrociniis ac rapinis incendere cæperant.

Edmund the next Legiſlatour.

116. The next Legiſlatour after Æthelſtan was King Edmund his Brother and immediate Succeſſour both in the Kingdom and in the practice of making Laws. We are told that in the ſolemn Feaſt of Eaſter (but not in what year) he held a great Council at London, as well of Eccleſiaſticks as Seculars, where was preſent Oda and Wulſtan the Archbiſhops with many other Biſhops to conſult for the good of their own Souls, and of thoſe that were under their care and Government. At this Council were enacted ſeveral Laws, which being ſix in number are of Eccleſiaſtical Concernment, and amongſt ſuch matters muſt be remembred. Theſe are found both in the Saxon Copy publiſhed by Lambard, and in the Latin of Bromton; but in Bromton's Book follow ſeven others of Civil Concernment, ſaid to have been made by the King, his Biſhops, and Wiſemen at Culinton, which are not extant in the Saxon Edition. I. The firſt of theſe requires an Oath of Fidelity to King Edmund to be taken by all, in like m[illegible]ner as a Man ought to be faithfull to his Lord without all controverſie or ſedition both in publick and in private, in loving what he ſhall love, and rejecting what he ſhall reject, and before the Oath be given, that no man conceal this matter no more in his Brother or Neighbour than in a Stranger. The ſecond concerning apprehenſion of Thieves, enjoyns, 2.

That if it be known for certain where a Thief is, the Twelfhindi and Twifhindi unite together and take him either alive or dead. In caſe any one take up Mortal Feud againſt any one of them for ſo doing, he is to be eſteemed as the Enemy of the King and all his Friends. And if any refuſe to aſſiſt in the apprehenſion, he ſhall forfeit to the King an hundred and twenty Shillings, and to the Hundred, thirty Shillings.
The third, as ſeveral before, forbids the receiving of another man's Servant 3.
that hath injured any man till he have done the injured party right, on pain of making amends himſelf. The fourth enjoyns, That if ſeveral Thieves do ſteal, the Eldeſt 4.
of them be taken and killed or hanged, and each of the reſt beaten thrice, Racked, and for an Example have his Little Finger cut off. The fifth forbids the buying or 5. receiving of ſtrange Cattel, without the Teſtimony of the Chief Officer, Prieſt, the Ordeale or the Portreeve. The ſixth injoyns the proſecution or ſearch of Cattel from 6.
place to place. He with whom they are found ſhall reſtore the Beaſt and pay to the King an hundred and twenty Shillings, which fine he ſhall alſo incur that reſiſts and refuſeth to doe right. The ſeventh and laſt requires, That every perſon make his 7.
Servants and all that live in his Peace and his Lands to be truſted. That all ſuch as have ill Names and be loaded with Accuſations have ſecurity given for them. And whatſoever Officer, Thane, Alderman, or Countreyman he be that refuſeth to doe accordingly ſhall forfeit an hundred and twenty Shillings, and farther, be thought worthy of ſuch puniſhments as have been before mentioned.

117. After theſe follow ſeven other Laws of King Edmund, which are found both in the Copies of Bromton and of Lambard. Before them we find a Preface wherein the King ſignifies to all his Subjects, both old and young, that he had moſt ſtudiouſly inquired in a ſolemn Aſſembly both of Eccleſiaſticks and Laicks, by what means Chriſtian Faith might beſt be propagated. And that it ſeemed moſt convenient to them all that he ſhould cheriſh and procure love and mutual friendſhip through all his Dominions. For they were much troubled at the unjuſt Contentions that were among them, and therefore he and they did ordain. Firſt, That if hereafter one man kill another, that he alone take up Deadly Feud or Enmity with the Kindred of the ſlain, unleſs within twelve Months, by the aſſiſtence of his own Kindred, he pay the Weregild or value of the ſlain man's Head, of what condition ſoever he was. In caſe his Kinsfolks forſake him, and will pay nothing for him, he alone ſhall bear the Quarrel, and they ſhall not be taken for Enemies. But they in the mean time ſhall not relieve him, nor have peace with him, which if they doe or have, they ſhall forfeit all they have to the King, and he that firſt forſook his Kinſman ſhall be taken as an Enemy by the Kindred of the ſlain, and bear deadly Feud againſt them. And if any ſhall revenge himſelf upon or proſecute any other of the Kindred beſide the Killer himſelf, he ſhall forfeit all he hath, and be taken as an Enemy both by the King and all that love him. The ſecond denounces, That *if a man flie to a Church or the King's * Town, and there any one ſet upon him or doe him any harm he ſhall be puniſhed in the ſame manner.* By the third the King expreſly forbids that any Fyhtwite or Manbote, that is, any fine for Fighting or Killing be remitted. By the fourth he openly ſignifies, that his Houſe ſhall afford no ſhelter to him that hath ſhed bloud, except he have firſt made ſatisfaction to God and the Kindred of the ſlain, and have done whatſoever was enjoyned him by the Biſhop in whoſe Dioceſe the Fact was committed. By the fifth he gives hearty thanks to God and them all who had aſſiſted him in making this Law of Peace for the reſtraining of Thieves, and he truſts that they will be the more ready for the time to come to aſſiſt him by how much more neceſſary they ſee the Law is to be obſerved. The ſixth injoyns, That he that breaks the Peace, and ſets upon a man in his own Houſe, forfeit all he hath, and his life be at the King's diſpoſal.

C. I. Saxon. Be manꞅlihꞇe. Apud Jornal. C. I.

C. 2. Sax. Be ðon ðe mon oꝼeꞃne on Cyꞃicean ᵹeꞅece. Oþþe on Cyninᵹeꞅ buꞃh ⁊ Apud Jornal. c. II.

* Mine buꞃh.

C. 3. Sax. Be ꝼyhꞇƿiꞇe ⁊ manboꞇe. Jornal. c. III.

C. 4 Saxonic. Be bloꝺᵹeoꞇe. C. IV. Apud Jornal.

C. 5. Saxon. Ðæncunᵹe ðam ðe ƿiþ ðyꝼþe ꝼyꞅꞇaþ. C. V. Apud Jornal.

C. 6. Saxon. Be munðbꞃyce ⁊ hamꞅocne. C. VI. Apud Jornal.

118. The Seventh and laſt of theſe Laws is concerning Enmities or deadly Feuds, declaring that it's the duty of Wiſemen to ſuppreſs them, and preſcribing the way after this manner. Firſt, as the Law is, every where a Mediatour is to be ſent before to the Kindred of the ſlain man, who is to ſigniſie to them that he that killed him will make ſatisfaction, then into the Hands of this Mediatour the Manſlayer is to be delivered, that he may quietly appear and give Caution for the payment of the value of the dead man's Head; which as ſoon as he hath done, the King's Peace is to be made made betwixt them. One and twenty days ended let him pay Halſfage, (as the Abbat Bromton hath it) or as the Saxon Text Healsfange, that is (as Mr. Lambard rightly interprets it, that which was paid in way of Commutation for the puniſhment of tying by the Neck to the King or Lord. Within one and twenty days after (or Nights as the Text hath it) let him pay Maubot or Money for the Servants death due to the Lord, as we have formerly explain'd it; and within one and twenty more the Weregild or value of the ſlain Parties Head, as Bromton hath it, or, rather as the Saxon Text, the firſt portion of the Payment. As for theſe Capital Enmities or Deadly Feuds the Reader muſt underſtand they were ordinary among the Germans and Barbarous Northern Nations, who ordinarily maintained private Quarrels by their whole Kindred, thereby rendring their Fewds as it were Patrimonial and Hereditary. So Tacitus writes concerning the Germans, that they were conſtrained to take up the Quarrels and Friendſhips of their Fathers and Kinſmen. There was neceſſity of it, Murthers and Homicides not being cenſured by the Sentence of the Judge, but, as one expreſſeth, by the hands and fury of the Kindred of the ſlain, who in puniſhing uſed their own Methods and Meaſures as they liſted. The cuſtome as the Northern People uſed in their own Countries when tranſplanted into more Southern Soils they would not leave off no more than ſeveral others, no not when their Principles ſhould have been bettered by Chriſtianity. But whatever Princes or Laws could doe, thoſe Enmities they ſtill maintained, ſo that Legiſlatours by degrees could ſcarcely get ground upon them, not daring to forbid the whole buſineſs, but regulating it as we ſee King Edmund doth by theſe two Laws, in the one preſcribing the manner of carrying on theſe Deadly Quarrels, in the other the method of compounding them. Amongſt the Salique Laws alſo, thoſe of the Lombards, Franks, and other Obſolete Conſtitutions, as well as in the Capitula of Charles and Ludovic, are there many Laws concerning this Subject. The Capitulary of Charles the Great calls this Enmity Faida, in German it's Fhede and Feido, which ſeem to be derived from no other than the Saxon ꝼah, now in Engliſh Foe, otherwiſe an Enemy. Our Saxon Anceſtours termed it ꝼæhꝺ from the ſame Original, and hence we may well derive the preſent word Fewd, and give theſe the Name of Deadly Fewds. Mr. Lambard was of opinion that to theſe Deadly Fewds ſucceeded that Action in Law granted to the next akin to the Party ſlain, called Appeal de mort. But the cruel Cuſtome of the Fewds themſelves continued till the Norman times and longer, as appears by that * Law of King Edward the Confeſſour, reviſed and confirmed both by William the Conquerour, and by Henry the ſecond, as Hoveden tells us.

C. 7. Saxon. Be ꝼæhþe. C.VII. apud Jornal.

ðæꞅ ƿeꞃeꞅ ꝥ ꝼꞃumᵹilꝺ ꝼꞃum autem ſignificat principium, originem, ᵹilꝺ ut antea.

Suſcipere tam inimicitias, ſeu patris, ſeu propinqui, quam amicitias neceſſe eſt.

Vide Lambardi Gloſſar. in voc. Capitales inimicitiæ.

Spelman. in voc. Faida.

A Sax. ꝼah & haꝺe, junioribus hode & hood, Germ. heyd, heit, hat, quod in vocum terminatione ut ſuprà monuimus conditionem vel qualitatem denotat.

---

*C. 12. Parentibus occiſi (i.e. cognatis more Francorum) fiat emendatio, vel guerra eorum portetur. Unde Anglicè proverbium habetur. Byhe ꞅpeaꞃe oꝼ ꞅiꝺe oððe bæꞃ. i. e. Eme lanceam à latere aut fer.

119. Beſides theſe Laws before mentioned, there is a certain Conſtitution aſcribed to this ſame King Edmund, by Bromton, concerning the manner and Rites of Marriage. The ſame was found by Sir Henry Spelman, in Saxon, in a Book belonging to Corpus Chriſti College in Cambridge, joyned to the Laws of King Alfred, but in the Margent is noted, by ſome obſerver, that the ſame conſtitution was found amongſt the Laws of King Edmund, as Bromton the Abbat of Jerval hath it. The Tenour of it is thus. 1. If one purpoſe to marry a Virgin or a Woman (a Widow Bromton hath it) ſhe and her friends conſenting, the Bridegroom both by the Law of God and Man ought to give caution for the fulfilling of what Covenants made before, as alſo that his purpoſe is, and his deſire to have her as a Wife, according to the law of God, and no otherwiſe, and for this his friends muſt alſo ingage. 2. The ſecond thing muſt be to take care of their maintenance, and it muſt be known who ſhall maintain them, and for this, both the Bridegroom and his friends muſt ingage.

The manner and Rites of Marriage.

Spelman. Concil. p. 425.

Hu man mæꝺen ƿeꝺꝺian ꞅceal. ⁊ hƿylce ꝼoꞃeƿaꞃꝺe þæꞃaᵹhon ꞇo beon ⁊

Jornal. in leg. Edmundi & Whelocus in Editione nova legum Lambardi Saxonic. p. 60.

Saxonicam autem verſionem interpretati ſumus ſecundum quod monuit Somnerus, in lib. de Gavelkind. c. 3. Conſtitutionem enim hanc a Spelmanno Editam erratis variis inquinatam obſervavit.

Sect. 12.

*gage. 3. Then after that, let the * Bridegroom declare what he will give his Bride, beſides that which ſhe formerly made choice of with his good liking in caſe ſhe overlive him. 4. In caſe they ſo agree, it's fit ſhe have the one half of all his Eſtate, and if they have a Child betwixt them, the whole Eſtate till ſuch time as ſhe marry again. 5. What the Bridegroom hath promiſed, let him confirm by giving caution, let him carefully obſerve it, and his friends engage on his behalf. 6. If they be now agreed on all things, let the Kindred of the Bride contract her to him as a Wife, and ingage for her honeſty, and then let caution be given for celebration of the Marriage. 7. If afterwards her Husband carry her out of the Territory of the Thane or Baron where ſhe was bred, into the Diſtrict of another Thane, let caution be given to her friends that ſhe ſhall receive injury from no Man. And in caſe ſhe her ſelf doe any ill thing, let her friends be ready to make ſatisfaction to her Husband, if ſhe have not wherewith to doe it. 8. At the beſtowing of her in Marriage a Prieſt muſt be preſent, who of right, with the Bleſſing of God, ſhall promote their Conjunction to the attainment of all Felicity. 9. Laſtly, There muſt be good heed and aſſurance had, that there be no Impediment of Conſanguinity betwixt them, leſt afterward they be juſtly ſeparated, who were unjuſtly joyned together.*

* Bꞃıðȝuma a bꞃyde ſponſa & ȝuma aȝymon curare, unde forte ȝymunȝ Nuptiæ. Bridegroom nunc dicimus corruptè pro Bridegume, quaſi ſcil. Sponſus eſt ſponſæ famulus vel ſervus die Nuptiarum. The Bride's Groom, ita popellus ſibi imponit.

The form of Endowing.

120. To the fourth Article of this Conſtitution, Sr. Henry Spelman, in the Margent ſets this Note; The ancient form of Endowing, as hinting that it was the Cuſtome amongſt the Engliſh Saxons; for the Wife that overlived her Husband, to have half his Eſtate, and in caſe ſhe had a Child by him, the whole till ſuch time as ſhe Marry another Husband. Accordingly he Interprets the Saxon words, Quod ſiquidem eveniat; If it ſo come to paſs, viz. that ſhe overlive him. But Mr. Somner who hath diſcovered other faults in this Edition of Sr. Henry, Interprets the words, ſi ſic conveniat, viz. If they ſo agree; the King thinks it juſt that ſhe have the half if ſhe outlive her Husband, &c. This Endowing, being that which they call Dotarium or Donarium, according to this beſt Interpretation of the words, was not then neceſſary, or by compulſion, but ſo as was thought fit, if it was ſo agreed before the Marriage: but whereas Mr. Somner in his Gloſſary, thinks it the ſame with the maintenance mentioned in the Second Article, by our Saxon Anceſtours (as in that Article) termed Fosterlean, his own Interpretation of the other words ſeems to confute him. For that maintenance or Foſterlean hath relation to their joynt condition during Marriage, or as now we ſay, whilſt under coverture, the victus as they interpret it, after which follows, who ſhall maintain them? The one being neceſſary, but the other uncertain, and according as he himſelf will have it, to agreement. Beſides this Endowing this Dotalitium or Donarium, there was that which our Saxon Anceſtours called Morgangiſe, the Lombards Morgangap, the Burgundians, Alamans, and others Morgengeba, and ſome Morgingab, ſo called (for all theſe amount to one) becauſe it was a gift beſtowed by the Bridegroom on the Bride, that morning they were to be Married. Yet doth * Gregory Turonenſis diſtinguiſh it à Dote from the ordinary Endowing. It ſeems to have been ſome ſpecial thing given to the Bride, as an eſpecial mark of the Bridegroom's favour. Some think it to correſpond or have ſome affinity with the Engliſh Cuſtome of Endowing or Enfeoffing at the Church Door, as they term it. Whereby the Bridegroom, when in the morning he is about to enter the Church to be Married, makes a preſent, as it were, to his Bride of ſome piece of Land.

Priſca dotationis formula.

ȝıꝼ hıꞇ ſƿa geꝼoꞃƿoꞃð bıþ.

The Antiquity of Gavelkind. C. 3. p. 76.

A Saxon. ꝼoſꞇeꞃ i. e. victus, cibaria unde hodiernum noſtrum to Foſter nutrire, & lean exhibere.

In leg. Canuti. c. 71.

Moꞃȝan ȝıꝼe matutinum donum, ſic etiam Germanicè Morgin ſignificat mane & Gab donatio.

* Lib. 9. c. 10. Hiſt. Tam in dote quam in Morgangiba.

Ad oſtium Eccleſiæ.

121. But theſe Gifts and Endowings are quite contrary to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Romans, with whom, Dos, properly ſignifieth that Portion which the Husband receiveth with his Wife. They were not wont to give their Wives any thing back, and therefore have no proper word whereby to expreſs ſuch a Gift (Donations betwixt Man and Wife being carefully in their Laws forbidden) which we in Engliſh call Dower, anſwering properly to Dotarium Donarium, (a) and the like. Tacitus admires the thing it ſelf, amongſt the Germans expreſſing it thus. The (b) Wife brings no Portion (Dotem) to the Husband, but the Husband (Dower) to the Wife. Yet the Greeks moſt anciently as they had (c) words to expreſs both Portion and Dower, were wont thus alſo to provide for their Wives. Homer ſeigns Vulcan, to have endowed Venus, and to have demanded back the Dower after that ſhe was taken in Adultery with Mars; and in like manner, Claudian feigns the ſame thing to have been done by Pluto to Proſerpina. For the Galls, Cæſar teſtifies that the Husband was wont to return the value of what he received in Portion with his Wiſe. Strabo writes of the Cantabrians in Spain, that they alſo Endowed their Wives, and left their Daughters their Heirs, which thing he diſlikes, as giving Women power over Men. To be ſure the Teutonick and Northern Nations, practiſed this courſe, as is evident from Gregory of Tours, concerning the Franks in Gall, and concerning the Goths, Saxons and Lombards, their ſeveral Laws. In ſome places half the Lands, and ſome a third part went in Dower, and in others Money. In other places it was left to the diſcretion of the Man to give what he pleaſed. The Engliſh and Scots have in later Ages, after the Faſhion of the Sicilians, alotted the third Part; though Kent and ſome Boroughs, one half part, as alſo ſome Towns in France. But this Cuſtome hath farther to plead for it, that it had the Hebrews alſo for its practiſers, as appears from that place which ſaith, a Man ſhall Endow a Woman, and take her for his Wiſe. And Sichem being begging to Marry Dina, bids them ask what Dower they would, and he would grant it.

(a) Vocatur etiam Doarium Dodarium Dotalitium.

(b) Dotem non uxor marito, ſed uxori maritus affert.

(c) Dotem φερνὴν & προίκα, vocant antidotem vero ut ita dicamus, ἀντιφέρναν, ἕδνον & ὑπόβολον.

Lib. 6. de bello Gallico.

Geograph. l. 3.

Hiſt. l. 9. c. 20.

How much was aſſigned for Dover.

Vid Spelman. Gloſſar. in voc. Doarium

Exod. 22. 16.

Gen. 34. 12.

122. So much is fit to be pleaded for our Cuſtome, and in favour of the other Sex againſt the Romans, who yet were ſo juſt, as when they put away their Wives, bid them take what they brought along with them; which words were uſed expreſly, to ſignifie a Divorce. Our Engliſh Saxon Anceſtours were both carefull for the main Chance, not to have nothing with their Wives, becauſe meat cannot be bought in the Market without Money, and yet were both ſo juſt and kind as to provide for their Wives by way of Dowry when they Married, that they might be able to Live when they were Dead, and were content to be bound up for performance, and not to be left to their own diſcretions what they would doe after Marriage, or at their Deaths. By King Edmund's Conſtitutions we have ſeen their care on one ſide, and that they were not heedleſs on the other appears by an ancient Saxon Monument, or a Tripartite Writing, concerning a Marriage made in the Days of King Cnute, which here for Illuſtration of this Subject we ſhall Exemplify as we have it publiſhed by Mr. Sumner. Here appeareth in this Writing the Agreement that Godwin made with Byrhtric when he Woed his Daughter. That is, firſt he gives her one pound weight of Gold on condition that ſhe ſtand to the Agreement, and he giveth her theſe Lands at Strete, with all that thereto appertaineth, and in Burware Marſh one hundred and fifty Acres; withall, thirty Oxen, twenty Cows, ten Horſes, and ten Theowmen or Bondmen. This was agreed at Kingſton before King Cnute, in the preſence of Living the Archbiſhop, as alſo in the Covents at Chriſt Church, of Ælſmere the Abbat, the Covents at St. Auguſtin's; of Æthelwin the Sheriff, Sired the Elder, Godwin, Wulfey's Son; Eadmer at Burham; Godwine, Wulſtan's Son; and Charles, the King's Servant. And when this Maid was fetch'd to Brightling, then went off all theſe for Sureties, Ælgar, the Son of Sired; Frerth, Prieſt of Folcſton; Leoſwine, Prieſt of Dover; Wulfey a Prieſt; Eadred the Son of Eadelm; Leoſwine, the Son of Warelm; Cenwold Ruſt; Leoſwine, Godwin's Son at Horton; Leoſwine the Red; Godwine the Son of Eadgiſe, and Leofsun his Brother. And which of them longeſt liveth ſhall have all the Poſſeſſions, aſwell that Land which I give them, as every thing. This thing is known to all * Doughty, or Valiant Men in Kent; and in Suſſex both Thanes and Churles, or Countreymen. And this Writing is Tripartite, one is at Chriſt Church, a ſecond at St. Auguſtin's, and the third hath Byrhtric himſelf. See here the manner of Marriage, and ſettling matters thereto belonging in thoſe ancient Times. And take notice by this Inſtrument, as alſo all along by the Laws how cautious they were in all reſpects, ſcarcely tranſacting any thing but by the Intervention of Suretyſhip.

Suas ſibi res habere juſſerunt.

The Settlement given to Wives.

Heɼ ꞅƿuꞇelaþ on þẏꞅan ᵹeƿɼiꞇe þa ꝼoɼeƿaɼꝺe, &c. In Appendic. ad Tractat. de Gavelkind Scriptura 17. p. 196.

* Ðiꞅꞅa þinᵹa iꞅ ᵹecnæƿe ælc ꝺohꞇiᵹ man on Kænꞇ; &c.

123. To return, The next Legiſlatour after Edmund, was King Edgar his Son, who began his Reign in the year of our Lord DCCCCLIX. and ended it in the year DCCCCLXXV. He amongſt many Laws and Canons of Eccleſiaſtical Concernment, publiſhed alſo ſome which reſpected the Civil State of his Kingdom; or, as he terms it, to the People, to be obſerved by them, whereof this is Sect. 12 the firſt, whereby He enjoyns, that "Every Man, Poor or Rich, enjoy the "benefit of the Law, and have Juſtice done him. And for Puniſhments, he "would have them ſo moderated, that thereby, being accommodated to Divine "Clemency, they may be the more tolerable unto Men. The ſecond forbids "Appeals to the King in Suits, except Juſtice cannot otherwiſe be obtained. If "a Man be oppreſſed, he may betake himſelf to the King for relief. And in "caſe a pecuniary Mulct be inflicted for a fault, it muſt not exceed the value of the Man's Head. The third impoſes a Mulct upon a Judge that paſſes an unjuſt Sentence againſt any Man, of an hundred and twenty ſhillings "to the King, except ſuch Judge will take his Oath that he did it not out of "any malice, but onely it happened by errour and unskilfulneſs: in ſuch caſe "let him be removed from his place, except he can obtain favour of the King "to keep it: and let the Biſhop of the Dioceſe convey the Mulct that is "impoſed upon him to the King's Treaſury. The fourth ordains, that Whoſoever malitiouſly defames another Man, whereby he receives any damage either in his Body or Eſtate, in caſe the defamed Perſon can wipe off thoſe Reports, and prove them falſe, the Defamer's Tongue ſhall either be cut out, or "he ſhall redeem it with the value of his Head. The fifth is that which we "have formerly cited, which Commands every one to be preſent at the Gemote or Aſſembly of the Hundred; ordains that the Burhgemote or Aſſembly of the Towns or Cities be held thrice a year; and the Shiregemote or Meeting of the County twice; whereat are to be preſent the Biſhop and the "Ealdorman, the one to teach the People God's Law, and the other Man's. "The ſixth requires, that Every Man find ſureties for his juſt behaviour. In caſe "any one commit a crime and fly for it, let the Sureties undergoe what ſhould "have been laid upon him. If ſo be he ſtole any thing and be taken within a "twelvemonth, let him be brought to Juſtice, and then let them receive back "what they had forfeited on his behalf. The ſeventh orders, When any one "being of evil report and again accuſed of ſome crime, abſents himſelf from the "Gemotes or Publick Meeting, ſome of the Court to go where he dwells, "and take Sureties for his appearance, if they may be had; if they cannot get "them, let them take him alive or dead, and ſeize on all his Eſtate, whereof "the complaining Party having had ſuch ſhare as may ſatisfie him, let the one "half of the remainder go to the Lord of the Soil, and the other half to the "Hundred. And if any of that Court, being either a Kin to him, or a Stranger to his Bloud, refuſe to go to put this in execution, let him forfeit an "hundred and twenty ſhillings to the King. Farther, let not ſuch as are taken "in the manner of ſtealing or betraying their Maſters obtain pardon of their "Lives. The eighth and laſt ordains, that One and the ſame Money be current throughout the King's Dominions, which no Man muſt refuſe. That "the Meaſure of Wincheſter be the Standard. And that a Way, or Weigh of "Wool be ſold for half a Pound value of Money, and no more.

C. 1. Sax. Ƿeoꞃul-cunꝺ ᵹe-ꞃæꝺnẏꞅꞅe. c. 7. apud Jornal.

C. 2. Sax. Be ðonne ðe mon cẏnᵹ ᵹe ꞅece. ⁊ Be ðæm ꞅeꞃe. c. 7. adhuc apud Jorn.

C. 3. Sax. Be unꞃihꞇum ꝺome. c. 8. apud. Jornal.

C. 4. Sax. Be ðon ðe mon oþeꞃne ꝼoꞃꞅecᵹaþ. c. 9. apud Jornal.

C. 5. Sax. Be ᵹemoꞇum. c. 10. apud Jornal.

C. 6. Sax. Be boꞃᵹum. c. 11. apud Jornal.

C. 7. Sax. Be ꞇẏhꞇbẏꞃiᵹum. c. 12 apud Jornal.

C. 8. Sax. Be mẏneꞇum ⁊ ᵹemeꞇum. c. 13. apud. Jornal.

124. The next Legiſlatour after Edgar was King Ethelred, his Younger Son, who began his Reign in the year of our Lord DCCCCLXXIX. and ended it in the year MXVI. Brompton the Abbat of Jorval preſents us with four ſeveral Bodies of Laws of this King, made at ſeveral times, and in divers places, whereof there is onely two extant among the Saxon Laws, publiſhed by Lambard. The Laws comprized in the firſt Body are ſix, and ſaid to have been made at Woodſtock in Mercia, according to the Laws of the Engliſh, in a Council of Wiſemen, held there by King Ethelred for the Promotion of Peace. The firſt of theſe, as the ſixth of King Edgar, requires, that "Every Free-man have his "truſty Sureties, who ſhall be bound for him, that he ſhall be ready to doe every "Man right in caſe he be queſtioned. If one be often accuſed and made infamous "let him undergoe the ſcrutiny of threefold Ordeal. But in caſe ſuch an one's "Lord contend, and affirm that he hath neither broken his Oath, nor been "caſt by the Jugement of Ordeal after the Councill held at Bromdune, let "his Lord call to him out of that Hundred one or two Thanes, who together "with him ſhall confirm by Oath that this Servant neither ever forſwore "himſelf, nor paid never any thing upon the account of Theft, except he have "ſome Officer, who (according to his Right) may doe it without Swearing. "In caſe they made Oath let the Accuſed Party chuſe whether he will undergoe the tryal of ſingle Ordeal, or make an Oath in three ſeveral Hundreds, "which ſhall anſwer to one pound and thirty pence in equal proportion. But "in caſe they refuſe to ſwear, let the Accuſed undergoe the tryal of threefold Æꞇ ƿuꝺe ꞅꞇoce on Mẏꞃcena lanꝺ æꝼꞇeꞃ Ænᵹla laᵹe.

C. 1. Sax. Be boꞃᵹum. c. 1. apud Jornal.

“ Ordeal: and if ſo be that he appears a Condemned Man, let him reſtore “ twofold to the Complainant, and pay the value of his Head to the Lord, “ and find Sureties for his good behaviour for the time to come. If he offend “ the ſecond time, let it coſt him his Life. In caſe he refuſe to be Tryed by “ the Ordeal, and fly for it, his Sureties ſhall pay the juſt value of the thing “ to the Injured Party, and to his Lord the value of his Head, if he have ſo “ carried himſelf as to be worthy of it. But if it be objected againſt his Lord, “ that after the Fact, committed by his advice and aſſiſtence, his Servant fled “ away, he ſhall take to him five Thanes, and thereof purge himſelf; which “ if he doe, he hath ſhewn himſelf to be worthy of the Were, if he doe not “ the King ſhall have the Were or value of the Head, and the Thief ſhall be “ made incapable of any benefit of the Law. The Lord ſhall anſwer for his “ whole Family, and be Surety for the appearance of every perſon in it. And “ if any of his Servants being accuſed, run away, his Maſter ſhall pay his “ Man's Were to the King. And if the Maſter be Accuſed as the Advizer to “ the eſcape, he ſhall purge himſelf by the aſſiſtence of five Thanes. If he doe “ it not, he ſhall pay to the King his Were; and his Man ſhall be an Outlaw.

125. The ſecond “ Appropriates the mulct which is laid upon any Man “ that poſſeſſeth Bockland, for any fault by him committed, to the King; and “ forbids any compenſation to be made for any Accuſation, but in preſence of “ the King's Reeve or Officer. The third ordains, that A Bond-man being “ Caſt by the Ordeal, be marked with an hot Iron for the firſt offence; and “ being Caſt the ſecond time in the ſame manner, by all means to be put to “ Death; which Law bears ſome reſemblance to our preſent Law or Cuſtome, where Clergy is allowed for the firſt crime committed. The fourth “ Forbids all Buying and Chaffering without Suretyſhip and Witneſs. If it happen otherwiſe, the Lord of the Soil is to have the thing in his cuſtody till “ ſuch time as it appear to whom of Right it belongs. By the fifth, The “ King's Reeve or Officer is obliged to require Sureties for the good behaviour “ of ſuch as are of ill fame amongſt all Men, which if ſuch an one do not “ give he is to be put to Death, and Buried in a profane place with Malefactours. And if any make reſiſtence in his behalf, he is to undergoe the ſame puniſhment. The ſixth, after Brompton, but which hath neither Title nor Number in the Saxon, concludes it thus. “ And whoſoever neglects or doth “ not promote what we have ordained, according to the Sentence and Judgment “ of us all, ſhall forfeit an hundred and twenty ſhillings to the King.

C. 2. Sax. c. 2. apud Jornal.

C. 3. Sax. Be ðeoƿmen ðe ꝼull ƿẏꞃþe. c. 3. apud Jornal.

C. 4. Sax. Be ðon ðe mon ne ceapıᵹebuꞇon ᵹeƿıꞇneꞅꞅe. c. 4. apud Jornal.

C. 5. Sax. Be ðæm men ðe eallumꝼolc unᵹeꞇꞃıƿeꞅẏ. c. 4. apud Jornal. 6.

Ale and Ale-houſes among the Engliſh Saxons.

126. The next Body of Laws made by King Ethelred, as Brompton ranks them, are ſaid to have been made at Venetyng, or Wanating, now Wantage in Berkſhire, the Birth place of the glorious King Alfred. They are thirty in number, and were made by King Ethelred and his Wiſemen for the encreaſe of Peace and Felicity. The firſt of them is concerning the Keeping of the King's Peace as it was in the days of his Predeceſſours, and for the puniſhment of the Breach of it, as that in a Gemote of five Boroughs, with the forfeiture of five pounds, in one Borough by ſeven hundred (ſhillings are meant) in a Wapentack by one hundred; and in an Ale-houſe if a man be killed, with ſix half Marks; if he be not killed, with twelve Ores. Hence (but eſpecially from the Laws of Ina) we may obſerve how ancient the Liquour of Ale, and Houſes deſigned to the ſale and drinking of it have been in England; how ancient alſo Quarreling and breaking of the Peace in ſuch places. But much more ancient have all theſe been than the continuance of the Engliſh Saxons in this Countrey; they were too much in faſhion with theſe Northern Nations in thoſe Days of Tacitus, as appears from what he writes of the Germans; ſo that what Mr. Cambden writes in his Annals, of Drunkenneſs being firſt brought into this Countrey by the Souldiers that ſerved in the Low Countries under the Earl of Leiceſter, and that then Laws were firſt made againſt this Vice, is to be underſtood with an exception of this Antiquity; for when the Engliſh Saxons came firſt into the Iſland, they brought Drunkenneſs along with them out of the Cherſoneſus of Germany. For of the ancient Germans Tacitus reports, that “ To paſs a day “ and night in Drinking was no diſgrace at all. Being Drunk they would quarrel, and often wound and kill one another. Yet moſt commonly (ſaith he) “ they conſult in their Feaſts and Banquets concerning Reconciling of Enemies, “ making Affinities, chuſing Magiſtrates, even of Peace and War: as if at no “ other time the mind was fitter either to entertain plain thoughts or heat upon Sect. 12. “ great Conceptions. Quintilian alſo aſſures us, that in ancient times, ſuch as had Fought in the Field againſt one another, would be Friendly at an Entertainment at the Table. In Germany this Cuſtome, we are told, ſtill continues; and here in England at our Ales and Wakes, Controverſies and Quarrels were wont to be heard and compounded. As to Drinking and Drinking Houſes, the preſent Age can ſhew and ſay as much or more than any other, both as to quarrels, and as to the doing of buſineſs, for no buſineſs now is to be done, but in a Drinking Houſe. But in our Greater Towns and Cities, the Scene of theſe too often tragical Meetings is removed from Germany and England, to France and Spain; or if it be ſtill in Germany, it's removed cloſe to the Rhine. The Grape hath got the advantage of the Barley: and Bacchus (if ever) may now ſeem a Deity, nay above all the reſt, having (by Vulcan's means) in the Capital City lately turned his Houſes into ſumptuous Palaces, the moſt ſumptuous there to be ſeen; and in the adjoyning Parts juſtled ſeveral Gentlemen out of their Habitations.

“ great

127. The ſecond Law requires credit to be given concerning either quick or dead, C. 2.
according to legal Teſtimony which it will have all Perſons, free to make aſwell as to C. 3. ſwear. The third conſiſts of ſuch Terms as certainly cannot be explained. The fourth commands that The publick Meetings be obſerved in every Hundred or Wapentake, C. 4. and that twelve Thanes (ſaith Bromton) or twelve men of free Condition (as Lambards reades it) being elderly men, together with their Præpoſitus or Overſeer, ſwear over Goſpels or Sacred things, that they will neither condemn an innocent Perſon, nor acquit a guilty. From this Law as well as other Circumſtances Juries in uſe. it appears, that the way of trial by twelve men, that we now call a Jury was in uſe with the Engliſh Saxons before the Conqueſt, and not introduced by William the Conquerour, as Polydore Virgil an Italian, and not much skilled in the Antiquities of this Iſland hath delivered in writing. To confirm what we have ſaid, the third Chapter of the League, betwixt King Alfred and Guthrun the Dane, very much maketh, which orders that If the King's Thane or Miniſter be accuſed of Homicide he ſhall purge himſelf if he dare by twelve other Thanes or Miniſters. And in caſe he be in degree inferiour to the King's Thane he ſhall take Eleven of his Equals, and one of the King's Thanes or Miniſters, and ſo purge himſelf from all ſuſpicion. The like is here ordered to be obſerved in all ſuits, exceeding four Mancuſes or Marks. And in caſe one be afraid ſo to clear himſelf, he ſhall pay the treble value of the thing in queſtion. Beſides theſe throughout the Saxon Laws as the Reader may obſerve, there is frequent mention of clearing, and purging by ſo many Men called together, ſometimes of * twelve, ſometimes of † fewer, and the * Vide Æthelſtani. L. 12.
more common and ordinary had this courſe been even in thoſe times, but for the Ordeal ſo much in repute, which alſo got more ſtrength and reputation toward † Ejuſdem. L. 9.
the Days of Ethelred, and the Concluſion of the Engliſh Saxon Monarchy. Amongſt the ancient Charters of Kings publiſhed by Ingulphus, are alſo Footſteps of this Cuſtome though but in its youth as it were, or growing up do appear.
As in that of Withlaf, where puniſhment is to be inflicted upon a Fugitive from P. 155.
the Monaſtery of Croyland, his Flight is to be found by ſix men that muſt be ſworn, ſo in the Charter of Confirmation granted by Edrede, ſuch as injured the Monks, or infringed the Liberties thereby confirmed to the Monaſtery, are to make ſatisfaction for all Damages ſuſtained, which are to be taxed by the Oaths P. 876.
of four or five ſufficient creditable Men, by whom the Truth of the matter may be the better made out, before his Judges or thoſe of his Heirs and Succeſſours. Therefore neither did Edward the Confeſſour firſt bring up this Cuſtome of Juries, or deciding Controverſies civil or criminal by twelve or other Number of Perſons, though he might introduce the Cuſtome into Normandy, where he long ſojourn'd as one of that Countrey hath written. But the Cuſtome of trying Crimi- Vide Spelman- nals even by twelve Men, was frequent amongſt the Franks, Burgundians, Boii, ni Gloſſar.
and where the Cuſtome of Fees took place, as appears ſufficiently from the ancient Laws of theſe Nations.

128. The Laws of King Ethelred made at Wantage, have many of them relation to the Trial by Ordeal, and contain many obſcure terms, Bromton, or whoever he was that made them Latin, being a very unprofitable Tranſlatour. Others of them are reſervable to other former Laws, and therefore we ſhall onely pick out from amongſt them, ſuch as are moſt worthy to be taken notice of.
The Eleventh makes The adulterating of Coin a Capital Crime. The twelfth For- 11.
bids any Cattel to be bought but with two Witneſſes, requiring that the Skin and 12.
Head be kept three Nights, as alſo that of a ſheep; and in caſe any one ſell the Skin before three Nights be over, he is to forfeit twenty Ores. The twentieth Declares how far the King's Peace ſhall extend from his Gate every way, that is three Miles and three Quarters, and three Acres in breadth, nine Feet and nine Barley 20.

Corns. The two and twentieth directs that Aldredeſgate and Cirgelegate (ſo they 22. are called) have their Keepers or Porters. The twenty third declares, that If 23.
a ſmall Veſſel came to Bilynggeſgate, an half Penny was wont to be given for toll;
if a greater bearing ſails, a Penny. If a Keel or Hulk, being a long and large capacious ſort of Veſſel, four Pence are to be given. Out of a ſhip loden with wood one Piece for Toll. Thrice a Week toll of bread is to be paid, viz. on the Lord's Day, Tueſday and Thurſday. If a Boat arrive with Fiſh, it is to pay an half penny, if it be a bigger Boat a penny. Thoſe of Rouen in Normandy, that came with Wine or Grampois, thoſe of Flanders and Ponthieu, and others from Normandy and France, were wont to open their wares and free them from Toll. Such as came from Liege and other Places, travelling by Land opened their wares and paid Toll. The Emperour's men coming with their ſhips were accounted worthy of good Laws, as we alſo to buy in their ſhips. And it was not lawfull for them to foreſtall the Market from the Burghers of London. They were to pay Toll, and at Chriſtmas two gray Cloths, and one brown coloured with ten Pounds of Pepper, and five pair of Gloves with two Veſſels of Vinegar, and as many at Eaſter. From Panniers that come with Hens, one Hen for Toll. Thoſe that trade in Butter and Cheeſe fourteen days before Chriſtmas, muſt pay a penny for Toll, and another penny ſeven days after that Feſtival.
The twenty ſixth Impoſes the ſame Puniſhment upon ſuch as wittingly receive, 26.
as they that make bad money. The twenty eighth Puts it into the King's Power 28.
whether to fine, or put to death ſuch Merchants as import counterfeit bad money, and impoſeth upon Portreeves that ſhall be acceſſory, the ſame Puniſhment as lies upon thoſe that Coin falſe money, except the King think fit to pardon them. The laſt, That there may be fewer Minters than formerly, ordains that there be three in every great Port Town, and in every other Port one with their underworkmen. And the Governours of theſe Ports are required, as they will avoid the charge of Contumacy againſt the King, to ſee to the weight, and that the pieces be ſo ſtampt, that fifteen Ores may make a Pound.

Unum monetarium in Stanford in perpetuam libertatem concedimus inquit Rex Edgarus ſcil. Monaſterio Croyland. Ingulph. p. 884.

The League 'twixt Ethelred and the Daniſh Army.

129. After theſe Laws in Bromton follows the League, which was made betwixt King Ethelred and the Army of Anlaf, Juſtin, and Guthmund the Son of Stegete. The firſt Article hereof, Eſtabliſheth a Peace betwixt the King and his People, and this Army which the King ſupplied with money, according to the Form of the Agreement, made by Sigeric the Archbiſhop, and Æthelward and Alfric Alderman, when they obtained firſt of the King leave to buy the peace of thoſe Countries, which they governed. If therefore hereafter any violence be offered to England by Sea, this Army, ſaith the King, is to aſſiſt us, and we will prepare all neceſſaries for its ſubſiſtence, as long as it ſhall continue faithfull. And if ſo be that any Foreign Nation make Friendſhip with them that doe the ſaid violence, both we and the Army ſhall account of them as Enemies. The Second Article, Gives freedom to come into Port though belonging to the Enemy, whether driven thither by Tempeſt or otherwiſe. The third, To all their Friends and Allies confirms Peace and Security both at Sea and Land, though they be met in an Enemies Countrey. In caſe ſuch a Friend convey his Goods into an Enemies Houſe, he ſhall loſe the Goods, but go free himſelf. But if he either flye or make reſiſtence, or do not make known himſelf and be ſlain, no ſatisfaction is to be made for him. The fourth requires that If a man be robbed in a ſhip the Maſter thereof is to make ſatisfaction, or by four others taken to him make faith that he came lawfully to the Goods that are challenged. The next Article impoſes a Mulct of twenty five pounds upon a free Engliſhman, that kills a Dane of free Condition, except the Murtherer yield up himſelf: the ſame forfeiture a Dane incurs if he ſlay an Engliſhman. If an Engliſhman kill a Dane of ſervile condition he ſhall pay one pound, and the like a Dane if he kill an Engliſh man. If ſo be that eight Perſons be ſlain, the League ſhall be accounted violated, but if under this Number, Compenſation ſhall be made according to the value of the particular Perſons.

C. 1. Sax. C. 1. apud Jornal.

C. 2. Sax. Be ceapꞅcypum; C. 2. apud Jornal.

C. 3. Sax. Be ðæꞅ cyninᵹeꞅ ꝼꞃiðmannum ⁊ C. 3. apud Jornal.

C. 4. Saxon. Be ðon ðe mon ꞅcipe beꞃeaꝼoð ꞅy ⁊ C. 4. apud Jornal.

C. 5. Saxonic. Be monꞅleᵹe ⁊ C. c. 5. 6. apud Jornal.

130. If this happen in a Town the Townſmen are to take the Murtherers alive or dead, at leaſt their next Kinſman is to ſurrender them Man for Man, which if they refuſe to doe,

C. 6. Sax. Be ꝼꞃiþbꞃec binnan byꞃiᵹ ⁊. C. 8. apud Jornal.

the Ealdorman muſt doe it, if he doe it not the King; if the King refuſe, that Countrey muſt be accounted out of the League. The Seventh Article, indemnifies both ſides, for all Murthers and Plunderings before this League. The one ſide is not to receive the Servant, Robbers or Enemies of the other. That which follows Condemns a Countreyman, that ſhall plunder or kill, if it be affirmed by a Seaman and a Land man. If he kill their Cattel, he ſhall be taken both by the King's Party, and the Army for an Outlaw without admiſſion of any Excuſe. And afterward it declares that the Engliſh purchaſed peace of the Army with two and twenty thouſand pounds of Gold and Silver. The ninth directs that If a Man find his Goods in another Man's Hands, he with whom they are found tell where he had them, and give ſecurity to produce his Voucher. In this caſe if he be to ſend for a Man out of another Shire, he ſhall have convenient time to doe it. If upon offer he take the thing upon him, the other ſhall be acquitted with whom the Goods were found. This Voucher muſt then produce his, and if he live in another Shire, have a Weeks time given him to produce him; if he live beyond two Counties, a Fortnight, if beyond three, three Weeks, or a Week to be allowed for every County. But all of them muſt come to the place where the Goods were found. The tenth and laſt concerning vouching, tells us that in times paſt it was the Cuſtome with whom a thing was found, that he ſhould thrice produce Vouchers, and then they ſhould go to the place where the Voucher lived. Now to Wiſemen it ſeems more reaſonable, that in the place where the thing is found, the Vouchery proceed till it come to a Period, leſt that thoſe who are not ſo able to bear it in ſeeking for their own be tired out with the length of the way, and time, whereas it's moſt juſt, that the trouble ſhould be impoſed upon the unjuſt Poſſeſſour. But he that finds his Goods is to beware, that he with whom he hath found them find ſufficient ſecurity, to produce thoſe that will ſave him harmleſs, and leſt he make any unjuſt challenge, leſt indeavouring to trouble others he himſelf be imbroyled in intricate Affairs. If there be any have challenged one that's now dead, and hath no Heirs to purge him, let him if he can, prove by Witneſs that he did ſo challenge him, and thereupon he being diſcharged of the Guilt, let the blame lye upon the dead Party, except he have Friends that will legally purge him as if he had been alive. In ſuch caſe he is to be taken as clear, and he is be accounted guilty of the Theft with whom the Goods were found, foraſmuch as Denial is of more weight than affirmation. Laſtly, if any one in this matter of vouching, refuſe to proceed any farther, but contends that the Goods were his own, he may be at his choice if he can aſcertain his propriety by credible witneſs. For, if it do not otherwiſe appear, Propriety is preſumed to be rather in the Poſſeſſour than in the Pretender.

C. 7. Saxon. C. 8. apud Jorn.

C. 8. Saxonic. Be lanꝺeꞅ manneꞅ ꞇẏhꞇe ⁊ C. 9. apud Jornal.

C. 9. Sax. Be ðon ðe mon ᵹeꝼð ðe him loꞅoꝺ ƿæꞅ ⁊ C. 10. apud Jornal.

C. 10. Saxon. Be ꞇe amum ⁊ C. 11. apud Jornal.

131. The next Body of Laws which follows in Bromton, and was made at a place called Habe, are all of Eccleſiaſtical concernment purely except it be the fifth, which prohibits any man to be ſold out of his Countrey. But there is publiſhed by Concil. p. 513.
Sir Henry Spelman the Acts of another Council held by this ſame King Ethelred at a Place called Ænham, amongſt which are ſome that relate to the Civil State.
The ſixth prohibits alſo the ſale of a Man out of his own Countrey, eſpecially into 6.
the ſervice of a Pagan. The ſeventh will have no man put to death for a ſmall fault, 7.
but inculcates mercy. The nineteenth forbids a Widow to marry within a twelve month 19.
at leaſt. The two and twentieth takes care for preſerving the Peace, and keeping the 22.
Coin uncorrupt, that one and the ſame go throughout the Land. The like for juſt weights and meaſures, the reparation of Cities, Towns, Caſtles and Bridges, and warlike expeditions, both by Sea and Land. The twenty third takes care that preſently after 23.
Eaſter, the Annual expedition by Sea be haſtened, and ordains that if any Man doe any hurt to a ſhip deſigned for the ſervice of the State, he both make ſatisfaction for the Damage, and be puniſhed as a Breaker of the King's Peace. And if he utterly ſpoil the Veſſel ſo as ſhe be made unſerviceable, he ſhall make full amends for the Damage, and farther, be taken as guilty of High Treaſon. The twenty fourth De- 24.
prives that Man of all his Fortunes, who deſerts the Expedition whereat the King himſelf is preſent. The next Deprives him that hath killed a Man, or forſworn 25.
himſelf, of all his fortunes; alſo if he offer to come into the King's preſence before he hath made ſatisfaction, except the King will diſpence with him. The twenty ſixth Deprives him both of Life and Fortunes that Conſpires againſt the 26.
Life of the King. If he deny it, he muſt purge himſelf by the moſt ſolemn Oath,

27. or by treble Ordeal according to the Law of the Engliſh, or after the Daniſh Law, as it appoints. That which follows ordains, that if any openly ſet himſelf to oppoſe the Laws of Chriſt or the King, he be puniſhed either by paying the value of his Head, or otherwiſe according to the quality of the offence; and if he procure his own death by making reſiſtence, he muſt lye unrevenged. Theſe are the Laws of King Ethelred, which reſpect the civil State, made as we have diſtinguiſhed them at ſeveral times and places, but what theſe times were we are uncertain, though we be ſure the Laws were made during his Reign.

132. There are others which we cannot certainly affirm to have been made in his time, though the General conjecture be that they were, and theſe are comprized in an Agreement or Act, which the Wiſemen of England and the Councellours of Wales, made concerning the Inhabitants of the Mountains of that Countrey. The firſt Article of this Senatusconſultum, as they call it, preſcribes the purſuit after Cattel, by the Footſteps from one place to another. The ſecond wills that Within nine or ten days, the one Countreyman do write to the other whether it be in purging themſelves, or in any other matter which is in Controverſie. But in all Accuſations betwixt Engliſh and Welſh men, they ſhall clear themſelves onely by Ordeal, except the Accuſer permit it. And each of them if they cannot otherwiſe have their right, may lawfully take away pledges one from another. The third gives order that If any one be injured and have taken a pledge from him that did the fact, he that gave the offence ſhall redeem it, or ſo much of his Goods as it amounts to be ſeized. That he who refuſes to doe Juſtice, may be compelled to doe it. Here twelve men, ſix Engliſh, and as many Welſh, ſhall adminiſter Juſtice to thoſe of both Nations: who in caſe they do not doe right ſhall forfeit all they have, except they excuſe themſelves by their Ignorance of the Law. Here behold another pattern of a Jury, and of that which we call Medietas Linguæ, viz. when a ſtranger is to be tried, ſix Engliſh, and as many of the Parties own Countrey, at leaſt, ſtrangers are impanelled to judge as to matter of fact, and according to their evidence give in their Verdict. The fourth Article wills, That when an Engliſh or Welſh man is accuſed of Theft and caſt in the Trial, he ſhall onely pay the forfeit due for the Theft, and no other mulct or any thing beſides. The fifth, Exacts but half of the Value of the Head, in caſe a Welſh man kill an Engliſh man, or an Engliſh man a Welſh man, of what Family ſoever the ſlain Party was.

C. 1. Be trode geſtolenes ẏrfes ⁊

C. 2. Be rihtes feorce beƿteon ƿealum ⁊ Englum ⁊

C. 3. Be badum ⁊

Another Pattern of a Jury, Per medietatem linguæ.

C. 4. Be ðone ðe ladteore ⁊

C. 5. Be manslihte.

133. The ſixth Article, Forbids the Welſh to come into England, or the Engliſh to enter Wales, except received at the other Bank by the Borderers, who ſhall take care for their ſafe Conduct and Return. And in caſe any Borderer be accuſed of falſe dealing herein, and cannot by witneſs diſprove it, let him be fin'd. In the ſame manner, if any one procure that any ſtranger doe any damage to a Man of the Place, and be ſuſpected to have been privy to the Fact, with reſpect had to the Damage he ſhall purge himſelf by the Oaths of Select men. Firſt the Accuſer ſhall make his Accuſation by Oath; and then if the accuſed Party be caſt in his Trial, he ſhall pay double Damages to the Plaintiff, and a Mulct to the Lord. The ſeventh Article ſets the value of an Horſe, that miſcarries at thirty Shillings, and if it be pretended that there was no fault in the Perſon accuſed, the Purgation ſhall be according to that rate, and ſo for the reſt the value of a Mare, and a yearling Colt at twenty Shillings: A wild Aſſes Colt at twelve Shillings: An Ox at thirty Pence, a Cow at twenty four Pence, a Swine at eight Pence, a Sheep one Shilling, a Goat at two Pence. Any other thing unſeen muſt be valued by Oath, and recompence made accordingly. The Eighth directs that If one find his Goods with another man, and he challenges to avowry one that lives beyond the water, then that the Controverſie may come to an end, ſhall he give ſufficient Caution. And he that finds the Goods ſhall by the Oaths of ſix men make it good, that he juſtly lays challenge to the thing that was ſtoln. But he that goes to avowry muſt ſwear alone, that he doth rightly doe it. And in caſe any beyond the River contend, that the thing queſtioned is of his own proper goods, he muſt make it evident by the Judgment of Ordeal. The ninth declares that Wentſæte (by which ſome underſtand Southwales, but others more probably Monmouthſhire being anciently called Guent, Went, Wentſet and Wentſland, ſo named from its chief City which of old, had the Name of Venta Silurum) Sometimes was ſubject to the Dunſætes or Mountainers, but ſeems rather to belong to the Weſt Saxons. And thither they muſt ſend Tribute and Hoſtages of Peace. As alſo that it's meet, that the Mountainers ſend Hoſtages if the King think it fitting.

C. 6. Be ðon ðe Englisce on ƿýliscland fare.

C. 7. Be ælces nýtenes ƿeorþe. gis. hilosiaþ.

C. 8. Be orf ofer stream befangenum.

C. 9. Be ƿentsetum ⁊ dunsetum.

134. Theſe were the Laws made by the Engliſh Saxon Kings, before the Danes eſtabliſhed their Monarchy throughout the Land, which Laws King Cnute after his return from Rome, commanded ſtrictly to be obſerved, eſpecially thoſe made by the late King Ethelred. And being now at leiſure from War, and applying himſelf to the good uſage of what he had ill got, he made Laws of his own, reſpecting both the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil State, reinforcing ſome old Laws, and altering and adding others, as he found occaſion, in all which, as he tells us in his Preface, he uſed the Council of his Wiſemen, and commands thoſe his Laws to be obſerved throughout England. "The firſt of Civil Concernment commands Juſtice to be faithfully and indifferently adminiſtred both to Poor and Rich, and aboliſheth all unjuſt Laws. The ſecond commands Mercy to be uſed, and that no man be put to death for a ſmall Offence. The third prohibits a Chriſtian to be ſold out of the Kingdom, eſpecially to Unbelievers. The fourth Baniſhes or Condemns to Death, Witches, Sorcereſſes and Whores; and threatens Thieves and ſuch as injure and doe violence to the People. The fifth forbids the Superſtitions of Pagans, with Inchantments and Deluſions. The ſixth expells Murtherers, perjured Perſons, and Adulterers out of the Land except they ſpeedily repent. The ſeventh exhorts all men to beware of theſe Crimes and ſuppreſs all Flatterers, Lyers, Robbers, Thieves. The eighth commends to all People the keeping of the Peace, orders one and the ſame good Money to be current, and no man to refuſe it. If any one imbaſe the Money, his Hands are to be cut off without any redemption. And if a Reeve or Governour be accuſed that it was done by his conſent, he ſhall purge himſelf by a treble purgation, and if he be caſt incur the ſame puniſhment. The ninth enjoyns a due care to be had of juſt Weights and Meaſures. The tenth commands as the Law of Ethelred (for theſe are but as repetitions of his Laws) that "Towns and Bridges be well looked to, and that the Militia both by Sea and Land be inforced according as the neceſſity of the Commonwealth requires. By the eleventh he promiſes to uſe and entertain ſuch Councils as may tend to the promotion of Juſtice, the profit of the State, and the advancement of Chriſtian Piety.

C. 1. Sax.
C. 2. Sax. c. 25. Apud Jornal.
C. 3. Sax. c. 20. Apud Jornal.
C. 4. Sax. c. 26. Apud Jornal.
C. 5. Sax. c. 27. Apud Jornal.
C. 6. Sax. c. 28. Apud Jornal.
C. 7. Sax. c. 29. Apud Jornal.
C. 8. Sax. C. c. 29. & 30. Apud Jornal.
C. 9. Sax. c. 31. Apud Jornal.
C. 10. Sax.
C. 11. Sax. c. 31. Apud Jornal.

Of Forfeitures incurred by the Law.

135. That which follows, being the twelfth, is remarkable for comprizing thoſe Forfeitures which the King challenges as due to himſelf in the Countries of the Weſt Saxons, except he pleaſe to confer them upon any other, viz. "The Penalty incurred for breach of the Peace, for breaking into an Houſe, ſtopping up a Paſſage, and forſaking ones Colours. If alſo for ſome Crime a man be Outlawed the reſtitution of him to his former condition belongs to the King. He alſo that poſſeſſeth Bocland, forfeits to the King, whoſoever elſe may be his Lord. And whoſoever relieves or harbours a Fugitive, except he can plead ignorance, ſhall pay to the King five Pounds. The thirteenth Law makes the ſame Challenge of all theſe Mulcts or Forfeitures in Mercia. The fourteenth makes the ſame Challenge in ſuch parts as are governed by the Law of the Danes, of Mulcts incurred for fighting, refuſing to goe out in the Militia, breaking the Peace, and violent entry of an Houſe, except he honour any man elſe, by granting theſe Royalties to him. The like is to be ſaid of ſuch an one as harbours or relieves one that is made incapable of the King's Peace. If any Judge have for hatred or lucre perverted Juſtice, by the Law of the Engliſh he is to pay to the King the value of his Head, and alſo to be removed from his place, or redeem it as the King ſhall pleaſe, except he plead that what he did was out of ignorance, and then he muſt confirm this Aſſertion by Oath. By the Law of the Danes he is to incur the Mulct of the breach of the Law, except he plead Ignorance. In caſe any oppoſe or refuſe to ſubmit to lawfull Judgment, let the Mulct be theirs that are concerned. If it belong to the King the Fine ſhall be an Hundred Shillings, if to the Earl Sixty Shillings, if to the Hundred thirty. By the Engliſh Law, if all be concerned, all are to be pay'd. But by the Law of the Danes, if any one make oppoſition to the juſt adminiſtration of the Law, he is to pay Lahſlite.

C. 12. Sax. c. 33. Apud Jornal.
C. 13. Sax.
C. 14. Sax. C. c. 33, 34, & 35. Apud Jornal.

136. This word Lahſlite is Daniſh, and firſt found in thoſe Engliſh Daniſh Laws. It ſignifies properly the Tranſgreſſion or Breach of the Law, but here ſecondarily, the penalty incurred for that breach. The Reader muſt take notice, that though the Danes mingled here with the Engliſh, yet both Nations preſerved their own common Laws and Cuſtoms. The Engliſh for as much as can be perceived, to every ſeveral ſort of offences aſſigned generally their ſeveral Mulcts, which they called Gildwites. But the Danes puniſhed ſeveral offences by one ſort of Animadverſion called Lahſlite. Therefore in theſe Laws often occurs, Let the Engliſh man be puniſhed with Gildwite, and the Daniſh with Lahſlite. But though this one puniſhment was common with them for ſeveral Offences, yet was it various in quantity according to the condition of the Party offending. As, a man of liberal condition his Lahſlite was five Marks, His that poſſeſſed Bocland three Marks, that of a Ceorle or Countreyman twelve Ores. Here we have what anſwers to the Engliſh Twelfhind, Sexhind and Twihind men. Some have imagined, that when Lahſlite is mentioned in general terms or Wite in reference to the Engliſh, the value of them is twelve Ores, becauſe of that Article in the League, renewed betwixt King Edward and Guthrun, which ordains, that if a Prieſt deny Baptiſm, where it is requiſite, he ſhall pay Wite with the Engliſh, or Lahſlite with the Danes, that is, ſaith the Text, twelve Ores. But this was the loweſt ſort of theſe Mulcts, neither can we imagine that the puniſhment for breach of all Laws was the ſame, or not fitted to the height of the Crime.

Ab Anglo Danorum lah, lex. & ꞅliꞇe raptio; violationes adhuc dicimus ſlit in two.

ᵹilꝺƿiꞇe miꝺ Enᵹlum ⁊ miꝺ ꝺenum lahꞅliꞇe.

Somner. in Gloſſar. ex TextuRoffenſi.

C.3.

137. The fifteenth Law of Cnute confirms that of King Alfred, “ Whereby is “ ordained, that he that by defamation does another man damage in his Body “ or Fortunes, and is convicted of falſhood by the proofs of the Party, have his “ Tongue cut out, except he redeem it with the value of his Head. The ſixteenth “ alſo, as other Laws before mentioned, will have no Complaints made to the “ King, except relief cannot be had in the Hundred, at the Meeting whereof all
“ are to be preſent, or be amerced for their abſence. The ſeventeenth requires,
“ that the Burhgemote be held thrice a year, and the Sciregemote twice or oft“ ner, whereat the Biſhop and Alderman are to be preſent to thoſe purpoſes as has “ been before ſaid. The eighteenth will have no man by taking away Pledges, “ or diſtraining to doe right to himſelf againſt any man, except he have four times “ dimanded it, and expected right to be done him in vain in the Hundred; then
“ he has liberty to get his own where he can. The nineteenth commands, that “ every one of free condition put himſelf into ſome Hundred and Tithing as he “ deſires, that being in a condition to purge himſelf he may alſo be in capacity to “ claim from another the value of his Head. Otherwiſe none that exceeds twelve “ years, in caſe he receive any wrong, ſhall be capable of enjoying the ſame Pri“ vilege with a Free man. Be he Maſter of a Family or a Reteiner, he muſt be “ entred into ſome Hundred or other, and muſt have Fidejuſſours or Sureties for “ his appearance in caſe he be accuſed of any Crime. Some great men, as they “ can doe it, protect their Servants, giving out ſometimes, that they are Free, o“ ther times that they are Slaves, but we not induring any ſuch unjuſt practice, com“ mand, that every one of twelve years of Age give ſecurity by Oath, that he “ will neither ſteal himſelf, nor be acceſſory to the Theft of any other. Thus doth he revive what King Alfred had before cautioned, that no Freeman ſhould be without Society, without Law, or live at randome, without this moſt Efficacious Curb of Suretyſhip, by being thus received. And to what was before, adds this Caution of twelve years, beyond which for the publick Peace and ſecurity none were to live without being admitted and received into ſome Hundred and Tithing.

C.15.*Sax.c.*36. Apud Jornal.

C.16.*Sax.c.*37. Apud Jornal.

C.17.*Sax.c.*38. Apud Jornal.

C.18.*Sax.c.*39. Apud Jornal.

C.19. Saxonic. c. 140, 41. Apud Jornal.

ἀφρήτωρ, ἀθέμιστος, ἀνέστιος. Ut apud Homerum ait Neſtor.

138. The twentieth Law of King Canute “ ſo far indulges a man unblamea“ ble and of good repute, who never brake his Oath in the Hundred, nor was “ caſt by the Ordeal, that his ſingle purgation be accepted. But a man of the “ contrary reputation ſhall either be compelled to take his ſingle Oath in three “ Hundreds, or a threefold one according to the cuſtome of that Court, or be “ put to the Ordeal. But a ſingle Purgation is to be made with a threefold “ preparatory Oath. A man of good eſteem may have ſome faithfull man in his “ ſtead to be his Prejurour, or elſe he muſt doe it himſelf; for a preparatory “ Oath is never to be omitted. The one and twentieth forbids any man to “ have the privilege of vouchery, except by ſufficient Witneſs to prove from whom

C.20.*Sax.c.*42. & 43. Apud Jornal.

C.21.*Sax.c.*43. Apud Jornal.

“ he had the Goods that are found with him. The Witneſſes muſt affirm, as they love God and their Lords, that they have moſt religiouſly born teſtimony, and that both by their Eyes and Ears they are aſſured that he rightly came by the thing in queſtion. The twenty ſecond revives the Laws about buying without Witneſs, forbidding any thing to be bought above the value of four pence without the teſtimony of four Credible Witneſſes. In caſe any one buy any thing contrary to this Law, if any one challenge the thing ſo bought, the Buyer ſhall not have the benefit of Vouchery, but reſtore him the thing, with the juſt price of it, and a Mulct to whom of right it belongs. But if the thing was bought by legal Teſtimony, he ſhall have thrice allowed him the liberty of Vouchery, and the fourth time the thing is to be delivered to the Owner, except ſome other make uſe of his right in challenging it to be his. For neither doth it ſeem fitting to us that any one ſhould challenge a thing when there are Witneſſes to diſprove it, and conſequently he is convicted to be guilty of Fraud or Malice; neither that what was ſtole ſhould be recovered within a leſs time than ſix Months.

C.22. Sax.c.44. Apud Jornal.

139. The twenty third “ directs, that if a man of evil report abſent himſelf from the Publick Meetings thrice, at the fourth time ſome of that Court go thither, and if they can get no Sureties for his appearance, to apprehend him alive or dead, to ſeize on all he hath, and when the juſt pretenders have received the true value of what they lay claim to, then of that which is left the Lord ſhall have one half, and the Hundred the other. If any of the Court, of Kin or Stranger, refuſe to goe, he ſhall for that fine to the King in an hundred and twenty Shillings. Of thoſe that are taken in the manner of ſtealing, or betraying their Lords, their lives ſhall in no wiſe be ſpared. The twenty fourth forbids one Accuſation to be ſuperſeded by another, but as the Hundreders ſhall think fit, orders the firſt to proceed. The next forbids alſo the harbouring of a man above three days, except recommended by him he formerly ſerved: As alſo to remove his Servant from his Houſe till he have purged himſelf of what is laid to his Charge. That which follows denounceth, that if any one meet a Thief and permit him to paſs without diſcovering him, ſhall pay the utmoſt Farthing of the value of the man's head, be it as much as it will, or by a full and perfect Oath make it good that he knew nothing of his Theft. And if he cried out againſt him, and thoſe that heard him would not purſue the Robber, they ſhall be puniſhed as contumacious againſt the King, except they make void the ſuſpicion. The twenty ſeventh, In caſe a man be of evil report in the Hundred, and be accuſed by three ſeveral men, admits of no purgation but by threefold Ordeal. But if his Lord affirm that he hath neither broken his Oath, nor ſince the Council held at Wincheſter been caſt by the Ordeal, out of that Hundred the Lord ſhall take one or two men of Credit, and with them make Oath, that he neither hath broken his Faith formerly given, nor been condemned by the Ordeal, nor paid nothing for ſtealing; except ſome Reeve or Officer there be whoſe authority may have weight ſufficient to clear him without theſe Oaths. If they make their Oaths, the Accuſed ſhall be at choice whether he will be tryed by ſingle Ordeal, or make an Oath in three Hundreds, which in proportion ſhall anſwer to one Pound and thirty Pence. But in caſe they refuſe to ſwear he ſhall goe under the Examination of threefold Ordeal after this manner.

C.23. Sax.c.45. Apud Jornal. & 46.

C.24. Sax.c.47. Apud Jornal.

C.25. Sax.c.48. Apud Jornal.

C.26. Sax.c.49. & 50. Apud Jornal.

C.27. Sax.c.51. Apud Jornal.

The manner of Examination by threefold Ordeal.

140. “ The Accuſer muſt find five Perſons who ſhall be Prejurours, and he himſelf ſhall be the ſixth. As ſoon as the Accuſed is caſt, the firſt time he ſhall pay double damages to the Accuſer, and to his Lord, if he have ſhewn himſelf worthy of it, the full value of his own Head, and give Sureties that he will abſtain from all Crimes for the time to come. But in caſe he be caſt the ſecond time, he ſhall have no liberty of making any Compenſation, but his Hands, or Feet, or both, if the heinouſneſs of the offence require it, ſhall be cut off. But if after this he doth not leave off his former Courſes but ſtill commit more Villanies, then as they ſhall think fit that are concerned, either his Eyes ſhall be pull'd out, his Noſe cut off, his Ears or his Upper lip, or his Skin be drawn over his Ears for an Example, with a reſpect to the ſafety of his Soul. If he flie and eſcape the Judgment of Ordeal, his Sureties ſhall make full ſatisfaction to the Accuſer, and to the King or ſome other that deſerves it, the value of his Head. But if his Lord be accuſed for having been acceſſory to his eſcape after the Fact committed, with five men of credit he muſt purge himſelf, which if he doe, he ſhews himſelf to be worthy of the “ value of his Servant's Head. If he doe not, the King ſhall have the value of “ the Head, and the Thief ſhall by all men be taken as excluded from the benefit “ of the Law.

141. “ The twenty eight will have every Maſter to be Fidejuſſour, or reſponſible C.28.*Sax.c.*52.
“ for the appearance of all his Family. And if any of his Servants be impeached, Apud Jornal.
“ he ſhall anſwer it in that Hundred where the other brings the Action.
“ In caſe any of them accuſed of a Crime run away, his Maſter ſhall pay the value
“ of his Head to the King. If the Maſter be accuſed as acceſſory to his flight,
“ he ſhall purge himſelf by five men of good repute. If he do not acquit “ himſelf he ſhall pay to the King the value of his Head, and his Servant ſhall “ be Outlaw'd. The twenty ninth enacts, that if a Bondman or Slave be by the C.29.*Sax.c.*53.
“ Ordeal condemned, he ſhall firſt be marked with an hot Iron, and if caſt the Apud Jornal.
“ ſecond time, be put to death. The thirtieth ordains, that if a man be of evil report C.30.*Sax.c.*54.
“ ſo as no man ſpeaks well of him, the Reeve (the Sheriff doubtleſs is Apud Jornal.
“ meant) ſhall take ſecurity for his appearance when he is called, which if he “ doe not give, he ſhall be put to death and buried in a prophane place: And if “ any one ſtand up in his defence, he ſhall incur the ſame puniſhment. And if “ any Officer neglect or refuſe to put this in Execution, he ſhall by one univerſal “ Sentence pay an hundred and twenty Shillings to the King. The thirty 31.
“ firſt wills the ſame manner of Purgation of Criminals be uſed in all Boroughs.
“ The next directs, that if a man be deſtitute of all Friends or be a Stranger ſo 32.
“ that he hath none to be bound for him, ſuch an one, if accuſed, ſhall be ſent “ into Cuſtody to be examined by the Ordeal. That which follows ſentenceth 33.
“ ſuch as are convicted to have forſworn themſelves upon the Goſpels or Sacra, “ to looſe their Hands, or to give half the value of their Heads to the Lord and
“ the Biſhop. The thirty fourth accounts it of ſmall moment, that one who has 34.
“ openly born falſe Witneſs have no Credit given to his Teſtimony for the “ time to come; but orders, that he moreover pay to the King or the Lord
“ the Fine wont to be paid in the room of the Neck being tyed, called “ Healsfange.

142. The twelve Laws that follow next in courſe reſpect Eccleſiaſtical Matters, C.47.*Sax.c.*75.
and therefore to ſuch we muſt refer them. “ The forty ſeventh requires, Apud Jornal.
“ that Adultery be puniſhed more or leſs as the Circumſtances be, affirming it “ bad for a Married Man to lie with a Maid, much more with another Man's “ Wife or one in Religion. The forty eight directs, that Inceſt be puniſhed either C.48.*Sax.c.*76.
“ with the value of the Head, with a Mulct, or the loſs of the whole Eſtate, Apud Jornal.
“ there being a difference betwixt abuſing ones own Siſter and another Kinſwoman “ more remote. The next Chaſtizes him that Raviſhes a Widdow or a Virgin C.49.*Sax.c.*77.
“ with the payment of the value of his own Head. The fiftieth denounceth, Apud Jornal. C.50.*Sax.c.*58.
“ that if a Man's Wife be convicted to have lain with another Man, ſhe Apud Jornal.
“ ſhall for ever be noted as Infamous, and her Husband ſhall have all that belongs “ to her; beſides ſhe ſhall looſe her Noſe and her Ears. But if ſhe be “ onely accuſed of Whoredom, and in the Tryal be caſt, the Biſhop in ſuch caſe “ is to be Judge, and commanded in his Judgment to be ſevere. As for Married C.51.*Sax.c.*79, men the next Law enjoyneth, that “ if one lie with his own Maid Servant he & 80. Apud “ forfeit her and make ſatisfaction both to God and Man: If beſides his Wife Jornal.
“ he keep a Concubine, the Prieſt ſhall deny him all Chriſtian Privileges till he “ put her away, and as well by his forbearance for the future as in other things “ according to the Biſhop's direction, he have made ample ſatisfaction. That “ which follows baniſhes Strangers with all their Vices and Fortunes out of the C.52.*Sax.c.*81.
“ Land if they do not bridle their Luſts. By the fifty third, If a Man upon Apud Jornal. C.57.*Sax.c.*82.
“ premeditated malice kill another, he ſhall be delivered up to the kindred of the Apud Jornal.
“ ſlain. If he be onely accuſed of the Murther and be found guilty, the Biſhop “ in that caſe ſhall be his Judge.

143. “ By virtue of the fifty fourth Law, whoſoever C. 54. Sax. c. 83. Apud Jornal.
“ Conſpires againſt the King, or his Lord ſhall forfeit Life
“ and Fortunes, except he purge himſelf by threefold Ordeal.
“ By order of the fifty fifth, He that breaks his C. 55. Sax. c. 84. Apud Jornal.
“ Faith given to the King ſhall forfeit five Pounds; if it “ was to an Archbiſhop or great Nobleman three Pounds,
“ if to a Biſhop or Alderman two. If any fight in the C. 56. Sax. c. 85. Apud Jornal.
“ Court, by the next that follows, it's Capital except the “ King will pardon it. The fifty ſeventh puniſhes him that C. 57. Sax. c. 86. Apud Jornal.
“ ſhall diſarm a man with that which they call Healsfange,

Sect. 12.

“ ſange, if he binds him, with half the value of his Head.
“ The next reſtrains the violence of Souldiers, ordaining,
“ that if in an Expedition any break the Peace he ſhall either “ forfeit his life or the value of it; and if he plunder “ make ſufficient Compenſation. That which follows, “ declares, that he that breaks into another man's Houſe,
“ according to the Law of the Engliſh, is to pay five Pounds to the King; if it “ be done where the Law of the Danes obtaineth, he muſt be puniſhed according “ to their Cuſtome. And if he be juſtly killed in the Attempt, nothing ſhall be “ forfeited upon that account. The ſixth ordains, That if “ one man rob another of any thing, he reſtore the thing “ together with the value of it and pay the value of his “ Head to the King. The ſixty firſt declares breaking “ down and burning of Houſes open Theft, manifeſt Murthers “ and betraying of one's Lord, according to humane “ Laws, to be Crimes, for which there is no bote or ſatisfaction
“ to be made, by way of Mulct or Compenſation.
“ The next fines ſuch as ſhall deny to pay toward the Repairing
“ of Towns, or mending of Bridges, as ſhall refuſe
“ to go upon the Warlike Expedition, if he be an Engliſh men, an hundred and “ twenty Shillings to the King; if he be a Dane, he is to make ſatisfaction according “ to their Cuſtome; or fourteen men are to be named to him, out of which “ number he may make his choice of eleven to purge himſelf.

C. 58. Sax. c. 87. Apud Jornal.

C. 59. Sax. c. 88. Apud Jornal.

C. 60. Sax. c. 89. Apud Jornal.

C. 61. Sax. Huꞅbꞃec. ⁊ bæꞃneꞇ ⁊ open ðýꝼþ. ⁊ æbeꞃemoꞃþ. ⁊ hlaꝼoꞃꝺꞅƿice. æꝼꞇeꞃ ƿoꞃulꝺ laᵹa iꞅ boꞇleaꞅ. c. 90. Apud Jornal.

C. 62. Sax. c. 91. Apud Jornal.

144. The ſixty third in like manner declares, that “all “ ought to contribute to the repairing of the Churches.
“ The ſixty fourth denounces againſt ſuch as ſhall harbour “ Excommunicated or Outlawed Perſons, that they ſhall
“ bring them forth to Juſtice, make ſatisfaction to thoſe that are concern'd and pay
“ the value of their Heads to the King. But in caſe they will keep and defend “ them, loſs of Life and all their Fortunes. The next wills, that Mercy be ſhewn as “ much as may be to ſuch as plainly and unfeignedly amend their ways. And by
“ that which follows, the King declares he will put a difference betwixt ſmall
“ and Great, Rich and Poor, Young and Old, Infirm and Healthfull, foraſmuch “ as ſome men may offend out of a kind of neceſſity, and a diſtinction is to be “ made betwixt a forced and a voluntary act. Therefore will he ſuccour where “ there is moſt need of his Help. The ſixty ſeventh contains an Act of Grace
“ of the King to his Subjects, whereby he relieves ſuch as formerly were oppreſſed.
“ He enjoyns all his Officers, that they make proviſion for his Houſe out of “ his own Lands and Tillage, and that they compell no man to furniſh him with “ any Conveniencies in this kind, upon pein of paying the value of their Heads
“ if they impoſe any Mulcts upon Refuſers. The ſixty eighth ordains, that in “ caſe any man by neglect or by the ſuddenneſs of his death depart this World “ Inteſtate, his Lord ſhall take nothing of his Goods but what is due to him as an “ Heriot. But all is to be diſtributed by his Judgment to the Wife, Children,
“ and next Kindred juſtly according to their ſeveral right. The ſixty ninth in order “ ſettles the Rates of the Heriots, ordering that the Heriot of every one be according “ to his Dignity. As firſt, that of an Earl eight Horſes, whereof four with “ Furniture and four without, four Helmets, as many Corſlets, eight Spears, as “ many Shields, four Swords, and two hundred Mancuſes of Gold. That of a “ King's chief Thane four Horſes, whereof two with Furniture and two without,
“ two Swords, four Spears, and as many Shields, one Helmet, one Corſlet, “ and fifty Mancuſes of Gold. The Heriot of an Inferiour Thane an Horſe with “ Furniture and Arms, or amongſt the Weſt Saxons the ſum that is paid called “ Halſfange, in Mercia and Eaſt England two Pounds; but amongſt the Danes
“ the Heriot of a King's Thane, who has free juriſdiction, is four Pounds. And “ if he be nearer to the King his Heriot is two Horſes, whereof the one with Furniture
“ and the other without, a Sword, two Spears, as many Targets, and fifty “ Mancuſes of Gold. But the Heriot of a Thane of the loweſt condition is two “ Pounds.

C. 63. Sax. c. 92. Apud Jornal.

C. 64. Saxonic. c. c. 93, 94. Apud Jornal.

C. 65. Sax. c. 94. Apud Jornal.

C. 66. Sax. c. 95. Apud Jornal.

C. 67. Sax. c. 96. Apud Jornal.

C. 68. Sax. c. 97. Apud Jornal.

C. 69. Sax. c. 97. Apud Jornal.

145. This word Heriot, or as the true Saxon word is, Heregeate, ſignifies Furniture for War, given by the Vaſſal to his Lord, probably at firſt de-ſigned for the driving away Thieves and Robbers, which abounded when the Daniſh or Northern Nations ſo frequently invaded the Land; for though the word Here do in the Saxon Language ſignifie an Army, yet is it in our Saxon Authours (when without compoſition) generally taken in the worſt ſenſe, for Invaders and Spoilers, a lawſull Army collected by the King for the Defence of the Nation, being called by the Name of Fyrd. Sir Henry Spelman fetches the Original of the thing from Clodonee King of the Franks, who having about the Year of Our Lord DXI. given the Alamans a very great overthrow, and deprived them of all Honour and Liberty, aſſigned them as Vaſſals, ſome to his Treaſury, and ſome to the Church, the former being termed Servi Fiſcalini and Fiſcales, and theſe Servi Eccleſiaſtici. He ordained, that when any Maſter of a Family Died, the Officer of the King, or Biſhop ſhould ſeize upon the beſt Horſe he had, or the Cloths of moſt value. Some are of opinion, that to this Heriot ſucceeded what was afterward called Relief; but that theſe were ſeveral is manifeſt in this, that ſometimes both an Heriot and Relief were paid from the ſame Lands, and an Heriot had place where an Heir did not ſucceed in the Patrimony, which Relief never had. Mr. Lambard thought that the Normans when they Conquered the Land, and ſpoiled the inhabitants of all their Arms and furniture for War, remitted the Heriot, and took Money in its ſtead. Moſt probable it is, that Heriot and Relief were different, and that Vaſſals in the Engliſh Saxon times contributed thoſe Habiliments of War to their Lords, towards the Expulſion of thoſe Northern Thieves and Invaders, as we ſaid. Their Land they held on that condition with that burthen and ſervice, and therefore they held them as Feudataries. Heriots were in uſe in the Infancy of Fees, when Fees were held in a more general and Law ſenſe, as we have already demonſtrated. Relief ſucceeded when they were grown up to more regulation and certainty, clothed with new circumſtances, of Succeſſion, and the like. The giving of Horſes and Arms by Vaſſals to their Lord, was a thing alſo practiſed by the Germans and Italians.

Ab Heꞃe exercitus & ᵹeoꞇe à Saxon ᵹeoꞇan fundere & Metaphoricè reddere vel erogare, unde Scoto Britannis Herezeld, q. d. Heregeld, g in z, (ut illis ſæpe) tranſeunte.

Fyrð.

In voc. Hereotum.

Temp. Conradi primi vide Sigonium de Reg. Italiæ. lib. 8.

146. To make an end of King Cnute his Laws, The ſeventieth “ Confirms “ to a Woman and her Children the Seat and Habitation which her Huſ- “ band enjoyed. But if there were any Suits commenced againſt the Man “ when living, his Heir muſt anſwer them. The ſeventy firſt Requires Wi- “ dows to continue in Widowhood twelve months, and then permits them “ to Marry. If a Woman Marry before her twelve months be out, ſhe is “ to looſe her Dower, with all that her Husband left her, which is to come, “ in ſuch caſe, to the next akin; and he that Marries her ſhall pay the value “ of his Head to the King, or whomſoever he aſſigns it. Nay, although ſhe “ was taken by force ſhe ſhall looſe all ſhe had, except ſhe depart and return “ no more to this Husband. Widows are not ſuddenly to enter into Religion; “ Widows ſhall not be compelled to pay their Heriots till twelve months be “ over, eſpecially if not able to pay before. A Woman, by the ſeventy ſecond “ Law, is not to be compelled to Marry againſt her will, nor ſold, except “ the Man voluntarily will give ſomething. The next confirms what had been “ formerly enacted, Concerning a Man's leaving his Weapon at another Man's “ Door, and another's making ill uſe of it. That which follows in like manner “ confirms what was Law before, Concerning a Woman's not being ac- “ ceſſory to the Theft of her Husband. Firſt, If a Man be convicted to have “ brought ſtoln Goods into his Houſe, it's the ſame thing as if he ſtole them; “ but his Wife ſhall not be accounted guilty of Theft, except ſhe kept it un- “ der Lock and Key. Now the Wife ought to keep the Keys of theſe things, “ viz. of the Store-houſe, of the Cheſt of Cloths, and her Coffer; in any of “ which if ſhe lock up any thing, ſhe is to be accounted guilty of Theft. “ Otherwiſe the Wife cannot hinder her Husband from bringing any thing into “ his Houſe. It was the cuſtome (ſuch is the avarice of Men) for the Child “ which lay in the Cradle, and never yet had eaten Meat, yea though it was “ aſleep, to be accounted as guilty of this Crime as if it had had underſtanding. But I (ſaith the King) abſolutely forbid that, with ſome other things that are odious to God Almighty. Here Mr. Selden demandeth if from any other Fountain than this can be derived what Henry de Bracton and other Engliſh Lawyers deliver, concerning a Man's Wife being acceſſory to his Theft.

C. 70. Sax. c. 98. apud Jornal.

C. 71. Sax. c. 99. apud. Jornal.

C. 72. Sax. c. 101. apud Jornal.

C. 73. Sax. c. 102. apud Jornal.

C. 74. Sax. c. 103. apud Jornal.

In Jan. Anglorum.

147. The ſeventy fifth Law “ Deprives him of Life and Eſtate, who either “ in an Expedition by Land or Sea deſerts his Lord, or his Fellow Souldier: “ and in ſuch caſe the Lord is to have back the Land he gave him; or if it

C. 75. Sax. c. 104. apud Jornal. &105.

“ was Bocland it goes to the King. But in caſe any one dye in a Fight in the “ preſence of his Lord, either at home or abroad, his Heriot ſhall be remitted, “ and his Children ſhall ſucceed both to his Goods and Lands, and rightly di-“ vide them. The ſeventy ſixth Gives him liberty that hath defended his Land, “ and cleared it from all doubts and incumbrances in the Sciregemote or Coun-“ ty Court, to poſſeſs it quietly while he lives, and to leave it to whom he “ pleaſeth when he dies. The ſeventy ſeventh Gives liberty to every Man to “ Hunt in his own Grounds, but forbids all under penalty to meddle with the “ King's Game, eſpecially in thoſe places which he had Fenced by privilege. By thoſe places thus privileged, he means thoſe which afterwards the Normans called (a) Foreſts, being Ground deſart and woody, moſt commonly expoſed to the King's Wild Beaſts or Deer, not fenced about with any Hedge or Wall, but circumſcribed and privileged, as here he words it, Fenced with certain Bounds, Laws, Immunities, Magiſtrates, Judges, Officers and Servants. Concerning theſe Foreſts, he publiſhed Conſtitutions thirty four in (b) Number, which becauſe he mentions them not in this nor in any other of his Laws, ſeem to have been made afterwards. But the thirtieth Article is almoſt the very ſame with this Law, forbidding all to meddle with his Game, but permitting them to Hunt in their own Grounds, (c) yet without Chaſe. Afterwards the Norman Kings made ſtrange improvement of what he began, turning many Towns and Churches into Denns of Wild Beaſts, with what ſucceſs it's neither pleaſing nor ſeaſonable for us here to relate. The ſeventy eighth Law “ requires, that Drinclean and other Offices of Service “ due to Lords, be inviolably obſerved. Mr. Lambard interprets this Drinclean, Honorary Gifts of Drink. It ſeems the ſame with Scotale, which was Ale wherewith Fellow-Vaſſals joyning together were wont to entertain their Lords or their Stewards when they came to their Manors. The ſeventy ninth Law revives the Law before, which will have “ All enjoy perfect peace, and be free from all moleſtation which go to, or “ return from Gemotes or Publick Meetings; as now they that are Members “ of Parliament. The eightieth and laſt, in Confirmation of all theſe Laws “ made by the King to be obſerved by all his Subjects, upon any that ſhall “ break them, for the firſt offence impoſeth the value of his own head whe-“ ther he be Engliſh or Dane; for the ſecond offence it doubles the puniſh-“ ment; and for the third, deprives him of all his Fortunes. The King cloſeth all with a very Religious Exhortation to Piety, and a Prayer.

C. 76. Sax. c. 106. apud Jornal.

C. 77. Sax. c. 106.

C. 78. Sax. c. 109. apud Jornal.

Drinclean à Sax. ꝺꞃinc & lean ſtipendium, tributum, unde noſtratium Loane.

Scotale à Sax. ꞅcoꞇ (potius ꞅceaꞇ) ſymbolum & ale cereviſia.

C. 79. Sax.

C. 80. Sax. c. 110. apud Jornal.

148. There are onely now remaining the Laws of King Edward the Conſeſſour. Theſe we have not publiſhed in the Saxon Tongue, nor as he ſet them forth, but as they were afterwards confirmed by William the Conquerour, and as Tranſcribed by one who had lived in the Days of Henry the Second, or after, who has interlaced them with things very much, ſometimes Foreign to the purpoſe, and with tales of King Arthur, and other matters. At beſt they are a Rhapſody of things, rather telling and explaining things what they anciently were, than expreſſed in Legiſlative manner; but of ſuch of them as make for our purpoſe, (as ſeveral of them do) and give us light in the Diſcovery of the ancient Polity or frame of Government of our Engliſh Saxon Anceſtours, if we have not already made uſe of them, we ſhall give the Reader an Account. To paſs thoſe which are merely of Eccleſiaſtical Concernment. The eleventh Law or Article tells us what was the Original of Danegeld, declaring that The payment of it was appointed for Pirates, which infeſting the Countrey, waſted it to their utmoſt power. Now for repreſſing their Inſolence, Danegeld was appointed to be yearly paid, viz. twelve pence out of every Hide of Land throughout the Kingdom, to hire thoſe that ſhould reſiſt the Irruption of Pirates. Here the Reader is to remember what we ſaid before concerning King Ethelred's raiſing of this Money called Danegeld, that two ſorts of Payments are called by that Name, viz. that which upon occaſion was raiſed to give the Danes wherewith to buy off their Hoſtilities now and then as the caſe required, and that other which was impoſed for procuring Daniſh Ships and Men to reſtrain the

11. De Danegeldo, Danegeldum redditio propter pyratas primitus ſtatuta eſt, &c.

Danegeld laid upon Hides.

(a) A Latin. foris, hinc exteris Foreſtiere pro peregrino, Saltus autem hujuſmodi Saxonibus noſtris & Danis dicebantur Buc Holꞇ, i. e. Saltus Cervinus; aliter ꞇeneꝼalꝺ vel ꝺeoꞃꝼalꝺ, q. d. ferarum ſtabulum.

(b) Vide eas ſi placet apud Spelman. in Gloſſar. voc. Foreſta.

(c) Sine Chacea tamen quid hoc ſibi velit venatores viderint.

the Irruptions and Inſolencies of the Northern Rovers, the former (as we ſaid was upon occaſion, but this was Annual. As for the payment of the latter, the Cuſtome was, according to the Laws of that Age, that the Richer ſort ſhould be taxed according to the number of Hides, as is evident from Doomſday Book, written in the time of King William the firſt. Now as to the Rate, Marianus Scotus, Hoveden, and Florentius Wigornienſis, all tell us that at that time whoſoever poſſeſſed three hundred and ten Caſſatas or Hides of Land, was charged with the building of one Ship, and a Coat of Armour and an Helmet was impoſed upon nine, or as Huntingdon and others upon eight; all being rated proportionably after this manner, who were owners of more or fewer Hides, or of part of an Hide. Huntingdon ſaith an Hide was ſo much Land as could be Tilled with one Plough in one year. But others of the quantity of Hides determine otherwiſe. And indeed it was various according to the different Cuſtoms of ſeveral Countries.

149. Some there are who write, that two Shillings were yearly laid upon every Hide of Land for ſuppreſſion of thoſe Pirates, ſo that they make the payment double to what is ſaid by this Law aſcribed to King Edward. But as they differ herein without any reaſon; ſo do they with as little diſcretion ſet the yearly Tax at the rate of thirty eight thouſand Pounds; as others do at thirty thouſand. For at what Rate ſoever that Tribute was paid to the King according to the alteration of times, it appears for certain from our ſeveral Hiſtories that the Stipends uſually allowed to the Daniſh Fleet were ſo uncertain, that they were ſometimes higher, ſometimes lower, as it could ſcarcely otherwiſe happen, according to the number of Ships and Forces, that were neceſſary for defence of the Realm. This payment being higher or lower as occaſion ſerved, was to be ſure paid till the year MLI, or the tenth of this King Edward the Confeſſour. "But then "as Ingulphus himſelf tells us, in regard that the Earth did not bring forth its "fruits in ſuch plenty as it was wont, but devoured many People by Famine, "thouſands dying through ſcarcity of Corn and want of Bread, the Pious King "being moved with Compaſſion towards the People, releaſed that moſt grievous "Tribute called Danegeld to all England for ever. It is reported (ſaith he) by "ſome, that this moſt Religious King being brought by his Officers into the Treaſury to ſee the Danegeld that was collected, and to take a view of ſo vaſt an "heap of Treaſure, ſtood amazed at the firſt ſight, proteſting that he beheld the "Devil dancing upon the heap of Money, and extremely rejoycing, whereupon he immediately commanded it ſhould be reſtored to its former Owners, "and would not keep any of ſo cruel an Exaction, but remitted it for ever, "viz. In the thirty eighth year after Swane King of Denmark commanded it to be "paid every year to his Navy, in the time of his Father Ethelred. So Ingulphus, with whom agree both Hoveden and Matthew of Weſtminſter, that King Edward remitted it for ever. Yet whatever this good King might reſolve or order, the Dialogue belonging to the Exchequer makes it to have been paid for fourteen years longer, till the time of the Conquerour; nay, during his Reign, and the Reigns of his Succeſſours, when they either had or ſuſpected a War with Foreigners. From Hoveden it appears, as well as from the Interpolatour of St. Edward's Laws, that it was paid to William Rufus and King Stephen, and from the Accompts of the Exchequer, ſometimes to Henry the ſecond, after which it grew out of date, other Courſes being taken to ſcower the Seas and defend the Kingdom, of which we are not here to take notice.

Dialogus Scaccarii M. S. Item Math. Weſtm. & Math. Paris. Vide Seldenum in Mari Clauſo, lib. 2. c. 11.

150. The twelfth Article of St. Edward's Laws declares, That the Peace of the King is manyfold. As ſometimes it's given by his own hand, which the Engliſh call Cẏninᵹeꞅ honꝺe ꞅealꝺe ᵹꞃẏþ. This was given to places and Perſons by way of Privilege as to Churches or Churchmen within their own Walls, as appears by the League betwixt King Edward and Guthrun the Dane, in which it is termed Cẏninᵹeꞅ hanꝺ ᵹꞃiþ. Another ſort of Peace is on that day he is Crowned, which laſts eight Art. 1.
days. That at Chriſtmas, which holds alſo eight days, as alſo at the Feaſts of Eaſter and Whitſontide. Another ſort is given by his Brief or Letters. And another there is belonging to the four great High-ways, viz. Watlingſtreet, Foſs, Hickenildſtreet, and Ermingſtreet, whereof two are extended to the length, and two to the bredth of the Kingdom. Another yet there is of the Rivers of note, which convey Proviſions to Cities or Towns. Then doth this Writer declare the Forfeitures incurred for breach of theſe ſeveral ſorts of the King's Peace, as to which we refer the Reader to the Laws and Cuſtoms already mentioned, as well as to what he here writes thereof; onely here mentioning this, that the Breach of the King's Peace in thoſe great High-ways and Rivers was puniſhable in the greater Aſſemblies or Sect. 12. Courts of Judicature, but that in the leſſer Ways and Waters was ſubject to the Law of the County. The fourteenth declares, That Treaſure found in the Earth is the King's, except found in a Church or Church-yard; in this caſe if it be Gold it's all the Kings; if Silver one half goes to him and another to the Church. 14.

151. The fifteenth treateth of Murther, and declares, That if any one was murthered, the Murtherer was wont to be enquired for in the Village or Town where the Body was found. If he was diſcover'd, he was delivered up to the King's Juſtice within eight days after the Fact committed. In caſe he could not be found, a Month and a day was allowed for ſearch after him, within which term, if he could not be found, forty ſix Marks were gathered out of the Town, and if it was not able to pay ſo much, what it could not the Hundred was liable to. But foraſmuch as this payment could not be made in the Towns, and Inconveniencies aroſe, the Barons took care that ſix and forty Marks ſhould be paid out of the Hundred, and being ſealed up with the Seal of ſome one Baron of the County, they were ſent to the Treaſurer, and by him kept ſo ſealed up for a Year and a Day, within which time if the Murtherer was found out, upon his delivery to the King's Juſtice they were to be repayed; but in caſe within that time he could not be diſcovered, then were the Kindred of the Murthered Party to have ſix of the Marks, and the King the other forty. If he had no Kindred his Lord was to receive it; and if no Lord his ſworn and devoted Friend and Companion. If none of theſe there were, the King ſhould have the whole Sum, all men living under his Peace and Protection. 15. Now the ſixteenth Article tells us, 16. that Murthers were found out and appointed (that is this way of diſcovery and puniſhing the Hundred if the Party could not be found) in the days of Cnute the Daniſh King, who after he had gotten England and ſetled it in Peace, at the requeſt of the Engliſh Barons ſent back his Army into Denmark. Theſe Barons became Sureties to the King, that all that ſtaid behind with him ſhould in all things enjoy perfect Peace. But in caſe an Engliſhman killed any of them, if he could not clear himſelf by the Judgment of God, that is, by Water or Iron (meaning Ordeal) Juſtice was to be executed upon him, And in caſe he eſcaped, Payment was to be made as is aforeſaid.

152. That which made King Canute thus fearfull and cautious, was the memory of the Maſſacre committed upon the Danes, during the Reign, and by the Command of King Ethelred. The ſenſe of this made him keep an Army on foot along time, which ſorely oppreſſing the People gave occaſion to the Requeſt of the Nobility, (the Norman Interpolatour calls them Barons) and to the making of this Law. And when the Normans had conquered the Countrey, they Conſcious to themſelves that from their uſage of the Natives, they could expect no better entertainment than what the Danes had received, made uſe of it for their own ſafety. If a Norman was found ſlain, his death was more grievouſly by far puniſhed than that of an Engliſhman; the onely mitigation of it was if the Engleſcheria of him that was killed could be made out, that is, that he was an Engliſhman, and neither Dane nor Norman, nor any Stranger. Hence came this word Engleſceria, Englecheria, or Engleceria to be uſed as the name of this Law. For, as Bracton writes, when any one was killed it was preſumed he was a Frenchman, Niſi Englecheria, i.e. quod Anglicus ſit probetur per parentes & coram Juſtitiaris præſentetur, Except his Englecheria, that is, that he was an Engliſhman could be proved by his Relations and preſented before the Juſtices. But this Law was abrogated by the Statute of the Fourteenth of Edward the Third as Stanford writes, who delivers alſo that this Englecheria was an Inſtitution of the Common Law, whereby you may take notice, ſaith Sir Henry Spelman, that our Modern Lawyers attribute that to the Common Law, whereof they can find neither beginning in their Annals nor in their Book of Statutes. But according to this Hiſtory, and the Original of it, well enough doth Bracton define Murther to be the killing of a Man privately, none either being preſent, knowing, hearing, or ſeeing. But Fleta ſeems beſide the matter, ſaying, that it was not Murther except it was proved that the Party ſlain was Engliſh and no Stranger, as Dr. Cowell underſtands him, who rightly obſerves, that at this day Murther is otherwiſe to be defined, viz. by prepenſed malice, whether ſecretly or openly, be the man what he will.

Fictitium Subſtantivum à Saxonic. Enᵹliꞅc. Anglicus. Quaſi Anglietas vel nativitas Anglica.

Vide Bracton. L. 3. Tract. 1. c. 15.

Pl. Cor. l. 1. c. 2.

Ex quo animadvertas hodiernos Juriſconſultos id legi Communi tribuere, cujus initium nec in Annalibus ſuis nec in Statutorum Volumine deprehenderint. In Gloſſar. voc. Englecheria.

133. The

153. The ſeventeenth Article concerning the Duty of the King, and the Right and Appendices of the Kingdom of Britain, as alſo the Epiſtle of Eleutherius to Lucius King of Britain, ſavour ſo much of the Interpolatour, that to him we leave 17.
them. The eighteenth Declares the King's Power by virtue of his Royal Dignity, 18. to pardon loſs of Life and Member, yet ſo as the Maleſactour make ſatisfaction to ſuch as he hath injured, according to his power, and find ſureties for his good behaviour, which if he doe not, he is to be baniſhed. The nineteenth in like manner, 19.
Declares his Royal Prerogative to be ſuch, that he may ſet at liberty a Captive or Priſoner, whereever he comes in any City, Borough, Caſtle or Village, or if he meet him in the way, by his mere Word or Command. Yet ſhall he that is ſo ſet at liberty, make ſatisfaction to the injured Party. But a Murtherer, Traytour, or one Guilty of like Crimes, although the King pardon him as to Life and Member, according to the Law, ſhall in no wiſe ſtay in the Countrey, but ſhall ſwear that he will depart to the Sea Coaſt within a Term ſet him by the Juſtice, and paſs over as ſoon as he can get the opportunity of a Ship and Wind. And in caſe any ſuch be perjured and ſtay in the Land, any one as he meets them, may doe Juſtice upon them. And if any one entertain ſuch a Maleſactour for one ſingle night, he ſhall be fined in the higheſt degree, according to the Laws of the Engliſh or Danes; for the ſecond night he ſhall pay double, and for the third be puniſhed as an Aſſociate and Abet-tour of Maleſactours. If ſuch leave any Wives behind them, which by the Kindred of the murthered Party, are accuſed as conſcious to, and partakers with their Huſ-bands in the Crimes committed, they ſhall by Ordeal purge themſelves, by which if they make their Innocence appear, they ſhall continue free with their Dowers and Emoluments they have by Marriage. As for their Children born or begotten, before the Commiſſion of the Fact, they ſhall neither be Outlawed, nor looſe their Inheritance.

154. The twenty ſeventh Article, gives leave to harbour a Stranger or Foreigner, 27.
whom in Engliſh they termed Cuþ ⁊ uncuþ. that is, known or unknown, as a Gueſt for two nights together: If within this ſpace he tranſgreſs, he that harbour'd him ſhall not be anſwerable for him. But if any one be injured, and complaint is made, that it was by the Counſel and Advice of him that lodged him, he ſhall with two of his honeſt Neighbours by Oath purge himſelf as to the Advice and Fact, or otherwiſe make ſatisfaction. But in caſe any one lodge a Stranger three nights, and he commit any offence, he ſhall be anſwerable for him, as for one of his own Family, accor- ꞇƿanıᵹhꞇ ding to the Engliſh ſaying; two nights a Gueſt, and the third night one of the Houſe. ᵹeꞅꞇ þꞃıꞅ
If he cannot produce the Maleſactour, he ſhall have allowed him a month and a day to nıᵹhꞇ aᵹen doe it, within which time, if the Maleſactour be taken he ſhall make ſatisfaction if hıne;
he can, and with corporal puniſhment, if it be ſo adjudged. If he cannot find him within that time, he ſhall make compenſation for the loſs ſuſtained, and undergoe the forfeiture, and if the Juſtice have him ſuſpected, ſhall purge himſelf by the Tryal of the Hundred or Shire. The twenty eighth, wills that if any one bring any Cattel or 28.
Money into a Town, and ſay he found them, before he bring them to his own or any other man's Houſe, he carry them to the Church, and before the Prieſt, the chief Officer of the Town, and the better ſort of Men declare all he found, whatever it be.
Then ſhall the Officer of the Town ſend to the four next Towns adjoyning, for the Prieſts and the Officers, who ſhall bring with them three or four of the Inhabitants of the beſt note of each Town, before whom all that is found ſhall be produced and ſhewn.
They being Witneſſes, the Officer of the Town where the finder dwells, ſhall keep the thing by him till the morrow, and then goe to the Governour of that Hundred, of which his Town is a Member, and to him he ſhall ſhew all. If it was found in the Ground belonging to a Lord who hath not his Cuſtomes or Privileges, viz. Sake and Soke, the Finder ſhall deliver all up to the Governour of the Hundred if he will receive it, with good witneſs. But if the Lord have ſuch Privileges, he ſhall be an-ſwerable to him in his Court.

155. The twenty ninth Article, will have all Men know, that all Jews, where- 29.
ſoever they are in the Kingdom, ought to be under the King's Liege Protection, and Safeguard, neither without his Licence can any of them put themſelves under any Rich Man. For the Jews and all theirs are the Kings. And in caſe any one detain them or their money, the King ſhall make enquiry if he pleaſe of his own. The thirti- 30.
eth; gives warning to ſuch as have the King's Peace, either by his Hand or his Let- ters, that they be faithfull to him; as alſo that they muſt neceſſarily obſerve, and keep it inviolably towards all others, neither becauſe of this Protection, detain other Mens Rights, whether of their Lords or Neighbours; foraſmuch as he is not worthy of this Peace, that will not himſelf ſtrictly obſerve it. In caſe out of too much confidence therein, he proudly injure any man, he ſhall make double compenſation for the loſs which the Engliſh call Aꞅꞇꞃıhılꞇheꞇ. The thirty firſt requires, that the King's Peace, granted by his own Hand, that of the eight days of his Coronation, of the Feaſts lately mentioned, and the others granted by his Breve or Letters, if broken, have the ſame way of puniſhment or forfeiture, and that by the greateſt way of tryal, had in the County where it was broken; as thus. In Danelaga, or after the Law of the Danes; by eighteen hundreds, which number makes up ſeven times twenty pounds and four: becauſe the Danes had the forfeiture of the hundred; thoſe of Norway had eight pounds, Therefore eight being multiplied by eighteen, make up an hundred and fourty four. And this was not done without cauſe: For of theſe eight pounds, the King had an hundred Shillings, and the Conſul (Earl he means) of the County fifty, he having the third penny of forfeitures: But the Dean of the Biſhop in whoſe Deanry the Peace was broken, the other ten remaining, the Peace of the King, viz. granted with his own Hand, that of his Coronation, and the Feaſts abovesaid of Chriſtmas, Eaſter and Whitſontide.

Sect. 12.

C. 31. De Emendatione Pacis.

156. The thirty ſixth Article directs that, if after a Man be ſlain as a Thief or Robber, any complaint be made to the Juſtice, that the man was wrongfully put to death, and lyes buried amongſt Thieves, and ſuch like Malefactours, and offers to make it good, that he firſt give ſecurity for ſo doing. "Then ſhall a month and "a day be allowed him to bring together the Kindred of the dead man, of both "ſorts, twelve by his Fathers ſide, and ſix by his Mothers. In caſe theſe eighteen will take the matter upon them, together with him who firſt complained "and hath given ſecurity, let every one of them give alſo ſecurity with a Sword, "and afterward find ſureties, who ſhall be able to pay his Were, in caſe they "cannot make good what they have undertaken. Then muſt he that killed the "man give ſecurity, and find ſureties to ingage that he was juſtly ſlain, and as "a Thief juſtly lyes, according to the Law amongſt ſuch Malefactours. And "firſt, he muſt ſhew in what Theſt or Robbery, and how he was ſlain. If it "appear that he was taken alive, let him name the Juſtice and Judge, and produce his lawfull Witneſſes out of the Neighbourhood, which Perſons, if they "warrantize that Juſtice was rightly done upon the man as a Thief, he that killed him ſhall be acquitted: and thoſe that made their complaint ſhall forfeit "their ingagement as to the Judges and Witneſſes. But if they make it out "that he was unjuſtly ſlain, he that killed him ſhall forfeit his obligation to the "Juſtice of the Biſhop, and find ſureties for doing what is right: then ſhall the "Juſtice of the Biſhop (his Officer he means) cauſe a Proceſſion to be made "with a Prieſt, habited in an Albe Maniple, and Stole, and Clerks in their Surplices, with Holy-water and a Croſs, the Candleſticks and Incenſe-pot, with "Fire and Incenſe going before, and the Friends of the dead having taken his "Body up, ſhall put it on a Biere, and carry it to the Church, where Maſs being "ſaid for him, and other Rites performed, they ſhall Inter him as becomes a "Chriſtian. Then within ſixteen days, ſhall he that killed him pay to the Biſhop "three forfeits. One for killing an honeſt Man inſtead of a Thief, another becauſe he Buried his (Chriſtian) * Brother as a Thief; and the third, becauſe "he gave ſecurity to acquit himſelf but could not.

C. 36. De latronibus.

* Quod Angli dicunt hıꞅ emne Cꞃıꞅꞇen⁊

157. The thirty ſeventh Article or Chapter, tells us that King Edward defended or prohibited Uſurers, forbidding them to remain in any part of his Kingdom. And if any was convicted to have exacted Uſury, he was to forfeit all his Eſtate, and be outlaw'd. And you muſt know that he heard it ſaid in the Court of the French King, while he there ſojourned, that Uſury was the root of all Vices. The next Article acquaints us, that in the ſame Law alſo was prohibited the buying of quick Cattel, or uſed Cloth without ſureties or good witneſſes. If it was a thing of Gold or Silver, or ſeemed ſuch to be, it ſhould not be bought without the teſtimony of Goldſmiths or Minters, who if they ſaw it belonged to the Church or Treaſury, ſhould take care it were not done without ſecurity. In caſe the ſeller could find no ſureties, the thing with what belonged to it, ſhould be kept till his Lord came or ſome other that would warrantize him. If any one bought any thing without theſe circumſtances, he ſhould forfeit it, and otherwiſe be puniſhed. Afterward the Juſtice was to enquire by the lawfull men and thoſe of beſt account in the Town, Village, or Hundred where the buyer dwelt, of what manner of life he was, and whether ever he was charged with any other miſdemeanour. If it was affirmed that he was a Man of good repute,

C. 37. De Uſurariis, Uſurarios quoq; defendit Rex Edwardus. Normanus hic ſcriptor utitur voce defendit ut hodierni Franci pro vetare, prohibere. Noſtrates etiam aliquibus in locis adhuc dicunt, God defend, pro Deus vetet, God forbid.

C. 38. De emptionibus ſive fidejuſſoribus, quod Anglicè dicitur faſteımannes.

repute, he ſhould purge himſelf by the Judgment or Sentence of the County, that he knew not the ſeller to be guilty as to the ſale, neither of any other crime, and if he could, ſhould tell who, and where he was: whereupon the Juſtice ſhould enquire after him to bring him to Tryal; and if he could not be found he ſhould be outlaw'd. Now the thirty ninth and laſt, farther acquaints us, that whereas it is ſaid that no man ſhould buy any quick Cattel without ſureties; The Butchers of the Cities and Towns, whom the Engliſh called Fleſhmongers, made complaint that they every day ought to buy ſuch Cattel, to kill and ſell them; foraſmuch as in the death of Cattel, their life conſiſted. Moreover, the Citizens, Townſmen, and the multitude, cryed out for their Cuſtoms, that about Martinmas, they were wont to buy Cattel in the Market, to kill againſt Chriſtmas. Great murmuring was there amongſt the People, by reaſon of this Law. Wherefore I am of opinion, ſaith our Writer, that as in other Aſſemblies, if the queſtion had been put yea or nay, they would have anſwered the latter, and if you had been preſent, you ſhould have heard private murmurings, as well as clamours and noiſe of the tumultuous People. Therefore the King thought fit not to take away from them theſe Cuſtoms that were juſt and prudent; witneſſes and conſideration of the ſellers, being of force in bargaining in the King's Market.

C. 39. De Emptoribus & Machecariis.

158. Theſe are they which bear the Name of the Laws of King Edward the Confeſſour, together with ſuch as we formerly mentioned in deſcribing the Polity of our Engliſh Saxons. But ſuch as (what we hinted before) are rather to be called Rhapſodies than Laws, being Notes or Comments made upon his Laws by ſome Sciolus, ſome pretender in the time of the Norman Kings. So that when the Reader hears the Laws of St. Edward ſo much talked of, ſo much contended for, both by word and ſword, after the Conqueſt, he muſt not underſtand theſe to have been the Laws, which are onely ſome ſcraps taken up and commented on in this manner. For indeed theſe Laws were ſaid to be the Laws of the Confeſſour after the Norman Revolution, not becauſe he made or exacted, but obſerved them, as the Monk of Malmesbury tells us. One of thoſe that King Canute enacted, or rather revived with ſome other circumſtance, being in ſubſtance formerly ordained by King Alfred, commanding every one above twelve years old, to be entred into ſome Century and Tithing, Bracton aſcribes to this King, writing that this was enjoyned by the Law of Edward the Confeſſour. So this Interpolatour or Noter himſelf tells you, that thoſe Laws of St. Edward ſo much deſired, and at length obtained from the Conquerour, were invented and conſtituted in the time of King Edgar, his Grandfather; but after his death they were laid aſide for ſixty eight years, during the Reigns of the ſucceeding Princes. But after that King Edward came to the Crown by the Counſel of his Barons, he revived, repaired, adorned and confirmed this Law, and being confirmed, it was called the Law of King Edward, not that he firſt invented it, but when it had been laid aſide and quite forgot, from the time of his Grandfather Edgar; for the ſaid ſpace of ſixty eight years, becauſe it was juſt and honeſt, he drew it out of the deep pit of oblivion, renewed and delivered it to be obſerved as his own. By theſe and other circumſtances, we may gather that the whole Body of theſe Laws we have recited, or all ſuch of them as were approved by this King Edward, who was a Prince of great mildneſs and indulgence to his People, ſuch written Laws as were in force in his time, and ſuch Cuſtoms as had been all along obſerved in the Saxon times, and ſtill were kept on foot in his days, were after the Norman Conqueſt, when the People ſo earneſtly contended for their Liberties, called by the Name of the Laws of St. Edward, thereby being indeed meant the Engliſh Saxon Laws, which received denomination from him, being in effect the laſt King of that Race, and one whoſe memory the People reverenced and preſerved in an eſpecial manner, for the great Reputation he had got of Sanctity, and the gentleneſs of his Diſpoſition.

Lib. 3. Tract. 2.

159. Now after the Norman Conqueſt what alteration was made in thoſe ancient Laws and Cuſtoms, by introducing the Norman way of Fees, and other matters out of that Countrey, as alſo after the ſtrugling of the Barons, how far Magna Charta and the Common Law were the iſſue and product of theſe Engliſh Saxon Laws and Cuſtoms is not our work, eſpecially now to enquire, leſt we ſhould exceed the Bounds of our preſent Period, and ſeem to thruſt our ſickle into the Corn of other Men. But this would better be done, by digeſting theſe Saxon Laws into a Methodical Body under certain Heads, which ſeems not very hard to be accompliſhed. For theſe Laws it's more than time we diſmiſs them, having already committed an Extravagance, being carried farther than the general Nature of our Deſign permits, and not to be practiſed as to other Nations, but that the deſire of giving the Reader the moſt ample Knowledge of his own Countrey, that we could, hath tranſported us. So ſcant are our Hiſtories of thoſe times, that had it not been for theſe Laws, very little of the Polity of our Anceſtours could have been diſcovered, and thence it is no wonder, if ſometimes we meet in them ſeveral things that are obſcure, or at this diſtance not perfectly to be underſtood. For the main they do very much contribute to the Knowledge of the Saxon Antiquity, the Nature of the Government with the State of thoſe times, and the humour and temper of the People, matters of the greateſt conſequence in things Hiſtorical. By the Nature and Force of the Medicine, a ſkilfull man will know both the kind and violence of the Diſeaſe, Puniſhments, Cenſures and Cautions are the Medicines which are preſcribed in the Laws. By the general Current of theſe Laws, which run againſt Theft for prevention both by Suretyſhip and Puniſhments, as we hinted before, the general Inclination of the People to that vice may be diſcovered. But whereas the Theft moſt aimed at by the Laws is that of Cattel, and ſuch care is taken for purſuing them when ſtoln, this thereby is hinted to us, that the Wealth of our Saxon Anceſtours, as of the Ancients chiefly and principally conſiſted in Cattel, Gold and Silver with other Goods or Houſhold ſtuff of price and value, being not ſo ordinary in theſe days, nor ſome Ages after as in ſucceeding times. Therefore were Rents formerly paid in kind, and our Kings themſelves were ſo paid till the time of Henry the Second, who changed the Cuſtome. And in the writings of thoſe Saxon and later times by the word Pecunia, quick Goods or Cattel are often meant, which are for explication expreſſed, ſometimes by Viva Pecunia. And from their Heads or Capita, was framed the word Capital, Capitale, Captale, Capitalia, which ſignified Goods moveable or immoveable, ſometimes Pledges and the Price and Value of things, and what we Engliſh now term Catalla and Chattels; but originally Beaſts or quick Goods. But of the Saxon Laws ſo much, from the Knowledge of which as we ſaid very much benefit may be reaped, though we go no farther than to thoſe publiſhed by Mr. Lambard, thoſe being ſufficient if not more than ſufficient to our Deſign.

Theft the chiefeſt vice.

The Wealth of the Engliſh Saxons.

The uſual Subſidies, Revenues and Profits of the Kings.

Danegeld.

Heregeld.

Contribution money.

160. We have ſeen the Polity or Government of the Engliſh Saxons much by their Laws and otherwiſe, for the maintenance and ſupport whereof, we muſt admoniſh the Reader to take notice what Revenues and Profits the Kings enjoyed. Beſides their own Demeſn-Lands, he may obſerve how much came to them by the way of Mulcts, ſo frequently occurring in the Laws. Then for Danegeld that much money they received yearly from the People. And for military Expeditions both by Sea and Land, they levied much money of the People, which they called Heregeld. By Doomſday Book, (which Book beſides the knowledge and valuation of the Provinces, contains very many Cuſtoms in uſe amongſt the Engliſh Saxons) it appears that ſeveral Towns contributed by preſcription toward Naval Preparations. As to inſtance in ſome. It was a Cuſtome at Warwick, if the King went by Sea againſt his Enemies, to ſend him either four Boatſwanes (Sea Souldiers or Mariners) or elſe four pounds in money. And the City of Exeter, when he made any expedition by Land or Sea, ſerved after the Rate of five Hides of Land. The three Towns of Barneſtable, Lydeford and Totnes, paid aſmuch as Exeter alone. The City of Gloceſter paid ſix and thirty Dicres of Iron, and an Hundred Iron Rods fitted to make Nails for the King's Ships. Leiceſter, if the King went againſt his Enemies by Sea, ſent him four Horſes to London for conveyance of Arms or other Neceſſaries. At Lewes in Suſſex, King Edward the Confeſſour had an hundred and twenty ſeven Burghers at his ſervice, who if the King went not himſelf in Perſon, but ſent others to guard the Sea, collected twenty ſhillings of every man of what Countrey ſoever he were, and provided men who were to look to the Arms on ſhipboard. Moreover Colcheſter paid out of every Houſe that was able ſix pence a year for maintenance of the King's Souldiers, upon an expedition by Sea or Land.

161. Some places held many Privileges by way of ſervice, as Torkſey, a Town of Lincolnſhire upon the Trent, wherein before the Conqueſt were numbred two Hundred Burgheſſes, enjoyed many on this condition, that they ſhould tranſport the King's Ambaſſadours, whenſoever they came this way in their own Barges along that River, and conduct them as far as York. From this ſame ſurvey of England, ſufficiently is evident that moſt eminent Towns paid money to the King upon ſeveral accounts, and ſometimes to the Earl or Alderman of the Shire. As for the later way of Subſidies, we muſt ſay with a Learned man that we cannot find that the Saxon Kings had any collected after the modern manner. But they had many Cuſtoms whereby they levied money of the People, or perſonal ſervice as we have already ſaid, and toward the Building and repairing of Cities, Caſtles and Bridges (as we have ſeen in their Laws) which they called Burghbote and Brigbote. The Danegeld being impoſed upon Hides of Land, it was afterwards called Hidagium, and this Name remained afterward upon all Taxes and Subſidies impoſed upon Lands, for money was alſo impoſed upon Cattel, but then it was called Hornegeld. When the Normans came in they called both theſe ſorts, ſometimes according to the Latin and Greek word Taxes; and ſometimes according to their own word Tallagium from tallier to cut or divide, and ſometimes according to the word uſual beyond the Seas, Auxilia and Subſidia. The Conquerour had theſe kinds of Taxes, and made a Law for the manner of levying them.

Spelm. Gloſſ. voc. ſubſidium.

Hornegeld and other Taxes.

Their Cuſtoms.

Diſpoſitions.

Experience and Courage.

The trial of it in their Infants.

162. Of their Polity and Laws we have ſaid enough. Their Cuſtoms as of all other Nations, partly proceeded from their Laws and Polity, or were adjuncts of them, and partly from their natural Diſpoſitions and Tempers. Their Diſpoſition, as we formerly ſhewed, was very fierce and warlike before Proſperity and Idleneſs betrayed them to effeminate Courſes. By the conſtitution of their Government, they were to appear all once a year in Arms, which gave occaſion to the Maſſacre of the Danes in the time of Ethelred, which cuſtome rendred them expert and valiant by way of uſe and exerciſe. But a natural Courage they required in their Children while yet but Infants, and as the Eagle is ſaid to try her young ones by ſetting their Eyes and Faces againſt the Sun, ſo thoſe of Eaſt England tried the Magnanimity and Courage of their Babes by another Experiment though of a more ordinary and homely Nature. “They were wont “to ſet them upon the thatcht ſides of their Houſes, and ſuch of them as were afraid and hung timorouſly or cried for fear of falling, they pronounced would “be puſillanimous and Cowards; but ſuch as laid faſt hold of the Straw, clung faſt “to the Thatch, and fearleſs would endeavour to ſecure themſelves, with great “Acclamation they predicted, that they would be Stoutheres, as their term was, “or valiant, magnanimous or courageous Lords.

Their computation of time.

Their years.

163. The ordinary way of their Reckoning or Supputation of times was by Winters, poſſibly for this reaſon at firſt in barbarous times, becauſe the memory of ſharp and ſevere weather, as of all other things which ſmart, make a ſtronger impreſſion in the memory. And as they preferred Winter before Summer in their Reckoning, ſo alſo Night before Day, which cuſtome we ſtill retain uſing theſe words, a Sennight and Fortnight for Seven Nights, and Fourteen Nights more uſually than ſeven days, or fourteen days, even as Tacitus writes of the old Germans, their way of Computation. Their year was two fold, natural and civil. Their natural year they meaſured not as other Nations by the Sun, but the Moon, beginning it when ſhe was at the full after the Autumnal Æquinoctial, when the greateſt Tides uſually fall out, and hence this Month they called by the Name of Winter filleth. For the Reader muſt know, that their twelve Months they equally denominated; ſix from Summer and ſix from Winter, but began the year with the firſt winter Month, which they accounted October to be, for in the days of Beda, the Autumnal Full-moon fell in this Month, and thereupon the beginning of the Saxon year was fetcht from thence, although Poſterity to fix it at ſome certain and remarkeable time, ſetled themſelves upon Michaelmas Day, a Day ſtill obſerved as the beginning of the year, both as to Officers, and the letting and hiring of Grounds (the Fruits of the foregoing Year being now gathered in, and ſeed time arrived for the following) in many if not moſt places of the Land. The Civil year they derived from the five and twentieth of December or Chriſtmas Day, the Night whereof they termed Modranect or the Night of Mothers, from ſome Ceremonies by Matrons then uſed, and whereas they thus began the year before their converſion to Chriſtianity, we may imagine it was out of reſpect to the winter Solſtice or the Full-moon thereof, for in the Days of Julius Cæſar, the Solſtice fell on that Day.

Nec dierum numerum ut nos ſed noctium computant.

Beda.

Their Months and the Names of them.

164. As their Years ſo their Months were either Civil or Lunary. The later ſort were thirteen in Number, for every year. The former were twelve for three ordinary years together, and in the fourth a thirteenth was added by way of Emboliſm, and placed at the end of Summer; but by theſe muſt alſo, whatever Beda and others write, be meant Lunary Months; for had either a ſolar or lunar Month been added to a civil or ſolar Year, the year would thereby have ſwollen to three hundred ninety five, or three hundred ninety three days, which

UMI

Sect. 12 would wonderfully have perplexed the ſeries of times. Now to come to the Names of their Months, and begin with the firſt Circle, or thoſe of Winter; we are told by Verſtegan, that their Month anſwering to September, they called Gerſt monat from Barley, which by that Month commonly yielded was anciently called Gerſt, the later Name of Barley, being given unto it by reaſon of the drink therewith made, called Beer, and from Beerleyh it came to be Berleyh, and ſo Barley. But notwithſtanding what this Authour writes, yet in our ancient Saxon Monuments ordinarily, this Grain is called Bere, and thence ſeveral Names of Places derived, and ſo indeed from the Grain the Name came to be tranſferred to the Liquour, as from the place of growth to the grain it ſelf, for Bareley or Bereleyh, ſignifies the Ley or Ground where the grain of Bere did grow. September was otherwiſe called alſo Haligemonat. That which anſwered to October had the Name of Wynmonat, for albeit they had not anciently Wines made in Germany, yet at this ſeaſon they received them from the Countries adjoining. But, as we ſaid before, this Month they alſo called Winter filleth. That we call November, they termed Wintmonat or Windmonth, it being then the Cuſtome of Mariners to ſhrowd themſelves at home till bluſtering March was over, but whereſoever Verſtegan picked this up we have it from better Teſtimony, that this Month was called Blotmonath or the Month of Immolations, becauſe ſuch Cattel as were to be ſacrificed they now devoted to their Gods. He tells us farther, that December had his due appellation given him in the Name of Winter monat, or Winter month, but that after the Saxons received Chriſtianity they then out of devotion to the birth-time of Chriſt termed it by the Name of Heligmonat or Holy month. But Beda writes that our Saxons called December by the Name of Firſt Giuli, as January by that of Later Giuli, for theſe Names were taken from the turning of the Sun, in reſpect to which December precedes January, though ordinarily accounted the laſt of all. Hence came the Feaſt of the Nativity or Chriſtmas, happening at this time to be called Geol, as it is by King Alfred, and in the Northern parts of England, as well as in Scotland, the G being turned into Y as is uſual, it is yet known by the Name of Yeol or Youl, as by the Danes it is termed Jul.

Hinc Beretun hodie Barton vicus Hordei. Berewick vel Barwick Bereham alias Barham, pro quibus hodie utimur Grange.

Geola æꞃꞃa ᵹeola æꝼꞇeꞃa à ᵹeol & hoc à ᵹeolꝺen reddere reſtituere (unde hodiernum yield) ut ſic idem ſit quod res ipſa poſtulat τρόπικος ſeu verſatilis quòd Sol jam ad autumnale delapſus ſe in auſtrum ſublevat, vide Spelm. Gloſſ. de Anno Saxonum.

165. But to take along with us what Verſtegan, writes of each Month, he tells us that January was called Wolfe monat or Wolfe month, becauſe People are wont always in that Month to be in more danger to be devoured of Wolves than in any ſeaſon elſe of the year; for that through the extremity of Cold and Snow, thoſe Ravenous Creatures could not find of other Beaſts ſufficient to feed upon. Concerning February he adds, that they called it Sprout Kele, by Kele meaning the Kelewurt, which we now call Colewurt, the greateſt Pot-wurt in time long paſt that our Anceſtours uſed, and the Broth made therewith was thereof alſo called Kele. For before we borrowed from the French the Name of Potage, and that of Herb, the one in our own Language was called Kele, and the other Wurt: and as this Kele-wurt, or Potage-herb, was the chief Winter Wurt for the ſuſtenance of the Husbandman, ſo was it the firſt Herb that in this Month began to yield out wholſome young Sprouts, and conſequently gave thereto the Name of Sprout-kele. But from Beda we are aſſured that the Old Saxons called February by the Name of Solmonath, as the Month of Cakes, which in it they offered to their Gods. The word Saoul indeed of Old to the Teutonick Nations ſignified Meat, and ſtill it is uſed in the French Language for one who is filled with Meat, or eſpecially Drink. But here Beda interprets it of Cakes, which the Idolatrous Jews are ſaid to have Offered to the Queen of Heaven, probably the Sun, which in the Hebrew is of the Feminine Gender. And the Germans (as Tacitus witneſſeth) Worſhipped alſo the Sun, and ſtill uſe the ſame Gender.

Jerem. 7. 17.

166. Theſe were the Months belonging to the Winter Courſe. Of thoſe of the Summer Semicycle the firſt was that anſwering to March, which (as Verſtegan ſays) they called Lenct-monat, or according to our preſent Orthography Length-month, becauſe at this Seaſon the Days firſt begin in length to exceed the Nights. This Month being by our Anceſtours ſo called when they received Chriſtianity, and conſequently therewith the Ancient Cuſtome of Faſting, they called this Chief time of Faſting the Faſt of Lent, becauſe of the Lenct monat, whereon the greateſt part of the Duration of this Faſting always fell, and hereof it cometh that we now call it Lent, it being rather the Faſt of Lent, though the former Name of Lenct monat be long ſince loſt, and the Name of March borrowed inſtead thereof. But though (as he writes) this Name be loſt long ſince, yet there's another mentioned by Beda, which having a more ancient Original, ſeems alſo to have ceaſed long before it. For the Saxons (as he witneſſeth) termed this Month by the Name of Read monath, from their Goddeſs Rheda, to which they Sacrificed at this time of the year. What Goddeſs this was, neither Tacitus, nor Cæſar, nor Diodorus do tell us; but the Saxon word Read ſignifying Council, probable it is ſhe thence received the Name, that as (Tacitus writes) the Germans were wont to Conſult at the beginning or Full of the Moon, and conſequently at the Full Moon of this Month, held their great Conſultations for the year enſuing. For (as Sir Henry Spelman well obſerves) Pliny demonſtrates the Moon to be moſt potent at the Æquinoctials, and therefore March and September have been eſteemed as moſt fit for ſuch Conſultations.

167. To the Month of April anſwered that which they called by the Name of Oſter or Eoſter monath, from their Goddeſs Eoſtre, as moſt write, whoſe Feſtival they now obſerved. Some call her Goſter, and yet ſhe was ſuppoſed to cauſe the Winds (which by ancient Obſervations were found in this Month) moſt commonly to blow from the Eaſt. Now Eaſt in the Teutonick is Oſt; as Oſtend, which rightly in Engliſh is Eaſtend, hath that Name for the Eaſtern ſituation of it, as to the Ships it appears which through the narrow Seas come from the Weſt; ſo that Oſter ſeems the true writing, and Goſter to have crept in by way of miſtake. But by a prophane Cuſtome hath this Heatheniſh Name been applied to the moſt ſacred Feſtival of Chriſtianity, ſo hard is it to obliterate old Manners and Habits; though ſome there have been who interpret the word concerning the Reſurrection, and thence in the Teutonick call it Coſtern, which ſome ancient Copies of Beda do favour, calling it Coſtur, and not Eoſter. But in Saxony the Feaſt is called Oſtern at this preſent, which hath near affinity with ours and their Oſter Monath. The pleaſant Month of May they termed by the Name of Trimilki, becauſe in that Month they began to milk their Kine three times a day, ſuch being it ſeems of old the fertility of Britain, or of Germany, out of which this Nation came into the Iſland, though no ſuch fruitfulneſs now appears in either Countrey that we know of. However on the eighth day of this Month Beda placeth the beginning of Summer. To June (as Verſtegan will have it) they gave the Name of Weyd Monat, becauſe their Beaſts did then Weyd in the Meadows, that is to ſay, go to feed there. For a Meadow in the Teutonick is called a Weyd, and of Weyd we yet retain our word Wade, which we underſtand of going through watery places, ſuch as Meadows are wont to be. But Beda writes, that June in Saxon was called Erralida, Lida ſignifying fair or navigable, as the Seaſon is pleaſant and fit for Navigation both in June and July, whereupon June they termed Lida Era or Lida the firſt, and July Lida after or Lida the ſecond. Verſtegan writes, that July was called Hen Monat or Hay Monat, that is to ſay, Hay Month, becauſe therein they uſually Mowed and made their Hay-harveſt. And Auguſt they termed Arn Monat, or more rightly Barn Monat, intending thereby the then filling of their Barns with Corn. But from Beda it appears, that Auguſt in Saxon was called Weod, or Wend Monat (not Wenden Monath, as ſome Copies corruptly have it) from Cockle, which then doth moſt abound. He uſes Cockle as a ſpecies to expreſs the genus, for which the Latin Tongue hath no proper word; but the Saxon fully expreſſeth it by that of Weod, as we ſtill at this day by Weeds, thereby ſignifying all ſorts of harmfull or unprofitable Herbs.

168. To this Account of the Saxon Months and Year, we ſhall onely add ſome Cuſtoms which we cannot but obſerve out of Ingulphus, and ſo diſmiſs this almoſt tedious Subject. Firſt he tells us it was the Cuſtome of the Engliſh, that when any one was to be Conſecrated to Warfare, the Evening preceding the day of his Conſecration he ſhould confeſs his Sins with Contrition and Compunction, to a Biſhop, Abbat, or ſome Monk or Prieſt; by whom being Abſolved, he ſhould continue in the Church all night, giving himſelf to Prayer, Devotion and Affliction. On the Morrow, being about to hear Maſs, he ſhould Offer his Sword upon the Altar, which being Bleſſed, aſter the Goſpel, the Prieſt ſhould put about the Neck of the Souldier with his Benediction: then having communicated, he ſhould be accounted and remain a lawfull Souldier. This cuſtome of Conſecrating a Souldier (Miles he terms him) the Normans afterward abominated, not accounting ſuch an one a lawfull Souldier, but a dull and heavy Knight, a degenerate Citizen. But ſaith Ingulphus, not onely this, but other cuſtoms they changed. For the Engliſh way of making Writings of Contracts, which till the time of King Edward were wont to be confirmed by the Subſcriptions of credible Perſons, together with the ſhape of Golden Croſſes, and other ſacred Manners of Signature, the Normans condemning, gave to theſe Chirographa the Name of Charts, and confirmed theſe Charts by impreſſions of Wax made by each one's particular Seal, and the Atteſtation of three or four Witneſſes preſent at the Action. At firſt many Poſſeſſions were paſſed over by word of Mouth alone without Scrip or Scroll, onely with the Sword, the Helmet, the Horn or Cup of the Owner: many Tenements with a Spur, or Bow, and ſome with an Arrow. This was the Cuſtome at the firſt coming in of the Conquerour, which ſhortly after was abſolutely changed. After this, he writes, how the Normans abominated Engliſh Men, and drove them from all Dignities. He adds, that they ſo abominated their Language, that the Laws of the Land, and the Ordinances of the Engliſh Kings were handled in the French Tongue, and to Children at School were the Rudiments of Grammar explained not in Engliſh, but in French, and the Engliſh manner of Writing being laid aſide, the French mode was introduced in all Charts and Books.

Hanc conſecrandi militis conſuetudinem Normanni abominantes non militem legitimum, &c. p. 901.

Hic omnino diſtinguendum inter aſcriptionem in militiam honorariam & vulgarem. Hæc gregarii militis, illa inſignioris. Ad gregarii ſufficit poſt evocationem vel conductionem nuda ſolummodo in tabulas militares conſcriptio. Ad alterius ſolennitas adhibenda.

Their manner of paſſing Lands.

169. What Ingulphus, as to the Cuſtome of the Engliſh Saxons calls Chirographa, and after the coming of the Normans, Charts or Charters; after the Decay of the Roman Empire, under the Emperours themſelves, and the Kings of the Goths and Lombards, went under the Name of Epiſtles, and by this Name all matters of Conveyance and Contract were tranſacted. Their ſtyle is turgid, affected and not beſeeming Majeſty, as ſufficiently appears from thoſe of Caſſiodorus. Some of our preſent Charts or Deeds ſtill retain the Form of an Epiſtle, as thus, To All Chriſtian People to whom theſe Preſents ſhall come greeting. Know ye, &c. And the King in conferring honours, and other matters, ſtill follows this Form. To All Archbiſhops, Dukes, Earls, Biſhops, Barons, &c. The Ancients had as many ſorts of Epiſtles as we have of Charters, or more; as for Adoption, Donation, Conceſſion, Confirmation, and many other, as may be ſeen ſufficiently in Marculfus. As to the manner of the Engliſh Writing, though our Authour ſays it was new laid aſide, and the French brought in at the time of the Conqueſt, yet toward the end of his Hiſtory he tells us, that the Saxon Hand was uſed by all Saxons and Mercians till the time of King Alfred, but he being very well inſtructed in Learning by French Teachers, though before his time it was uſed in all Writings, by degrees grew out of Eſteem, and the French Hand as more legible and pleaſant, began to be practiſed by the Engliſh. Therefore he aſſures us, that the Charters granted to his Monaſtery by King Ethelbald, and all the ancient Kings were written in the Saxon Hand alone; but thoſe of Edred and Edgar were written double, both with Saxon and French Characters.

Their manner of Writing.

Manus etenim Saxonica ab omnibus Saxonibus & Merciis uſque ad tempora Regis Alfredi, &c. p. 912.

170. It appears therefore from all that Ingulphus ſays upon this Subject laid together, that from King Alfred's time the Saxon Characters were not ſo much uſed as formerly, but not aboliſhed, as appears from very many Monuments yet extant aſwell of Civil as Eccleſiaſtical concernment (whereof ſome in the Latin Tongue it ſelf) all written after the time of King Alfred, and to be ſeen both in the publick Library of the Univerſity of Cambridge, and the private or inner Library of Corpus Chriſti College. Nay, notwithſtanding what the Conquerour and the other Norman Kings could doe, both Language and Character continued in uſe, thoſe things being carried by the Multitude notwithſtanding all oppoſition. Therefore as this ſame Ingulphus writes in another place (at the very end of his Hiſtory) as to the Language William the Conquerour was forced to commend to his Juſtices the Laws of Edward the Confeſſour in the Idiome they were written, leſt any one by ignorance ſhould offend againſt them. And as for the Character, it ſo long continued, that our Antique Hands of Court and Chancery owe to it their Original, however now altered by continuance of time. Publick Inſcriptions alſo were made in theſe Characters as appears by the Names of Kings and Noblemen in golden Letters written about the Wall of the Abby Church of Weſtminſter. The Inſcriptions alſo of Coins, whatever the Conquerour and his Norman Succeſſours did, continued ordinarily in theſe Characters, even till the time of Queen Mary, although ſome of King Edward I have alſo beheld, with the Roman Characters. And this is obſervable that thoſe Saxon Characters were borrowed by the Iriſh, ſeveral moſt ancient Books of which Nation are found written therewith, though in their own Language as I have ſeen. And not long ſince if not at preſent, although they retained the ſenſe of their own words and their own way of pronunciation, yet in writing they uſed the Saxon Letters. That this Communication firſt happened, when in the Infancy of the Engliſh Saxon Church there was great entercourſe betwixt the Religious and Learned Perſons of both the Scotch and Engliſh Nations, is moſt probable. But it ſeems more confirm'd after that in the days of Henry the Second the Engliſh ſent their Collonies into that Iſland.

Attuli eadem vice mecum de Londoniis in meum monaſterium leges æquiſſimi Regis Edwardi, quas Dominus meus inclytus Rex Willielmus authenticas eſſe & perpetuas, per totum Regnum Angliæ inviolabiliter tenendas ſub pœnis graviſſimis proclamarat, & ſuis Juſtitiariis commendarat, eodem idiomate quo editæ ſunt; ne per ignorantiam contingat nos vel noſtros aliquando in noſtrum grave periculum contraire & offendere auſu temerario Regiam Majeſtatem, ac in ejus cenſuras rigidiſſimas improvidum pedem ferre contentas ſepius in eiſdem, hoc modo. Ita claudit Hiſtoriam ſuam & videtur hic leges Edwardi inſeruiſſe quæ deſunt.

The Antiquity of their Language.

171. Of the Original, Nature and Progreſs of the Engliſh Saxon Tongue, now it remains in the laſt place that we ſhould ſpeak, if we did not daily expect an entire Treatiſe upon this Subject, which we cannot but promiſe to our ſelves to be very exquiſite if we may judge from that very learned Preface to it already publiſhed. This Language is of the ſame Antiquity with the whole Teutonick, being a Language carried by the Colony into Aſia, and brought back again by Woden, not fetch'd and derived from the Greek, as ſome by reaſon of ſome Correſpondence do imagine, though the nearneſs of the People brought back by Woden to the Greeks in Aſia and Thrace, might procure ſome Communication of Words, a Language which looks as old as any that aroſe from the confuſion of Babel, that we may not with others carry the Original higher up. A Dialect of the Teutonick it is, to which the moſt ancient German Records bear moſt reſemblance, which hath ſuffered moſt impairment from Brethren, who having firſt loſt their own Native Language, another Branch of the ſame ſtock, could not be ſatisfied without endeavouring to aboliſh this alſo where they found it unmixt with their affectations. For the greateſt alteration made in it hath been by Normans and French, both which People were Teutonick, and before they loſt them in Gall ſpake but different Dialects of the ſame Tongue. Take but away French and Latin Mixtures, and what thou ſpeakeſt, Reader, is ſtill a part of this Saxon Language, eſpecially the ſhorteſt Words and Monoſyllables. By theſe Mixtures thou haſt loſt Multitudes of ſuch Words, and now ſpeakeſt by Circumlocution, what thou mighteſt have expreſſed with much more brevity; but it's well if ſtill thou purſueſt not this humour of Innovation in thy Speech, and thinkeſt every Feather very gay onely becauſe it is not thine own. If Latin and French ſhould each take their own, how naked wouldſt thou appear where thou haſt ſtript thy ſelf of thine own Plumes.

Copious and ſmooth.

As this Language whereof we ſpeak was Copious, ſo not harſh in its pronunciation, not ſo harſh as other Dialects of the Teutonick, as the Low Dutch, which bears great affinity to it, but in pronunciation is more rough and full. Where the Dutch both high and low uſe the d, we uſe the th, as for dat that, dunder thunder, dincke thinke, dicke thicke, and many more; a motion of our Tongue not eaſie by them to be attained. So where they write the v Conſonant we make uſe of the f, as to inſtance in a word which hits both Particulars, for their Vader we ſay and write Father, for their vor we ſay for; and Inſtances of this nature might be infinite.

Compared with the ancient Teutonick.

172. In comparing our ancient Engliſh Saxon with that remainder of it we now ſpeak. I cannot yet but take notice of one thing, wherein Time hath done ſome ſervice, in lopping off ſome Superfluities with which the Dutch Tongues do ſtill abound. In the Saxon, Be ſometimes, but moſt commonly Ge prefixed before Verbs, Verbals, the Preterperfectenſe of Verbs, and the Participles of the Preterperfectenſe is ſuperfluous, being that we call incœptivum augmentum, or Syllabicum, or merely Expletive, as y and i have more lately been, eſpecially with our Poets, for the increaſing of Syllables, as in ycleped, ywritten, ybroken, and the like. The Low Dutch according to their uſual manner of pronouncing with Aſpiration, uſe to put an h to it and ſo make it ghe. Inſtances in this kind were alſo infinite; but for a few Becoapan they uſed for Ceapan or to ſell, Beclæmed for cleamed or glewed, Beclanſed for cleanſed, Becleaped for called; Geboad Prayer, Gebletſud bleſſed, Gebode bidden, Gecind kindred, Gedon done, Geſeoht fight, Gehird heard, Geruote to meet, Geplantud planted, Gewrit writing, Gewitneſs witneſs, and the like. We have now quite left off the Ge, and where we retain this Augment we uſe it in Be, as ſtill we ſay for Geleaſe belief, Gecomen become, ſo we ſtill ſay, beſpeak bethought, and ſeveral others. It were tedious here to make Obſervations of other Alterations introduced by time and foreign Commerce, and not hard to trace them down by degrees to ſuch as underſtand the Saxon Tongue, and are converſant in the Writings of Chaucer, Lidgate and others that wrote nearer to the Conqueſt. An entire Volume of this might be made, and the Reader in a buſineſs of his own Countrey may himſelf take ſome pains or expect an account from the Learned Authour of the Original of the Engliſh Nation. I ſhall now onely farther obſerve that the Conquerour took not ſo much care to deſtroy this Language (which his own Anceſtours ſpake for the ſubſtance before they came into France) but the Engliſh our Anceſtours however Conquered were as carefull to preſerve it, to which end in ſeveral Monaſteries, particularly in that of Taviſtoke in Devonſhire Lectures were read of it, and certain Perſons were appointed to profeſs it, even as long, or well nigh as long as theſe Monaſteries continued. Had this courſe ſtill been obſerved the Antiquities of our Nation with many things which now lie hidden and abſtruſe, might have been much more known, and ſome ſtop might have been put to this giddy humour of deſpiſing all words, as well as Faſhions and other things, without conſideration, merely becauſe they are not foreign or new.

Quem in finem ſuperioribus ſæculis à majoribus noſtris monialium quædam Collegia inſtituta ſunt, in quibus eſſent quæ & hujus linguæ ſcientiâ imbuerentur, & eandem (cum aliis Communicando) ad poſteros tranſmitterent. Quod quidem in Cœnobio monialium Taveſtokenſi in Comitatu Devoniæ, & multis aliis conventiculis (noſtrâ memoriâ) receptum fuit, credo ne ejus ſermonis peritia, ob linguæ inſolentiam penitus obſoleſceret. Math. Parkerus in Præf. ad Hiſt. Alfredi.

AN

AN INSTITUTION
OF General Hiſtory: OR
The Hiſtory of the World.

The Fourth Part.

BOOK II.
Of the Conſtantinopolitan Roman Empire.

CHAP. I.
From the promotion of Nicephorus, to the Death of Leo the Philoſopher.

The ſpace of one Hundred Years.

Nicephorus Emperour of the Eaſt.

1. IRENE being depoſed as we have ſaid, Nicephorus the Patritian, and General Logotheta, was Proclaimed, and Crowned Emperour in the great Church at Conſtantinople, on Tueſday, being the firſt of November, in the tenth Indiction, the ſeventh year of Pope Leo the Third, the Second of Charles the Great, Emperour of the Weſt, A. D. DCCCII.

Wheedles Irene out of the Treaſure.

Then Baniſhes her, where ſhe dyes with grief.

Theophanes Cedrenus Hiſt. compend. in Nicephoro Zonar. Annal. Tom. 3. in eodem.

2. The day after his Promotion, knowing Irene to be poſſeſſed of great Treaſures, he went to her, and with flattering words and fair promiſes, obtained a diſcovery of them, after which he neglected her, and whereas ſhe had ſurrendred them on this condition, that ſhe might be ſuffered to live peceably and honourably in the Palace of Eleutherius, which ſhe her ſelf had built; having obtained his ends, he baniſhed her to the Prince's Iſland, to a Monaſtery there alſo of her own building, and afterwards, perceiving himſelf hated of the People, leſt they ſhould reſtore her to her former dignity, without all mercy he removed her to Mitylene in very ill weather, and there in the Iſle of Lesbos ſhe died of grief, the ninth of Auguſt after. Her Body he cauſed to be buried in her own Monaſtery; for ſeveral ſuch places of Religion ſhe had built, together with many Hoſpitals for Relief of the Poor and Aged, and done many other Acts of Piety, as our Hiſtorians deliver------ who much admire her, and as much deteſt Nicephorus, upon what ground it's eaſie enough to conjecture. She being gone, he betook himſelf in the ſame manner of Addreſs to her blind Son, pretending great kindneſs to him, and receiving him into his own Houſe, out of hope to flatter him into a betraying alſo of more Treaſure; and his flattery had ſuch influence upon Conſtantine, being a Man of a light and heedleſs temper, that he diſcovered to him Treaſure that was hid in the Sigma, a place ſo called from its ſemicircular Figure. This obtained, he neglected him as he had done his Mother. And before this, on the laſt day of April, Nicetas Triphyllius, by whoſe ſtout endeavours he had obtained the Diademe, he ſo far rewarded for his good deeds, as to take him out of this miſerable world by poiſon.

Cajoles Conſtantine for the diſcovery of more.

Poiſons Nicetas Triphyllius, his promoter to the Diademe.

3. All Writers now extant generally affirm him a cruel, griping and covetous Man. Glycas calls him a Man greedy of ſlaughters, the ſlave of gold, and abſolutely another Midas; writes farther, that he ſet to ſale places of Magiſtracy, and ever ſhewed a ſour and angry countenance to the People, except any brought him Gold; then would he appear very gentle and gratious. Upon the City of Conſtantinople he laid an heavy Tribute, under pretence of repairing their old decayed Walls called Diceratum, from two Ceratia, which were paid. The diſſatisfactions raiſed amongſt the People, one Bardanes or Bardanius, Sirnamed Turk, a certain Duke of the Eaſt, imagined to give ſufficient incouragement to his Ambition, which ſo far carried him as to affect the Empire, and living at Philomelium, he made known his purpoſe to a certain Monk, who was eſteemed to have the gift of Prophecy, Leo the Armenian being privy to the matter. The Monk told him, that if he went about to make himſelf Emperour, he ſhould looſe both his Eſtate and Life; with which anſwer as he was going away ſorrowfull, and ready to take Horſe, the Monk caſting his eyes upon his Attendants, called him back, who expecting now he would ſay ſomething that would better pleaſe him, readily returned. He told him the ſame tale over again he had formerly heard, affirming that if he were Emperour, either by his own ſeeking, or by having it put upon him, he ſhould looſe both his Eyes and Fortunes But he added, that of thoſe his Attendants, the firſt and ſecond ſhould obtain the Diademe, and the third ſhould be declared Emperour, but ſhould preſently periſh without ever attaining to his Aims. But for all this, when in ſome places ſeditions were raiſed by reaſon of the exactions of Nicephorus, they choſe him Emperour at Chryſopolis, and either willingly or unwillingly he accepted of it on the nineteenth day of July. Now did Leo and Michael forſake him, and went over to Nicephorus, who preferred the one to the Command of the Confederate Forces, and the other to be Captain of the Counts Troop; onely Thomas remained with him, and for his ſake ſhunned no Enterprize, how dangerous ſoever. But Bardanius, either terrified by the predictions of the Monk, or, as our Writers ſay, abhorring that a Civil War ſhould riſe upon his account, ſent to Nicephorus to beg pardon, upon promiſe of which he departed to Catabolium, and in the Monaſtery of Heraclius, received the Tonſure. The Emperour ſent after him to come to Conſtantinople, under ſhew of kindneſs, but in the way, in the Iſland Prote (or the Firſt Iſland) where he had built a Monaſtery, by Order of the Emperour, his Eyes were put out by certain Lycaonians. The Emperour pretended he was very ſorry for the thing, which by Oath he affirmed done without his knowledge or command. But if we may believe Cedrenus, he never ſwore truly in his Life.

Is very covetous.

Anna'. part. 4.

Exacts the Diceratum.

Ceratium duodecim folles ſive numulos continet.

Cedrenus.

Upon which Bardanius uſurps.

Theoph.

But afterwards is ſhaven.

And his Eyes put out by the Emperour's order.

4. Nicephorus, having thus ſecured himſelf from Bardanius, reſolved farther to eſtabliſh his Houſe, by Crowning Emperour his Son Stauracius, a Man neither in Body or Mind qualified for ſuch a Dignity, as our Authours write. Being thus ſetled at home, he made War upon the Arabians, but with ſuch bad ſucceſs, that he narrowly eſcaped taking, being hardly reſcued out of the Enemies hands by ſome of his ſtouteſt followers, and with loſs and diſgrace was conſtrained to return. The next year, or the third of his Reign, being at leiſure, he applied himſelf to the building of Towns, as Ancyra in Galatia, together with two others, Theba and Andraſus. But the following Summer he had diverſion enough given him, and his mind was ſufficiently ſtartled, by News that Aaron, the Captain of the Arabians, had invaded the Roman Territories, with no fewer than three hundred thouſand Men, and having marched as far as Tyana, there erected a Moſche or Houſe to his ſuperſtition. Many fortified places he took, and a Body of ſixty thouſand ſent toward Ancyra, which waſted all the Countrey as far as that City. Nicephorus gathering together his Forces, took alſo the Field, but finding the Arabian

He Crowns Stauracius his Son.

Makes War upon the Arabians.

Cedrenus ad Ann. 3. Nicephori.

Idem ad An. 4.

Who returning his viſit,

The Emperour expoſtulates.

“ Arabian too ſtrong for him wrote to him a Letter; whereby he taxed him with “ injuſtice for invading another Man's Territories, not contenting himſelf with “ what was left him by his Father. He demanded by whoſe command he did it.
“ Mahomet his Prophet he ſaid commanded him to love all Chriſtians as his Bre“ thren, Almighty God took care for both, and was not delighted with the “ bloud of Man unjuſtly ſhed. He could not come to hurt thoſe that did him no “ injury, for any want he had of Gold, Silver or other matters, having abun“ dance of pretious things and Rarities of his own; but in caſe any thing he had “ would ſupply him he would lovingly ſend it. He concluded his Letter by put“ ting him in mind that they were both Mortal, and being to die e'er long, “ ſhould be called before an higher Judge, by whoſe award each was to receive ac“ cording to what he had deſerved whether good or bad.

And by Preſents obtains a Peace.

Which being broken, the Arabian makes another Invaſion into the Roman Territories.

Zonaras. Theoph.

Nicephorus Marrys his Son to another Man's Wife.

5. To this Letter he added conſiderable Preſents, by which the Arabian was ſo charmed that he condeſcended to a Peace on theſe terms, That the Romans ſhould pay the Arabians a yearly Tribute of thirty thouſand Nomiſmata, beſides three thouſand as Tribute for his own Head, and as many for that of his Son, and ſuch Forts as the Arabians had taken and diſmantled ſhould in no wiſe be repaired. But Aaron being retreated, Nicephorus rebuilt and reinforced all theſe places which ſo irritated the Arabian, that this very year he ſent an Army which took Theba, and another by Sea to Cyprus, where it overthrew the Churches, and either killing or driving away the Inhabitants, plundered and waſted the Iſland. The year following he invaded the Iſle of Rhodes, where was taken a great Number of Priſoners, but the Caſtle was ſtoutly defended by the Garriſon, and the Fleet in its return ſuffered much damage by an hideous Tempeſt, which our Writers attribute to the violence they purpoſed to offer to the Relicks of St. Nicholas at Myra a City of Lycia in their return. Nicephorus in the mean time was employed in the Marriage of his Son Stauracius, for whom when he looked for a Wife he made choice of Theophania the Kinſwoman of the late Empreſs Irene, though ſhe was contracted to another man. To this unjuſt act he added the deflouring of two moſt beautifull Virgins, which ſo incenſed the People, that ſeveral Conſpiracies were hatched againſt him, but he ſuppreſſed them e'er they could produce any thing conſiderable, and raged cruelly againſt ſuch as were detected. Many of the Nobility made choice of Arſatius a Queſtour and Patritian for their Prince, but he having ſmelt out the deſign cauſed the Man to be ſhaven, and enter into Religion, which done, he baniſhed him into Bithynia. Of the Conſpiratours ſome he put to death, others he baniſhed, and of ſome he confiſcated the Eſtates, ſparing none of what condition ſoever, whether Biſhops, Monks, or the Officers of the Great Church, in thoſe times held in great Veneration by the People.

The Bulgarians take Sardica.

Which cauſes a new Tribute to be impoſed on the People.

The Saracens make an Inroad into the Roman Pale.

Nicephorus makes an Expedition againſt the Bulgarians.

6. The year following being the ſeventh of his Reign the Bulgarians gave him farther trouble, intercepting eleven hundred pounds of Gold wherewith the Army was to be paid at Stragmon, and killing the Convoy with its Captain. At the ſame time Crumus their Prince took Sardica, and therein put to the Sword ſix thouſand Souldiers, beſides Towneſmen a little before the Feaſt of Eaſter. Nicephorus went with an Army againſt him, but performed nothing worth the mentioning, onely ſuch Officers as had eſcaped the hands of Crumus he handled ſo roughly, that he conſtrained them to revolt to him. Being returned to Conſtantinople he impoſed upon the City a new Tribute for the repairing of Sardica, which vehemently incenſed the People, ſo as to caſt the Multitude into great Tumults, but he ſtill had the better of them, and revenged himſelf by Executions and Baniſhments, as he had done before; and laid upon all the People moſt grievous, heavy, and unheard-of Impoſitions. Some of this Wealth obtained by violence, was as violently taken away by the Saracens, who making an Inroad into the Roman Territories as far as Euchaita, fell upon Leo the Captain of the Armenians as he was going to pay the Army, and took from him Sixteen Talents, a thouſand and three hundred Pounds, beſides the ſlaughter of a great Multitude of his Souldiers. This happened in February, and in July following Nicephorus undertook an Expedition againſt the Bulgarians, with Stauracius his Son, at parting giving order to Nicetas the Patritian and general Logotheta to lay Taxes upon Churches and Monaſteries, with an Impoſition of eight years upon the Houſes of Noblemen, which cauſed great Lamentations in the City. Hereof when he was admoniſhed by Theodoſius Salibarn a Patritian and the Manager of his Affairs, who told him how the People murmured and would be glad he came by any miſchief. If God hath hardened mine heart as he hardened Pharoah's, what good may my Subjects jects expect from Nicephorus? And he bade him expect no alteration of what he ſaw at preſent. This Theophanes proteſts he had from Theodoſius his own Mouth.

Refuſing Peace.

7. Having gathered together the Forces both of the Eaſt and the Weſt, and conſtrained many poor men to ſerve at their own Charges armed with Slings and Staves, with their Curſes and the Curſes of the whole Army he marched into Bulgaria. Crumus having notice of his coming ſent to him while he yet lay at Marcella to deſire Peace, fearing ſuch a Multitude as he brought along with him; but overcome hy his own Inclinations, as well as by the Flatteries of thoſe about him, he rejected his Propoſals, and on the twentieth day of July about the riſing of the Dog-ſtar invaded the Countrey, himſelf predicting his own ruine, for he had theſe words often in his Mouth. Who ſhall go and deceive Ahab? Whether God or the Devil draw me, I am drawn unwilling. And this was accounted an ill Omen, that before he entred Bulgaria, a much beloved Servant he had, called Byzantius, fled to Crumus from Marcella, carrying away with him the Imperial Robe and an hundred Pounds of Gold. At firſt he ſeemed to have the better, yet aſcribed the ſucceſs not to God, but cryed up the Conduct and good fortune of Stauracius. Such Commanders as withſtood his Progreſs, he exceedingly threatened and commanded all living Creatures to be put to the Sword, and neglecting to bury the Bodies of the ſlain, was onely intent upon Plunder and Booty. The Court or Palace of Crumus he took and ſealed up the Doors thereof as his own, and ſuch of his Followers as imbezelled any of the Booty he puniſhed by cutting off their Ears and other Members. Crumus now again being much out of heart offered him good terms, on condition he would quit his Countrey. But he puffed up with his ſucceſs and acted by covetous deſires, was impatient of the very name of Peace.

Waſtes the Countrey.

Taking the very palace of Crumus their King.

But is overcome at laſt and ſlain.

8. Crumus therefore acted by the more prevalent paſſion of deſperation, like a deſperate man indeed, inſtead of opening a way to the Enemy, blocked up all egreſs and regreſs by Paliſado's, which ſo affrighted the Emperour that he preſaged his ruine, ſaying, That if they had Wings they could not eſcape imminent deſtruction. Two days after Crumus ſet upon his Camp, and ſtormed it, wherein Nicephorus himſelf was ſlain, together with all his Officers, and a vaſt number of Souldiers. Here fell Aetius, Peter Siſinnius, Theodoſius Sabbaras, and Triphiles, all Patritians, as alſo Eparchus a Patritian and Governour of the Eaſt; with many Protoſpatharii, the Excubitus Domeſticus, the Captains of the ſeveral Troops, the Drungarius of the Imperial Watch, the Governour of Thracia, with the other Governours of the Provinces. All the Arms and Baggage were alſo taken, and ſo miſerable was the Eſtate of the Empire at this day, that the Writer thinks it not fit to be underſtood by Chriſtians, as exceeding all height of lamentation. The Head of Nicephorus he put upon a Pole, and when he thought he had ſufficiently expoſed it, incloſed the Skull in Silver and cauſed his Nobles in an inſulting manner to drink out of it. Although this day were made many Widows and Fatherleſs Children, yet many love it the better, and were ſomething comforted with this onely thought that he was dead. For as Theophanes affirms, never did Chriſtians feel any thing more inſupportable than his Government, exceeding all that Reigned before him in Ambition, Luxury, and barbarous Cruelties, ſo as to declare all in particular to poſterity would ſeem incredible, and to him laborious.

Nicephorus his Character.

9. But Cedrenus gives us the main of his Accuſation in ten Particulars. “The firſt is, That he conſtrained his Subjects out of all Quarters to remove into Slavonia, and afterward ſold their former Poſſeſſions, which thing nothing differed from an Hoſtile Captivity, all of them being put to the utmoſt extremity. The next was, That he cauſed poor men to ſerve in the Wars, and their Neighbours to ſupply them with Arms and Money, eighteen Nomiſmata for each, and beſides pay for them their publick Taxes, which they called in Greek Allelengium, becauſe for Tribute they were Sponſors or Sureties one for another. The third Crime was, That he commanded an account to be taken of every Man's Eſtate, and the Owner accordingly to be taxed; moreover, for the Auditour or Accomptant every man to pay (for every Nomiſma, ſaith Zonaras) two Ceratia. In the fourth place all Eaſements and Relaxations formerly granted he took away. In the fifth, from all Religious places, publick Houſes, deſtined to the Educations of Orphans, and all ſorts of Hoſpitals, he cauſed to be exacted Smoke or Hearth money, even from the beginning of his Reign. The beſt of what belonged to theſe Places he ſeized to his own uſe, yet made them

Τὰ καπνικὰ ἀπαιτεῖσθαι, ita Cedrenus. Zonaræ dicitur ἡ τοῦ καπνικοῦ ἐπίθεσις.

“ pay for what was left, and ſome double, though he had ſo emptied thoſe Houſes
“ that they were conſtrained to remove out of them. His ſixth Tyrannical “ Practice was to cauſe his Officers to take an account of ſuch as were grown “ ſuddenly Rich, and to exact money from them in ſuch manner, as if they had “ found Treaſure. Nay, in the ſeventh place from ſuch as had found but a Barrel
“ or Veſſel twenty years before, he would ſqueeze money. His eighth Crime “ was, that thoſe who received any Inheritances from their Grandfathers or “ Great Grandfathers, he would force to pay ſomething to the Treaſury, though
“ the Inheritance had been divided twenty years before; and ſuch as bought any “ Slaves beyond Abidus, he conſtrained to pay for each two Nomiſmata, eſpecially
“ the Inhabitants of Dodecaneſum or the City of twelve Iſlands. His ninth “ that he made the Mariners and Seamen, eſpecially thoſe inhabiting the Maritime “ parts of Aſia the leſs, ſuch as never were practiſed in Husbandry, to buy ſuch “ grounds as he had taken from other Men, and pay him Rent. In the tenth “ place he ſummoned all the eminent Seamen of Conſtantinople together, and to “ each delivered twelve Pounds of Gold, with this burthen, that for every Numiſma
“ they ſhould pay four Ceratia for uſe, when at the ſame time they paid
“ all the other Duties for their Veſſels.

10. Thus much Cedrenus tells us, he delivers by way of Compendium, having omitted the manifold Injuries he did both to Perſons of high and low condition in the City, being more than can be written, but ſuch as theſe. The Slaves of Rich men he ſuborned falſly to accuſe their Maſters, rewarding the Accuſers and fleecing their Maſters of their Wealth. So rapacious he grew, that a certain man who living in the Forum ſold Honey and Wax by Retail, and by his own labour and induſtry had acquir'd competent Wealth, being ſent for he commanded to lay his hand under the Emperour's Head, and by Oath aſſure him how much Gold he had. He confeſſed he had an hundred Pounds of Gold, which he cauſed him ſpeedily to bring to him. This being done, to what purpoſe (ſaith he) ſhouldſt thou be at all this trouble? Dine with me, and taking home with thee an hundred Numiſma's, therewith be contented. He adds, that being much addicted to the Manichees, and rejoycing at the difference of Churchmen, he ſcoffed at all Chriſtians that loved their Neighbours. His Captains he commanded to uſe Biſhops and Clerks no otherwiſe than like Slaves, to make uſe of their Houſes and all their Goods at their pleaſure, deriding thoſe that dedicated any thing to Holy uſes. All Emperours that were before him, he taxed as ignorant in the Art of Government, took away Providence, and affirmed that none was greater than the Emperour if he had but the Craft of Government. Such is the Character Cedrenus gives us of this Emperour, with whom agrees Zonaras as to the ſubſtance of the Charge. He Reigned eight years and nine days, as ſome have it, or as others more truly eight Years, eight Months, and ſix and twenty days.

Stauracius ſucceeds.

11. Nicephorus being ſlain, Stauracius his Son eſcaped but with a deadly wound received in his Neck, and in his Litter came to Adrianople, where by the endeavours of ſome Magiſtrates he was ſaluted Emperour, but could not appear in publick by reaſon of his Wound. Senſible of his condition he reſolved to devolve the Empire upon Theophania his Wife, ſo great affection he bore unto her, and upon that account endeavoured to deprive of his ſight Michael, ſirnamed Rangabes, or Rancabes, the Curopalata, who had Married his Siſter Procopia, becauſe he ſtood moſt in the opinion of the Nobility for the Dignity. But Michael having timely notice of it ſo wrought with the Senatours, that calling together the Souldiers by break of day they named him Emperour in the Cirque, which when Stauracius knew he quitted the Palace, and with his Wife betook himſelf to a Monaſtery, where having taken upon him the Habit, he ſhortly after died, having been Emperour but two Months and ten Days. Michael at firſt ſeemed ſhie of the preferment, profeſſing himſelf unable to undergo ſuch a burthen, and made mention of Leo the Armenian, a Patritian, and Captain of the Forces of the Eaſt, as a couragious and valiant man; but Leo ſtrained Courteſie, profeſſing himſelf unworthy of the Throne, which he affirmed to belong to Michael, whom he exhorted to undertake the Government, promiſing him by Oath his utmoſt aſſiſtence, and that he would be his ready and faithfull Servant to his lives end. Thus whether at firſt he indeavoured to be Emperour merely to preſerve his Life, or diſſembled his Ambition in the offer made to Leo (which for what end ſoever proved of dangerous conſequence, as we ſhall ſee anon) he obtained the Diademe, wherewith he was Crowned in the great Church by Nicephorus the Patriarch, after he had by an Inſtrument written on purpoſe declared, that he would neither violate the Privileges of the Church, nor defile his Hands with Chriſtian Bloud, in the Eleventh year of Charles the Great, Emperour of the Weſt, the ſixteenth of Pope Leo the Third, the fourth Indiction. A. D. DCCCXI.

But turning Monk.

Michael Rangabes obtained the Diademe.

Zonaras.

12. He hath the Commendation of a Pious and good natur'd Perſon, ſuch as had been injured by Nicephorus, he relieved and provided for the Widows of Souldiers. Theophania the Wife of Stauracius, he courteouſly treated, giving her a good Summ of Money together with an Houſe which ſhe turned into a Monaſtery, and from the Burial of her Husband in it bore his Name. Idem. A few days after his Coronation he cauſed Procopia his Wife to be adorned alſo with the Diademe,having given her the Title of Empreſs; and after ſome time commanded the Patriarch to perform the ſame Ceremony to Theophylact his Son, whom he alſo dignified with that of Emperour, and propounded a Marriage for him, Theophanes writes to Charles King of the Franks. This Charles muſt be no other than Charles the Great, as we reade in the Annals of the Franks, ſent an Embaſſie to Nicephorus, for Confirmation of the Peace betwixt the two Empires. The Ambaſſadours were Hatto Biſhop of Baſil, Hugh a Count, Aio a Lombard of Forumjulii, Leo the Spatharius, a Sicilian by birth, and Wilharius Duke of Venice. Coming to Conſtantinople they found Nicephorus dead, and therefore tranſacted their matters with Michael, who was ſo ready to entertain their overtures, that he ſent his Ambaſſadours with them at their return to Charles, whom finding at Aquiſgranum, they complemented in behalf of their Maſter. Their Names were Michael a Biſhop, and Theognoſtus, both Protoſpatharii, from whom Charles having received their meſſage, the Spring following ſent other Ambaſſadours to their Maſter for farther Eſtabliſhment of the Peace, viz. Amalharius Biſhop of Triers and Peter Abbat of Nonantula in Italy, both of them men famous for Learning in that Age; but coming to Conſtantinople, they found not him then in the Throne, but Leo who ſucceeded him, by whom they were heard, and diſmiſſed together with Ambaſſadours from him to Charles upon the ſame errand.

Makes his Son Theophylact Emperour with him.

13. But to return to Michael, not long after his Promotion he was ingaged in War on ſeveral Hands. The Agarens or Saracens made Inrodes into the Eaſtern Provinces, but were repelled by Leo the Armenian who governed thoſe parts, who in one battel ſlew of them two thouſand men, and got many Horſes with other booty. Crumus Prince of the Bulgarians took up Arms with more ſucceſs, having received a repulſe in a matter which he demanded. Some of that Nation leaving their former Habitations, had with this Emperour's leave ſetled themſelves within the Roman Territories. Hereby ſome better underſtanding than formerly there had been between the Subjects of both; but it happened that ſome Romans, who in the former Wars had been taken by the Bulgarians, broke Priſon and returned home. Theſe Crumus demanded to be ſent back, and ſome were for gratifying him in this particular, amongſt whom the Emperour and ſeveral Religious Perſons of great account, believing this would prevent the uſual hoſtile Incurſions of the Bulgarians. But many others were of the contrary opinion, and of them the chiefeſt were Nicephorus the Patriarch, with Theoctiſtus the Maſter, as Cedrenus calls him, a Man of mighty eſteem for his Vertue and Wiſedom, who urged that they were to truſt to God's Aſſiſtence, and not by giving up the Fugitives to gratify the pride and inſolence of the Barbarians. Crumus alſo required, that the Articles made formerly by Mediation of Theodoſius of Adrymitium, and Germanus the Patriarch might be obſerved, elſe he threatned to fall upon Meſymbria. But Michael by advice of thoſe about him, denying to gratiſy him in all,he accordingly fell upon Meſymbria,uſing in the Battery of the City the Skill and Induſtry of a certain Arabian,excellently skilled in the framing of Engines, who having formerly betaken himſelf to the ſervice of Nicephorus, was ſo ill treated by him that he fled over to the Bulgarians, and inſtructed them in all ſorts of Machines. Zonaras writes, that Nicephorus the Patriarch and the Churchmen, were for the delivering up of the Fugitives, alledging that a few were to be ſacrificed to the publick ſafety; but the Senatours, Courtiers, and Theodorus Studites vehemently oppoſed their Delivery, by whom the Emperour was governed, being a Perſon by nature mild, and Orthodox, but ſlow in buſineſs, and eaſie to be led to any thing which his Officers deſigned.

Repells the invading Saracens.

Zonaras.

Cedrenus.

Κὶα ὁ μάγιςρος Θεοκτίςος ἐπ' ἀρετῇ ϗ συνέσει πρωτεύων τῶν τότε.

The Bulgarians fall upon Meſymbria.

Zonaras.

14. Now is a Comet ſaid to appear in divers ſhapes, and amongſt the reſt of a Man without an Head; this probably having little other Foundation than in the Fancies of Men, who in ſeeing the ſhapes of Clouds as in ringing of Bells, may work their imaginations to any poſture or ſound they pleaſe. But Crumus takes Meſymbria,and waſtes the Weſtern Parts of the Empire with Fire and Sword. Hereupon upon the Emperour ſends out his Orders for raiſing of Men, and haſtes into Thrace, his Wiſe accompanying him as far as Cedoctum, at which his Souldiers murmured and reviled him, that he was forc'd to ſend her back. Crumus having notice of his coming drew back his Men from their Depredations, and Michael coming into Thrace, ſuffered his Men to behave themſelves ſo diſorderly, that they were as offenſive to the Inhabitants as the Enemy himſelf, which procured the Emperour no ſmall prejudice. Crumus fortified himſelf againſt his coming not far from Adrianople, and after his ſitting down near to his Camp began to ſkirmiſh; but in theſe the Romans ſtill had the better, and therewith were ſo elevated, that with great earneſtneſs and impatience they required a Battel, which the Emperour either out of fear or for good reaſon deferring till he could have a good advantage, differing they grew mutinous, and upbraided him with ſawcy and importune Clamours, threatning that except they were led forth, they would break out, and of their own accord attack the Enemy. Michael being thus conſtrained to doe it led them forth, and put them into a Poſture for a Fight, which Crumus perceiving ordered his men alſo according to the Cuſtome of his Nation, and to blows they came. The Bulgarians had plainly the worſt of it, and were ſo overpowered by the Valour of their Enemies, that they were about to run, Crumus their Captain having even ſpent himſelf with riding to and fro, and by his preſence and ſpeech labouring to reinforce the Battel, when Leo the Captain of the Eaſt, whoſe Ambition was now come to maturity, cauſed his Squadron to leave the reſt and depart the Field, no hardſhip or neceſſity at all urging him to it. This ſight utterly diſmayed thoſe that were ſo hotly ingaged, and as much incouraged the Bulgarians, whom at firſt Crumus reſtrained from purſuit, believing it was ſome Strategeme, and done of purpoſe to draw them into ſome greater danger. But ſeeing the Romans flye without all order, or any ſtop, he then inforced the purſuit, and made great ſlaughter of them. The Emperour with much difficulty eſcaped to Adrianople, and thence got to Conſtantinople, with a ſlender Equipage, leaving Leo behind him in Thrace, to protect the Countrey and repreſs the Incurſions of the Barbarians.

And in a Battel through the Treachery of Leo rout the Emperour.

15. He being gone, Leo, who had already prepared the minds of his Souldiers by declaiming againſt him as an effeminate, unskilfull and cowardly man, now more openly diſcovered his Deſign. Conſulting with his Officers, and concluding he had now a good opportunity, he ſent abroad his Emiſſaries to tell through the whole Army, how ſilly and unexperienced the Emperour was, and that by his ignorance in warlike matters the Roman Forces had been defeated, and their ancient glory and fame eclipſed, or rather quite extinguiſhed. By this means the minds of the Souldiers were corrupted, and ſuch as he could pick up he joyned to his own Troops, and perſwaded them to revolt from Michael. On the other ſide theſe Agitatours cried up the Ability and Integrity of Leo, as a man born to preſerve the Roman Name and Empire, and they cauſed the Souldiers to compaſs about his Tent, and having reviled and renounced the other to ſalute him Emperour. He pretended great unwillingneſs, nay, ſo pertinacious ſeemed he to be in the refuſal, that Michael Traulus or Balbus the Stammerer one of his Principal Officers drawing his Sword, and cauſing thoſe with him that were of the conſpiracy to doe the like, threatned to kill him, except he would accept of the Empire. When the Report of his having aſſumed the Title came to Michael, ſome would have perſwaded him to buckle himſelf to a vigorous reſiſtence, and ſuppreſs the Uſurper; but being of a quiet diſpoſition, he refuſed to caſt himſelf into ſo great danger, and reprehended thoſe ſharply that inſtigated him on to a Civil War, to the deſtruction of many innocent Perſons. By ſome of his intimate Friends, he ſent to Leo the Diademe, Purple and Scarlet ſhooes (Enſigns of the Empire) whereby he might ſee that he quitted the Dignity, as one ready alſo to part with his life, rather than that upon his account one drop of Chriſtian bloud ſhould be ſhed, and he bad him without all fear or doubt to come and take Poſſeſſion of the Palace. Procopia his Wife being a Woman of an high Spirit, vehemently indeavoured to perſwade him to the contrary, nay, rather to dye than ſo quit the Imperial Throne, but to no purpoſe.

Leo ſaluted Emperour by the Souldiers.

Hath the Diademe and other Enſigns ſent him by Michael.

16. So write our Hiſtorians generally concerning this change and promotion of Leo, that it was accompliſht by his own Arts, through his Inſinuations, his crafty and fraudulent Suggeſtions againſt Michael. Yet the Hiſtory of Theophanes attributes the fall of Michael to his own Imprudence, aſſigning the contempt and hatred of his Perſon, to his oppreſſing his Subjects by the Army he had raiſed againſt Crumus. It ſaith nothing of Leo's tampering with the Souldiers, but on the contrary, that when Michael after the Defeat would have reſigned to him, he refuſed it. But Michael being firm in his reſolution to lay down, notwithſtanding for ſome time he was hindred by his Wife and Sons, and quitting the City, the Magiſtrates and People earneſtly implored his aſſiſtence, for the ſaving of both Church and State from Ruine. He as earneſtly refuſed, conſidering the difficulty of the times, the continual Incurſions and Violence of the Barbarians, and being unſhaken in his Fidelity to the Emperour. But perceiving the Enemy to draw nigh the City, he ſent to Necephorus the Patriarch who was much for his advancement, and deſiring his Prayers, with the Magiſtrates and Souldiers went to the Tribunal raiſed without the City, and there was declared lawfull Emperour of the Romans. Michael having notice hereof, went with Procopia his Wife and his Children to the Oratory of Pharus, where being ſhaven he put on the Monaſtical Habit on the Eleventh of July in the ſixth Indiction, and on the ſecond day of the week. Thus relates the matter the Hiſtory of Theophanes, who lived at this time, and was an Eye-witneſs of all theſe paſſages. But ſome ſay he brought down his Hiſtory but to the end of Nicephorus, ſo that this muſt not be his but the addition of ſome other who favoured Leo, and concealed his ambitious practices in obtaining the Empire. However it came to paſs, Michael laid down the Purple after he had reigned one Year, nine Months, and as many Days.

Who turns Monk.

17. Leo the Armenian began his Reign on the ſeventh day of July, in the thirteenth year of the Reign of Charles the Great, the eighteenth of Pope Leo the Third, the ſixth Indiction, A. D. DCCCXIII. However he firſt obtained the Government; having once obtained it, he took care for the ſecuring of it to himſelf. Michael he parted from his Wife and Children, ſending him away to the Iſland Prota to the Monaſtery there, where he ſpent the remainder of his Days; and Theophylact his Eldeſt Son, they ſay he Gelded, and then Baniſhed him with his Mother and Brothers. Michael Balbus, or the Stammerer, he promoted to the Degree of a Patritian and Count of the Schola Excubitorum, and to Thomas his other Fellow-ſervant he gave the Command of the Confederate Forces. The Bulgarians at this time were puſt up with their late Victory, and made Incurſions afreſh in Thrace, where without controll they waſted all things. Leo not well ſetled in his Seat, thought it beſt at preſent to reſtrain their Hoſtilities by good words, and ſent Ambaſſadours to Crumus, who thinking he had much the advantage of the Romans, refuſed to entertain any reaſonable Propoſitions, and ſent the Ambaſſadours back without having any thing obtained. The Emperour hereby forced to take Arms, omitted nothing to ſtrengthen himſelf, and Marched againſt the Enemy. Ingaging in a great and bloudy Battel, the Bulgarians had much the better, and having routed the Romans, gave the Chaſe in great diſorder, which Leo perceiving, who ſtood upon an Hill, with a Reſerve fell down with great violence upon them, renewed the Battel, and got a notable Victory. Many were ſlain, and more taken Priſoners. Crumus himſelf hardly eſcaped, for having received a Wound by an Arrow, and beaten from his Horſe, he had quickly faln into the Hands of his Enemies but that he was reſcued, and ſet upon another Horſe by the more than ordinary Valour and Induſtry of his Guard. This Victory very much repreſſed the Inſolence of the Bulgarians, and kept them within their Bounds ſome time after; and on the other ſide raiſed up the drooping Spirits of the Romans, whom the Valour of their Anceſtours had in a manner forſaken. Leo in Triumph with great Spoils and many Captives returned to Conſtantinople.

Leo begins his reign.

Baniſhing Michael,

And Gelding his Son.

Zonaras. Cedrenus.

Beats the Bulgarians.

18. After this our Hiſtorians very much revile him as Heretical and Cruel, becauſe he oppoſed vigorouſly the Worſhipping of Images. Otherwiſe they confeſs he was a moſt Vigilant and Induſtrious Prince in Reforming what was amiſs in the State, omitting nothing that might tend to the benefit and advantage of it; ſo that Nicephorus the Patriarch whom he had Baniſhed from his See, and out of reſpect to matters of Religion was his utter Enemy, yet when he heard he was Dead, confeſſed that the Common-wealth had loſt an ungodly, but however a Great and conſiderable Governour. As he was very exact in ordering his matters of State, ſo very ſevere againſt flagitious Perſons. On a time as he paſſed out of his Court a certain Man met him, and complained that his Wife was taken away from him by a Senatour, of which he had complained to the Governour of the City, but could have no redreſs of the Injury. Leo commanded that at his return ſhould appear before him both the Complainant, the Criminal, and the Judge. By Evidence the Senatour was ſo preſſed, that he confeſſed ſeſſed the Fact; and the Judge being asked why he had not puniſhed ſo heinous a Crime, was ſilent, as having no excuſe. The Judge therefore the Emperour diſcharged of his Place, and ordered the Adulterer to be puniſhed according to the Laws. Moſt commonly Leo heard Cauſes himſelf. The Officers of his Army, his Souldiers, and all ſorts of Magiſtrates he choſe merely for their Worth and Abilities, no Place being purchaſed for Money or any other Conſideration than that of Merit, in his time, for he was a great contemner of Money. He endeavoured alſo after ſeveral Accompliſhments, as that of the Voice, though not naturally fitted for Muſical Exerciſes, and he himſelf was wont to begin the Pſalms in the Church, eſpecially at Chriſtmaſs. In concluſion, he was one of the beſt, if not the very beſt Prince of this Age in this declining ſtate of the Empire; and had he not been againſt the Worſhipping of Images, in many words and much flouriſh by our Writers who were of the contrary opinion, for ſuch an one would have been acknowledged.

His Character.

Ὡς ἡ πολιτεία Ῥωμαίων ἄρα εἰ ϗ δυσσεβῆ, ἀλλά γε μέγαν προστάτην ἀπώλεσε. Cedrenus.

Χρημάτων ὑπερόπτης ὢν ϗ αὐτὸς ἀκριβέστατος.

19. That Jealouſie, and conſequently Cruelty was not his fault appears from this, that want of ſufficient caution procured his Ruine. Michael of Amorium the Stammerer (as we ſaid) he had preferred, and as it proved to that height, that he grew proud and inſolent; and as it often happens to ſuch as have done eminent Service to Princes in obtaining their Crowns, imagining that he could never be ſufficiently requited, nor commit any offence which the reputation of his former Services would not expiate. Being amongſt other vices very laviſh of his Tongue, and not able to conceal any part of his mind, he firſt began to talk againſt the Emperour, and at length threatned to deprive him, and Marry the Empreſs. The Emperour being informed of his Diſcourſes, at firſt reſolved to diſſemble the matter, and take no notice, knowing him to be very laviſh of his Tongue. But afterwards he let him know that he was ſenſible of his opprobrious language, which he would deny, and then fall into the ſame fault again. Leo therefore reſolving not to be wanting to his own ſafety, ſet ſome Spies upon him to obſerve him more ſtrictly, that they might give Evidence againſt him, and amongſt the reſt there was one Enabulius very familiar with them both, who would often reprehend him, and admoniſh him of the danger into which thoſe intemperate Diſcourſes would bring him; but ſeeing he was not to be reclaimed, he made the Emperour acquainted with all his Deſigns, which in his drink he eaſily diſcovered. Leo then not thinking fit to delay any longer, on Chriſtmas-Eve ſate himſelf in Judgement and heard his Accuſers, by whom he was evidently convicted of Treaſon; and having not been able to deny the ſame, had Judgment to be Burnt alive. The Priſoner is bound, and on his way to the place of Execution, when the Empreſs Theodoſia having notice of it, runs out of her Apartment in the Palace like a Diſtracted Woman, lays hold upon her Husband, and calls him wicked, and an Enemy to God, in that he would have no reſpect to that Holy time, wherein he was alſo to partake of the Bleſſed Sacrament. Leo was moved with her words and paſſion, and fearing to offend Almighty God, reſpited the Execution, and commanded him to be kept by one Papia, with Shackles on his Legs, whereof he himſelf would keep the Key. But turning to his Wife, he told her he had done what ſhe had deſired, being overcome with her Frantick paſſions; but ſhe and her Children would find at length what would be the Iſſue of it.

Michael Balbus condemned for Treaſon is reſpited from Execution.

Οὗτοι δὲ τῷ Θεῷ προσκροῦσαι δεδοικώς.

But is ſtill miſtruſted by the Emperour Leo.

20. So intent was he upon this matter, and as our Writers affirm, ſo terrified by ſeveral ſigns portending his Deſtruction, that the following Night he could not ſleep, but to ſecure himſelf of the Traitour, broke into the Houſe of Papia, where, to his great wonder, he ſaw him beſtowed in a very fair and coſtly Bed, Papia lying by on the bare Floor, and ſo faſt aſleep, that with no jogging or ſtirring could he awake him, a thing not incident to thoſe that expect nothing but death. With this ſight he was ſo vexed, that he reſolved on the Deſtruction both of the Priſoner and his Keeper. But Papia got knowledge of his coming by one of the Watch, who knew him by his purple Buskins, and obſerved narrowly his behaviour, and having told to Michael the extreme danger they were now joyntly in, as deſperate Men they conſulted how to extricate themſelves. Michael pretended by the means of one Theoctiſtus to come to conference with certain Religious Perſons about the eſtate of his Soul, to which the Emperour being not averſe, when Theoctiſtus had liberty to come to him, inſtead of providing for his Soul he took care for his Body, cauſing him to go to his fellow Conſpiratours and to threaten them, that except they would enter into ſome ſudden den and effectual courſe for his deliverance he would Diſcover them all to Leo.

21. Theſe Men being very much ſtartled, ventured upon this courſe to reſcue him, and preſerve themſelves. It was the Cuſtome then, that ſuch Clerks as Sung in the Emperour's Chapel did not (as afterward) lye in the Court, but each at his own Houſe, whence about the third Watch of the Night they all met at the Ivory Gate, and by that entring the Palace, ſo went to perform the Morning Service. With theſe the Conſpiratours mixed themſelves, and carrying their weapons hid under their Cloths, entred the place, and in an obſcure part of the Church hid themſelves till the ſign was given. One part of the Service being done, in comes the Emperour according to his Cuſtome, and with a loud Voice begins his uſual * Anthem, when they take the advantage, but by miſtake fell upon the Dean of the Chapel, or he that † Preſided over the Clerks, either becauſe his Head was covered as the Emperour's was, for it being then a great Froſt they all wore warmer Hoods, but he quickly uncovered himſelf, and by ſhewing to them his bald Pate ſaved his Life. The Emperour perceiving the matter, conveyed himſelf to the Altar, and there with the chain of the Incenſe Pot, or as ſome ſaid, with the Croſs, defended himſelf as well as he could: but they all ruſhing upon him together, ſome wounded him in the Head, others in the Belly, and others in other Parts, till overpowered by the Number, though he demeaned himſelf moſt ſtoutly, like an Hart at a Bay, he was at length knock'd down: Perceiving one of a vaſt ſtature to fetch a blow at him, he conjured him by that Grace which inhabited the Sacred place to ſpare him, but he anſwering that this was a time for killing and not conjuring, cut off his Hand, together with the Horn of the Croſs. At length, ſpent with wounds, and falling to the ground, one of them ſtruck off his Head; and to ſuch an end came Leo, after he had Reigned ſeven years five months and fourteen days. In a Book of Predictions belonging to the Emperours Library, is ſaid to have been an Oracle of Sibylla, expreſſed in an Hieroglyphical way, by a Lion, from the Back of which, as low as the Belly, was drawn the Greek Letter X and a Man, who ſtanding behind the Lion, thruſt a Spear into his Body through the Letter. This obſcure Oracle the Queſtour of old time could alone Interpret, affirming it to ſignifie an Emperour, that being called Leo, ſhould be ſlain on the day of Chriſt's Nativity.

* Τῷ παντάνακτος διεφαύλισαν πόθῳ. Sprevere ſummi cuncta amore Principis.

† Τὸν τοῦ κλήρου ἔξαρχον.

Who is Murthered by the Conſpiratours.

22. The Body of the ſlain Prince the Conſpiratours cruelly dragged into the Cirque, being void of all manner of fear, for that they ſet a guard about the Court, out of which they preſently caſt the Empreſs, together with her four Sons, Sabbatius, to whom, being deſigned Emperour, was given the Name of Conſtantine, Baſil, Gregory, and Theodoſius, all which, putting into a Boat for the preſent, they ſent packing into the Iſland Prota, and there cauſed them to be gelded, after which Theodoſius ſpeedily died it ſeems of the wound, and was buried with his Father, and Conſtantine thereupon grew dumb; as for their Mother, ſhe was ſhut up in the Monaſtery of the Lords. But Michael, freed now from his Gaoler Papia, with the Shackles on the Feet (for Leo had got the key) ſate down upon the Imperial Throne, and was ſaluted as Emperour, and worſhipped by all in the Palace. About noon the noiſe was all ſpread abroad, and then, as time it was, were his Bolts knocked off with an Hammer, and without either waſhing his Hands, thinking on God, or doing any thing fitting ſuch an occaſion, he haſted to the Great Church of St. Sophia, deſirous to be Crowned by the Hand of the Patriarch, and received for Emperour by all the People, truſting onely to his fellow Conſpiratours, and the Murtherers of Leo. Here Cedrenus makes a wonder, firſt, that Leo of ſuch and ſo many flatterers ſhould have none to ſtand up in behalf of his cauſe, but like ſo many creeping Animals, each of them betake himſelf to his lurking hole; and at the impudence of Michael, that he ſhould enter the Church, not like ſome Murtherer or Hangman, whoſe Hands were polluted with Bloud, but as ſome Conquerour, who had deſerved the Palm of Victory, and juſtly prized himſelf for ſome notable Atchievement. Whereas he had not ſhed hoſtile but civil Bloud, and that not in an ordinary place, but at the Holy Altar, where the Lord's Bloud was offered for expiation of ſins. This Michael was born at Amorium, a City of the upper Phrygia, and in this manner became Emperour, in the ſeventh year of Ludovick the Son of Charles the Great, Emperour of the Franks in the Weſt, the fourth of Paſchal Biſhop of Rome, in the thirteenth Indiction. A. D. DCCCXX.

His Empreſs caſt out.

And his Sons Gelded.

Michael in his Shackles ſaluted Emperour.

His Character.

23. As he came to his Preferment by Treaſon and Cruelty, as baſely and ignominiouſly he Reigned, ſhewing himſelf to be Emperour, by no other thing than the Diademe and the Purple. All Diſcipline, Order, and rational ways of Adminiſtration, he with great ſcorn rejected, as formal fopperies, but indeed becauſe he knew they would diſcover his folly, and render ridiculous thoſe courſes, his own Inclinations and ſillineſs put him upon. Such as in his mean Eſtate had been his Trade or Exerciſe, now in the higheſt degree of Eminency and Power he eſteemed his beſt qualifications. As (if you will have it in down right terms from Cedrenus) to gueſs and divine, whether * Pigs newly pigged would prove well, if brought up; to be ſkilfull enough to ſtand near to a kicking Horſe or Aſs, to have skill in Mules, whether they would prove better for riding or carrying other burthens. In like manner by the mere look, to be able to tell what Horſes would be good for the Race, and what for the War; the like concerning the fruitfulneſs of Sheep and Cows, the quantity of Milk they were like to give, and the quality of their young newly brought forth. Moſt ingratefull he had been to his firſt Maſter and Benefactour Bardanius, and worſe did he behave himſelf to Leo, whoſe Wife and Children he uſed as we have ſaid, onely allowing them a ſmall pittance to live on out of their great Eſtate he had ſeized, with ſome of his own Servants to attend them. Learning ſo much he abominated, that he would not ſuffer Children therein to be inſtructed, leſt they ſhould be able to underſtand and reſiſt his madneſs, or be able to write more readily than he could, for therein he was ſo ſlow, that another might as ſoon reade a Book as he go over the Letters of his own Name. Such Ignorants as he, have left an evil example to the world; for before the decay of the Roman Empire, and Hogherds and Neatherds came to Arrive at the Sovereign Power, who in their younger years by reaſon of the Poverty of their Parents, had no opportunity to learn, Princes were the beſt inſtructed in Learning, the greateſt care was had to breed them in Philoſoſhy, and they thought it behoved them to excell others, as well in knowledge as in birth and Dignity; but theſe upſtarts, theſe baſe and illiterate Perſons coming to be Emperours, began firſt to decry as mean, uſeleſs, and formal, that to which their ſlender education could never reach, and what they did not underſtand.

* Τὰ τὶῶν, συῶν μὲν τῶν ἀρτιτόκων προλέγειν ὅσοι τε ἔσονται εὐτρεφεῖς, &c.

A Civil War occaſioned by one Thomas.

24. But as ſeldom it happens, but that ſome notable miſchief happens in the Reigns of ſuch ſordid Princes, a Civil War fell out in the Eaſtern Parts, which brought all ſorts of inconveniences upon the World, and conſumed ſo many mortals, that it cauſed a great ſcarcity of Men throughout the Empire. The Authour of it was one Thomas, concerning whoſe birth and condition, there is a difference amongſt Writers. ſome have reported him born of obſcure Parents, Barbarians, and very poor, and that according to his Original he led his Life in his own Countrey, in continual drudgery and hard labour, the onely means of his preſervation. After this he came to Conſtantinople, where he got into the Service of a Senatour, and there plaid ſeveral pranks, being ſo impudent as to defile his Maſter's Bed, which being diſcovered, to ſhun the diſgrace and puniſhment of his crime, he fled to the Agarens (or Saracens) and with them having continued the ſpace of five and twenty years, and approved himſelf by his Actions much unto them, he abjured the Chriſtian Religion, and turning Mahometan, procured the Command of a good Party of Men, and to be ſent againſt the Chriſtians, promiſing to ſubdue the whole Roman Empire to their Authority. And leſt the Romans ſhould be averſe to him as a ſtranger and a man of another Religion, he affirmed himſelf to be Conſtantine their Lawfull Prince, the Son of Irene, whom his Mother had deprived both of his Eyes and Empire, and who before this time had left the World. Others there were that affirmed this Thomas, the ſame with him that ſerved Bardanius, and concerning whom the Monk of Philomelium propheſied, as we ſaid, before, and whom Leo had made Captain of the Confederates; that this Thomas underſtanding Leo to be Murthered by Michael, partly to be revenged on him for the death of his Patron, and partly to ſatisfie his own malice (for from his youth he had ever born ill will to Michael) and out of fear of the Monk's prediction, he now took Arms. Firſt of all he raiſed a great Army in the Eaſt, the place of his abode, liſting all that were able to fight, whereof ſome followed him out of hatred of Michael, who had incurred the contempt of all men, others followed him out of good will, ſome for hope of booty, and thoſe whom none of theſe motives urged, he compelled to give their Names to the enterprize. His advantages were, that in reſpect of the gravity of his aſpect, he was reverenced by all, beſides he was very familiar and fair ſpoken, qualities very very acceptable to Souldiers, and inferiour to no man in ſtrength and courage.

Cedrenus.

25. Having ſeized on the Eaſt, and made ſure of the publick Revenue there, as he began ſo he proceeded, whom he could not allure to his Party, by force bringing them over to ſide with him. Aſia he miſerably waſted, and dealt ſeverely with thoſe Cities, which out of reſpect to the Emperour, ſtood out againſt him; the whole Region he took, except the Countries of the Opſiciani and Armeniaci, which through the valour of their Commanders, Olbianus and Catacelas, ſtood it out, and for that were rewarded by the Emperour, with the gift of the Smoak-money or Hearth-money, which was wont to be paid into the publick Treaſury. But the Saracens now taking notice how the Romans were imbroiled in a Civil War, took the advantage, and made incurſions into all places, Iſlands as well as others. Thomas was hereat concerned, fearing leſt his Men affrighted hereat, would deſert him, and betake themſelves to the defence of their own poſſeſſions. He reſolved therefore by a ſudden onſet to repreſs them, which he did, together with a promiſe that he would put into their Hands the Territories of the Empire, and ſubdue it wholly to their Command. By this means being rid of them, he put the Diademe on his own Head, and aſſumed the Title of Emperour, being declared ſuch by the Patriarch of Antioch. Now did he increaſe his Forces by new Levies, not onely out of the Neighbouring, but remoter Nations, as the Ægyptians, Indians, Perſians, Aſſyrians, Armenians, Chaldæans, Iberians, Zichi and Cabiri, and changing his Name to that of Conſtantine, adopted one whom he thought would be a ſupport to his uſurped Dignity. Michael all this while was not wholly idle, but made preparations for reſiſtence, but ſo unequal, that Thomas ingaging with them, eaſily defeated them, killing many, and forcing the reſt for to ſhift for themſelves. Having by this ſucceſs very much eſtabliſhed his affairs, he purſued his good Fortune with great induſtry, ſetting out a Fleet to Sea of Ships, both fit for Fight and Burthen, which had ſuch ſucceſs, that he became thereby Maſter of the Emperour's Navy, and appointing the Rendezvous at Lesbus, with eighty thouſand men, came to Abydus, waſting all places in the way. Not onely ſuch as were eaſie to come at; but ſuch as made reſiſtence he took by force, and ſet on fire.

26. One Caſtle there was which made ſtout reſiſtence, and this Thomas ſent his adopted Son to Attacque. He proceeding without care or good order, fell into an Ambuſh laid for him by Olbianus, who ſent his Head to the Emperour, and he diſpatcht it back again to Thomas, as he was proudly purſuing his Victories. But little affected with his loſs, which the world was wide enough to ſupply, Adoption being eaſier than natural Generation, he remitted nothing of his former vigour, but paſſed over into Thrace juſt upon the changing of the Moon, when the Night was darkeſt, that he might not be diſcovered. Michael was aware of it, and to prevent his Deſign, had reinforced all his Garriſons, and by both good words and deeds confirmed the reſolutions of his Souldiers as much as he could, although to very little purpoſe. For as ſoon as he was returned to Conſtantinople, and Thomas was arrived in Thrace, they all revolted to him, and followed him to the Siege of that City. The Emperour hereupon as he could, raiſed other Forces, which committing to the Conduct of Catacelas and Olbianus, he ſent to meet the Tyrant, and put a ſtop to his proceedings, and he neglected not his Sea affairs, putting matters there into as good a poſture as his preſent condition would ſuffer. But Thomas like a Torrent, with his vaſt Armies, both by Sea and Land, bore down all before him, eaſily routing and diſſipating all the Emperour's Forces, whereever they appeared, and ſtruck him with ſo much Terrour, that he cauſed a chain to be drawn croſs the Haven, from the Caſtle to the oppoſite Village, to ſtop his Progreſs into the inward Parts of the adjoyning Sea.

27. At this time there lived in the Iſland Scirus, one of the Cyclades, a certain Captain called Gregory, whom being a near Kinſman of Leo the late Emperour, Michael had thither baniſhed for boldly upbraiding him with his death. Thomas thought fit to draw him to his Party, and for that purpoſe, gave him the Command of twelve thouſand Men, and ſent him to Attacque Conſtantinople, being aſſiſted by a ſtrong Squadron of Ships, that the Defendants thus ſet on both by Sea and Land, might have the greater diverſion and leſs ability to defend themſelves. He himſelf intended to follow with the groſs of the Army. The chain was without much difficulty broken, and Siege laid to the City on all ſides, after which Thomas himſelf coming up, many furious Aſſaults were made, but the Inhabitants made ſuch vigorous and reſolute oppoſition, that nothing they produced, and Thomas found himſelf deceived in his expectation, that the Citizens upon his Approach would have opened their Gates and received him in, which cauſed him to ſend Gregory before, as it were to prepare for his entrance, reſolving to follow in State with the Body of his Army, and his newly adopted Son Anaſtaſius, who for this Honour had lately forſaken the Monaſtical Life. Finding himſelf treated with opprobrious Language, and threatned with Death inſtead of a kind Reception, he Incamped himſelf as ſtrongly as he could, and ſent a ſtrong Party to the Euxine Sea, and Hieras to take in all the Fortified Towns, that he might not have an Enemy at his back. As he made preparations to Attacque the City afreſh, he was much diſcouraged by the union and reſolution of them all within, and much diſtracted in his mind what courſe to take; but at length, truſting to his multitudes, reſolved to try his Fortune again by Storm.

28. By break of day commanding the Signal to be given, he draws his Men out of their Trenches. To his Son he commits the Scaling of the Wall by Land; by Water, he orders his Fleet with Fire and all ſorts of things that would annoy, to attempt the Town on that ſide, and he himſelf reſolves to fall upon the Towers of Blachernæ, wherein he conceived the chief ſtrength of the Beſieged to conſiſt. No ſort of Engine for Battery or Ladders wanting, nothing omitted to ſtrike Terrour into the Defendants, and to force them to yield. But on a ſudden aroſe a violent Tempeſt which both diſſipated the Ships by Sea, and by Land ſo diſordered the Engines and Inſtruments of Battery, that they were rendred uſeleſs and unmanageable, ſo that he was conſtrained to give over, and ſound to a retreat. This ſo incouraged the Citizens, that now they took more reſolution, and began to make Sallies, which ſo vexed and wearied him, that Winter alſo being ſharp in thoſe Quarters, he reſolved to raiſe the Siege, and leaving Thrace, Quarter his Army in ſome warmer place, with firm purpoſe to return in Spring as ſoon as the Seaſon would permit. This he performed, but found Michael now better provided for his Reception, being furniſhed both with a Fleet and a Land Army. At the ſame Quarter he gave the Aſſault as before, and with as much violence, which while it continued, Michael found a convenience to talk with ſome of his Souldiers, to whom he promiſed not onely pardon for what was paſt, but good rewards in caſe they would deſert his Service, and abſtain from the ſhedding of Bloud in ſo bad a quarrel. But they were deaf to all his charming Language, and rather more animated againſt him, meaſuring their fidelity to their own Captain by his ſtrength, which in their apprehenſions made every way deſperate the cauſe of Michael.

Endeavouring to ſtorm it, is diverted by a ſudden Tempeſt.

29. Michael perceiving his good Language had no operation upon the Enemy reſolved, with greater hopes to apply it to his own Men, and that he did with ſuch ſucceſs, that making a ſally upon the Enemy he did great Execution, and killing very many of them obtained a notable Victory. Thomas having received this defeat at Land had no better ſucceſs at Sea, where his Navy miſcarried through the Cowardiſe of his men, who terrified with the approach of the Emperour's Triremes fled back to Land, and ſome of them revolted, the reſt retired unto their Camp. His ſucceſs was better againſt Gregory the Kinſman of Leo, who perceiving his Affairs go down the wind, and believing he would in a ſhort time dwindle to nothing, reſolved to make his Peace with Michael, and the rather becauſe the Emperour had gotten his Wife and Children into his Hands. But Thomas had timely notice of his intended flight with that party which he commanded, and as he was marching away, before the Emperour could receive the News of his revolt fell upon him, and eaſily maſtering his Party took him alive, and preſently put him to death, having left a convenient Number of men, all this while to keep the ſiege, leſt the Enemy ſhould take the Advantage, and fall in upon his back. The exploit performed, he returned to the ſiege, and ſent Letters up and down which falſly proclaimed a mighty Victory, and ſent for ſuch Ships as lay in Greece, as purpoſing to purſue his good Fortune by Sea alſo, and the Fleet came as far as Beridus, conſiſting of fifty Veſſels in all, as well thoſe of burthen as the other for fighting. The Emperour's Fleet had notice of their coming, and ſecretly by Night ſet upon them. Many were taken with the men, others were burnt; and thoſe that eſcaped came up to Blachernæ, which they joined with the Land Forces.

And much weakened by a ſally from the Town.

30. In the mean time ſeveral skirmiſhes happened at the ſiege, ſometimes Michael himſelf, otherwhiles Theophilus his Son, or Catacelas and Olbianus iſſuing out upon the Beſiegers, for he durſt not adventure upon a ſet Battel, becauſe Thomas far exceeded him in Numbers. But by this time the Report of the Roman Emperours being blocked up in a Town, had flown far and wide, and was come to the Ears of Mortagon the King of the Bulgarians, who was therewith ſo affected, as pitying the Dignity rather than the Man he ſent privately, to incourage him with a promiſe, that he would come ſpeedily to his aſſiſtence. Michael either for that he ſuſpected what this ſtranger in concluſion might doe, or was unwilling the Countrey ſhould be waſted by another Army, or rather to ſave his Money in getting and keeping, whereof none of his Predeceſſours had been more ſordid, thanked the Bulgarian for his kindneſs, and excuſed his not accepting of his Relief. But for all this Mortagon who was accuſtomed to War and Depredations, and deſirous to confirm the League for thirty years, which he had made to the Armenians, undertook the expedition againſt Thomas, and coming into the Roman Territories as far as Cedoctus, there incamped himſelf. Thomas, as he had reaſon, was very much diſturbed, finding himſelf too weak to continue the Siege, and fight the Bulgarians too, great Forces being requiſite to each of theſe undertakings. At length he reſolved to fight the Bulgarians, which he did at Cedoctus, but was worſted in Battel; great Numbers of his men being ſlaughtered, the News whereof coming to his Fleet before Conſtantinople, it preſently revolted to the Emperour. Yet ſuch was his Ambition and Hopes of attaining his ends, at laſt, that incouraged by the retreat of Mortagon into his own Countrey, he ſtill continued his ſiege.

And forced to raiſe the ſiege upon the arrival of the Bulgarians to the Emperour's aid.

31. But finding all his Attempts fruſtrate, at length he marched to a place called Diabaſis, ſome furlongs diſtant from the City, und very convenient for Excurſions where he incamped himſelf, and thence waſted all near the Walls, without any formal ſiege or drawing out his Forces. The Emperour incouraged by this his Receſs raiſed a conſiderable Army, which he committed to the Conduct of Catacelas and Olbianus, and thereto joyning his Guards and the ordinary Militia, he led them all againſt him who received them courageouſly, and by way of ſtratageme ordered his men to counterfeit flight, and ſuddenly again to retreat, and ſo terrifie the Enemy. But his Deſign would not take at this time. His men were quite tired out with expectation. Such of them as had Wives and Families at Home, now began to think of returning to them; how laviſhly they had ſhed civil and innocent Bloud, and to gratify the madneſs and ambition of one man ſpent three years in proſecution of that, which now there was no probability of attaining. The ſign being thereſore given they fled not in jeſt, but in good earneſt, and diſperſing themſelves, moſt of them went over to the Emperour. Thomas himſelf with a few got to Adrianople, and Anaſtatius his fictitious Son ſeized upon the Caſtle of Birya, Michael reſolved to make ſure of them e'er they could recruit, and in the firſt place purſued Thomas, whom beſieging, he reſolved not to uſe any Engines or Inſtruments of Battery in attacking the Town, but to ſtarve him out, partly becauſe he would not deface the Walls and Houſes, and that he might not teach the Scythians, bordering upon the place, the manner of taking Cities by ſtorm. A line he drew about the place, and blocked it up every where. Thomas put forth all ſuch as were not fit for War, but neceſſaries at length failing thoſe that remained, moſt of them made their eſcapes as they could, at a little Gate, and over the Walls by Ropes, part of them going to the Emperour, and part to Anaſtaſius ſtill lying at Birga.

In a Battel is driven to Adrianople.

32. Thoſe that remained with Thomas being reduced to ſuch extremity, that they were forced to eat rotten Leather and other things which naturally Man abhors, at laſt entertained Correſpondence with Michael, and having obtained pardon for what was paſt, delivered him up in Fetters to him. Michael obſerving the Cuſtome received in thoſe times by the Emperours, upon ſuch occaſions, firſt cauſed him to lie all along on the ground, and then ſet he his Feet upon his Neck, after which his Hands and Feet being cut off, he was put upon an Aſs and ſhewed about the Camp, ſaying onely thus much, Thou who art the true King (or Emperour) have mercy upon me. The Emperour went about to examine him if any of his Courtiers were of the Conſpiracy, and he had doubtleſs accuſed many had not John Exabulius the Patritian adviſed Michael to forbear and not to truſt an Enemy that accuſes his Friends; by which ſaying he ſaved many miſerable Citizens and the very Friends of the Emperour from great impending miſchiefs. Thomas at length ſpent by lingring Torments, breathed out his laſt in the middle middle of October, a Man who at the beginning enterprized great things, and with great Alacrity and Vigour proſecuted his Deſigns, but fell leſs and leſs as he went on, and his laſt attempts anſwered not expectation. Thoſe at Briga underſtanding what their Friends at Adrianople had done, treated Anaſtaſius in the ſame manner; for they delivered him up bound Hand and Foot, and he periſhed after the ſame manner as did his Father, ſucceeding him in his puniſhment, though not in his Imperial Dignity. The two Uſurpers were thus diſpatched, but ſome Remnants of the Rebellion remained. Pavium and Heraclea two Maritime Towns of Thrace, ſtill held out, not ſo much out of reſpect to them as hatred to the Emperour, becauſe he refuſed to reſtore Images. But e'er long Pavium was taken, the Walls being overwhelmed by an Earthquake, and Heraclea was ſtormed on the ſide lying toward the Sea.

But at laſt Thomas is delivered up to the Emperour.

Ἐλέησον μὲ ἀλεθῶς Βασιλεῦ.

The Inhabitants of Heraclea and Pavium reduced to obedience.

Choreas and Gazarenus ſubdued.

And the Civil War finiſhed.

The Eaſtern Iſles waſted by the Saracens.

33. There yet remained two Caſtles, Cabala and Saxiana, whereof the one was held by Choreas, the other by Gazarenus, who thence exerciſed Robberies and Depredations. The Emperour offered them their pardon, and more than that to make them Maſters (ſuch was the Name of the Dignity) but they rejected his offer, which he knowing, corrupted ſome of the garriſon Souldiers, ſo that going out to rob another time, the Gates were ſhut againſt them at their return, and flying into Syria, they were there apprehended by ſome of the Governours, and nailed to Croſſes. By this means the whole Rebellion was now extinguiſht. Upon ſuch as were taken in the War Michael no otherwiſe animadverted, than by ſetting them firſt on Aſſes, and ſo carrying them about to be ſeen at the Circenſian Games, after which they were baniſhed. But, as Cedrenus writes, all miſchiefs ceaſed not with the War; but as well Europe, as Aſia, the Head, as the Tail, (ſo he terms it) were chaſtized from Heaven, by Slaughters, Fires, Earthquakes, Robberies, Civil Broils, ſudden and unexpected deſtruction of Cities, ſigns in the Heaven and Air; and the like miſchiefs invaded alſo the Iſlands, as well as the Continent; all which he aſcribes to this, that they would not worſhip Images. But (to come to the matter) at ſuch time as Thomas began to raiſe Commotions, when the rumour thereof ſpread abroad, the Saracens that inhabited Spain, thinking a fit opportunity to be preſented them, deſired of their Prince, that they might ſend out a Colony; for that they were too numerous for the Countrey they inhabited. Their Prince Apochapſus by Name (their Amermumnes Cedrenus rather than they themſelves called him) very glad of the opportunity, and concealing his deſign went with ſome long ſhips furniſhed with them to waſte the Eaſtern Iſlands which belonged to the Empire; both to gratify the People, and to diſcover whether there was any fruitfull Iſle, into which it would be worth his labour to ſend a Colony. Sailing away at the beginning of the Spring, and coming to ſeveral Iſlands he found no reſiſtence, all Ships and Garriſons being gone to the aſſiſtence of Thomas; great booty he got, and ſo returned, bringing home eſpecially Intelligence concerning the fertility and pleaſantneſs of Crete, as a place abounding with Milk and Honey; for ſo he term'd it.

They invade Crete.

Thereof Photinus advertiſeth the Emperour.

They defeat him and Damianus.

34. When therefore Winter was over, and the ſeaſon permitted, with another Fleet conſiſting of forty Ships and furniſhed with Souldiers, he ſet ſail, and arriving at Crete, there landed his Men. He incamped upon the Promontory Charax, and ſent Spies to diſcover the Countrey, who returned, without having met any to oppoſe them, when in the mean time, he cauſed all the Ships to be ſet on fire. The Army being much affrighted at the ſight, and returning to the Camp to know the cauſe of the misfortune, their Captain told them that they themſelves were the cauſe thereof, who had been earneſt for planting a Colony in ſome fruitfull place: but no fruitfuller, nor fitter every way to plant in did he know than this, now he had both ſatisfied their deſires, and had eaſed himſelf of their Importunities. But they objected to him the want of their Wives and Children, to which he anſwered that they ſhould ſpeedily have captive Women which they might uſe as Wives, and on them beget Children: and ſatisfied with this anſwer they intrenched themſelves. Photinus the Protoſpatharian and Prefect of the Eaſt, having ſpeedy notice hereof gave Intelligence alſo to the Emperour, deſiring he might have ſufficient Forces to withſtand ſo impending a miſchief, who accordingly with great ſupplies diſpatched to him Damianus another Protoſpatharian, and they, joyning their Powers together, prepared for an expedition. But it happened that coming to ingage the Saracens, at the very firſt onſet Damianus was ſlain, which ſo affrighted the whole Army that it ran away, and amongſt others Photinus to the Emperour as faſt as a ſwift Pinnace could carry him with the News of the Overthrow, who yet rewarded him with the Government of Sicily inſtead of that of Crete, whereof the unmannerly Agarens had now deprived him. They could not for ſome time, agree amongſt themſelves where to plant, being ſolicitous for a place of ſafety, till a certain Monk coming down from the Mountains directed them to Chandace, which finding very convenient for their Deſigns, they there built a City to command the whole Iſland, and thence they made Excurſions, and took all the Towns within the Iſland in a ſhort ſpace, one onely excepted. After this manner became the Iſle of Crete, ſubject to the Saracens, who ſtreight began to perſecute ſuch as profeſſed the Chriſtian Religion.

And fix at Chandace.

35. But, Michael, freed from the civil Wars, aſcribed the Iſſue not to the Goodneſs of Almighty God, but to his own Prudence and Sagacity. His Wife being dead and having a great deſire to be married again, he deals with ſome of the leading men in the Senate, by their complaints to conſtrain him as it were to take another; nay to threaten him in caſe he did it not, uſing this worthy pretext, that their Wives muſt by no means want a Sovereign Lady and Miſtreſs. To ſatisfie them therefore he will take a Wife, but not without this Caution neither, that in caſe ſhe overlive him, they will ingage to eſteem and honour her as their Empreſs, and make Emperour one of the Sons he ſhould have by her. After all this ſtir, he takes out of a Monaſtery a Virgin called Euphroſyna, one that from her Childhood had ever profeſſed the Monaſtical life, and was reported to be the Daughter of Conſtantine, whoſe Eyes were put out by his Mother Irene. Being married, he began to think of the Iſle of Crete, and what a diſgrace it was, for him to ſuffer the Saracens in it to neſt themſelves; therefore he ſent away Craterus the Governour of the Cibyreots with ſeventy Veſſels, to which joining all the reſt that belonged to the Iſlands, he made up a conſiderable Fleet, and therewith landed his men, and very fiercely fell upon them, who with as much reſolution received him. From break of the day they fought till noon, without any appearance to which ſide the Victory inclined, but, towards Evening the Saracens were worſted and put to flight, many of them being ſlain and many taken, and their new City might have eaſily run the ſame fortune had day and light ſufficed. But the Conquerours were, neither, willing to take too much pains, and not valuing thoſe that had eſcaped whom they doubted not, but they could eaſily maſter when they pleaſed, they gave themſelves to Drunkenneſs all the Night, as if they had been at home, and not in an Enemies Countrey; not ſo much as ſetting any Watch, or taking the leaſt care of their own Security. The Saracens now, how weary and wounded ſoever, perceiving the condition they were in, when they were all drowned in drink and ſleep fell in upon them, and cut them all off, hardly one eſcaping with the News from the Iſland except Craterus himſelf, who got away in a Merchants ſhip, but the Captain of the Saracens ſeeking for him, and miſſing him among the dead ſent thoſe after him who took him alſo napping in the Iſland Cos, and there nailed him to a Croſs. This expedition ſo ill ſucceeding, one Oriphas, a man conſiderable both for Courage and Skill in military Affairs, raiſed by the Emperour's order an Army which got the Name of Teſſaracontarius or Fortieth, becauſe to every man were aſſigned ſo many Aurei. Herewith viſiting the Iſles partly by Ambuſhes, and partly by open Ingagements, he repreſſed the Inſolence of theſe Cretian Saracens.

Michael marries a veiled Virgin.

Cedrenus.
Zonaras.
Ex Johanne Curopalata.

Craterus and all his Souldiers ſlain by the Saracens.

36. At this time it happened that one Euphemius an Officer in the Army, falling in love with a veiled Virgin in a Monaſtery, and incouraged by what he knew the Emperour to have done in the like caſe, took her thence by force and lay with her. Her Brothers hereupon make loud complaints to the Emperour, who gives order to the Governour of Sicily, if upon examination he found the matter objected to be true, to cut off his Noſe. Euphemius having notice of his doom draws into conſpiracy his Fellow Officers, and makes ſo ſtrong a Party, that when the Governour comes to execute his Orders he eaſily repells him, and flying over to the Ameras or Governour of Africk, promiſes him to betray Sicily into his Hands, and pay him a large Tribute if he would declare him Emperour of the Romans. This the Ameras thought was no great matter to doe, and therefore furniſhes him with Forces, and ſends him away with the glorious, but empty Title of Emperour. He accordingly brought the Saracens into Sicily, but as he went about the Iſland to perſwade the People to own and receive him for Emperour indeed, and coming to Syracuſe went ſo near the Walls, that he was drawn about a bow ſhot off from his Company, as he endeavoured to make his way by a flattering Speech, two of the Citizens being Brothers agree together to take the opportunity and kill him. They made him great Reverence, and both by words and geſtures flattered him into a belief of their kindneſs and fidelity, inſomuch that he to requite their Civility called them to him, and went to ſalute one of them, who caught him by the Hair of the Head, and ſo faſt held him till the other cut off his Head. But the Saracens fell not ſhort of what they deſigned and he promiſed, for introduced by him they got poſſeſſion of the Iſland, and not onely that, but upon Calabria and ſeveral other pars, by reaſon of this Vicinity they ſeized, waſting all where e'er they came with Fire and Sword. But though Cedrenus and others relate this ſtory of Euphemius all together, yet two years ſeem to have been taken up in tranſacting the whole Affair, the Death of the Emperour Michael, being related juſt after the Concluſion. He died after he had reigned nine years of a Dyſentery, and was buried in Juſtinian's great Chapel. Dalmatia alſo revolted from the Empire in his time, which was very full of Calamities, which credulous People believed was foretold by an Oracle. They alſo concluded, that the Empire ſhould at length be devolved upon him, from ſome Circumſtances which fell out at the Promotion of Leo his Predeceſſour. As Leo being about to pray for happy ſucceſs put off the Robe he then had on, he gave it to hold to this Michael, being then the Maſter of his Horſe, who without any more to doe put it on. And when the ſaid Leo inveſted in another Robe, went into the Chapel belonging to the Palace, this Michael following him negligently trod on his Train, which it's ſaid Leo accounted an ill Omen, and thence gueſſed that he would in time raiſe Commotions. From theſe paſſages, and what has been ſaid of the Monk, we may ſee how they were addicted to Prophecies and Ominous conceits in thoſe days.

Euphemius uſurps and brings the Saracens into Sicily which they ſeize on.

Michael dies.

Dalmatia revolts from the Empire.

Theophilus his Son ſucceeds him.

829.

Joan. Curopalata, ex eo Cedrenus, Zonaras, alii.

37. Michael Balbus being dead, Theophilus his Son now arrived at Man's Eſtate ſucceeded him in the Month of October, and the ſeventh Indiction in the ſixteenth year of Ludovicus Emperour of the Weſt, the ſecond of Gregory the Fourth of that Name Biſhop of Rome. A. D. DCCCXXIX. This Theophilus ſhewed himſelf a marvellous obſerver of Juſtice, and a ſevere Aſſertour of the Laws of the Empire, though as his Adverſaries, upon account of Religion take upon them to cenſure him, he was herein hypocritical, pretending this Zeal merely thereby to ſecure himſelf from Conſpiracies, to cut off all Pretences and Advantages, that any who had a mind to uſurp, might catch at, and improve againſt him. To this purpoſe he put in Execution ſuch a Deſign, as could not but to the underſtanding ſort evince his Father to have been both a Traitour and a Tyrant, and himſelf an Uſurper if he came to the Dignity by the way of Succeſſion, and upon his account. He reſolved to put to death all thoſe that had any Hand in the Murther of Leo and his Father's Advancement, and for that end publiſhed an Edict whereby he ſummoned all ſuch as had had any Favours, Dignities or Preferments conferred on them by him, to the Houſe called Magnaura, and from the Five Towers Pentapyrgium. When they were all aſſembled he mildly told them, that his Father had in his Life-time reſolved to reward ſuch highly, as had procured his preferment, and done him eminent ſervice, but foraſmuch as being prevented by death, he could not effect what he purpoſed, he had left him as his Executour to pay that Debt. Therefore he deſired them that were his Father's Friends to ſeparate themſelves from the reſt, into a peculiar place, where they might receive the Reward intended them. Such as had aſſiſted in the Murther of Leo, in expectation of ſome great matter gladly and readily diſcovered themſelves, whom having incompaſſed as Fiſh in a Net, he commanded the Officer thereto appointed to put the Laws in execution, telling him that Seeing both God and he committed the Power to him, he ſhould give theſe men their full hire, who had not onely defiled their Hands with Man's bloud, but had killed the Anointed of the Lord within his Temple. Having ſaid this he diſmiſſed the Aſſembly, and the Officer going to work took the Malefactours, and puniſhed them as thoſe that had committed Murther. This performed, Theophilus ſent back his Mother-in-Law, and ſhut her up in the Monaſtery, where firſt ſhe had been profeſſed. And the Ingagement wherewith her Husband had bound the Senate in her behalf, could not ſtand her in any ſtead.

Puts to death the Murtherers of Leo his Predeceſſour.

Is a ſtrict obſerver of Juſtice, and againſt worſhipping of Images.

38. Such was Theophilus his beginning. He was ſo exact a Follower of Juſtice, that he was feared by bad, and admired by all good Men, this onely blot our Authours find in his Eſcocheon, that he was againſt the worſhipping of Images, and as ſeverely as any of his Predeceſſours. Every week he rode to our Ladies Church in Blachernæ, and heard all Complaints of oppreſſed People, without any partiality. Riding alſo about the Markets, he himſelf would view what was to be ſold, and take notice of the Prices of Commodities, wherein he went below himſelf, but he would not truſt any to doe it, eſpecially in Meats and Drinks, where the Poor were moſt concerned. In all other matters relating to Government he was very exact, having an eſpecial regard to Courts of Juſtice. And although he condeſcended thus in theſe things yet was he not of any Mean, Covetous or Sordid Spirit, as appears by this following Paſſage. Looking on a time over the Wall of the Palace towards the Sea, he beheld coming into the Haven a Ship of burthen goodly to behold under ſail, and very well fraught with Merchandiſe. Being much taken with the ſight, and asking to whom the Veſſel belonged, and what was her Lading, it was anſwered, to the Empreſs, with which anſwer at preſent he ſeem'd ſatisfied, and replyed nothing. But ſtaying till the time came he was to go to the Church in Blachernis, in his way he took the Haven, where he called to the Mariners, and demanded of them if they wanted any thing, when after often asking, at length they replied, that by the care of the Emperour they had all things that were convenient for them, he demanded if they did not know that God Almighty had made him Emperour, but the Empreſs his Wife had made him a Merchant or Mariner; and he added with Indignation, was there ever any Empreſs before that ſaw her Husband a Merchant? This ſaid, he cauſed the Men to come aſhore, and to bring their own Goods along with them, then fire to be ſet to the Ship, which conſumed it with all its Merchandize and Tackling. He rebuked his Wife with great earneſtneſs, and threatned her with deſtruction if ever ſhe attempted any ſuch thing again; telling her that Traffick was ordained for private men wherewith to ſuſtain themſelves, and that if Princes ſhould beſides their publick Incomes apply themſelves to Trade, their Subjects ſhould not have whereon to live. Her Name was Theodora, by Birth a Paphlagonian, the Daughter of one Maximus a Man of Noble Parentage, and Theoctiſta Floriana his Wife.

Not at all given to Covetouſneſs.

39. Another Story is told, which as much ſhews his Juſtice, and both of them declare his generous Diſpoſition. There was a certain Souldier in the Army that had an excellent Horſe, of ſo good Heels that he had often ſaved his Maſter's life in Battel. The Officer under whom he ſerved taking notice of him, indeavoured by all means, both by Threats and Promiſes to get him from him, and when he could no-ways prevail, accuſed him to the Emperour for a Coward and Caſhier'd him. Not long after it happened that the Emperour wanted an excellent Horſe, which bringing to the mind of this Officer the repulſe he had received from the Souldier, he takes away his Horſe by mere force, and preſents him to Theophilus as of his own free gift. After this there being a neceſſity of raiſing more Forces, this man is preſt to the ſervice afreſh and ingaging in Battel, for want of his Horſe is overtaken and ſlain, leaving a Wife and Children behind him. The Widow left in low condition, and hearing much of the Emperour's Juſtice, comes to Conſtantinople, and as he rode to the Church in Blachernis, according to his cuſtome, upon her Husband's Horſe, caught him by the Bridle, crying out that he was hers, and that the Emperour had been the cauſe of her Husband's death. Theophilus amazed deſires her to have patience till he returned to Court, and then to come to him, which ſhe did, and having told him all the Story, he ſent immediately for the Officer, and cauſed the Woman to ſtep aſide. He being examined would confeſs nothing, till ſhe being produced, and confronting, he could no more deny the Fact, but firſt ſtanding mute, acknowledged what ſhe ſaid to be true as to all Circumſtances, and then he fell at the Emperour's feet with Tears imploring his mercy. Theophilus took away all his Eſtate and gave it to the Widow and her Children, put him out of Command, and ſent him into Baniſhment.

Very Juſt.

40. Beſides theſe good qualities he was very magnificent in building, amongſt other things he rebuilt the Walls of the City, pulling down the old and mean ones, and rearing others in their room, ſo lofty that they could not be ſcaled by the Art of Enemies. To all diſſolute living he was ſo averſe, that he turned Whores out of the Stews, and converted the place to the better uſe of harbouring Strangers, giving it his own Name, and afterward it became a Nunnery or Receptacle of the better ſort of ſingle Women. He himſelf is reported never to have been overtaken with Women but once, being then inſnared by the extraordinary beauty of one of the Empreſſes Attendants, but ſeeing his Wife to be much concerned about it, he confeſſed his fault, asked her forgiveneſs, and with hands lifted up to Heaven, vowed that he had never been faulty in that kind before. He much affected Muſick, and compoſed ſeveral Anthems. He had very ſhort Hair, and therefore publiſhed an Edict, that no Roman ſhould wear Locks longer than than his Neck; but otherwiſe alſo by Laws he indeavoured to retain the ancient Roman temperance and moderation. Having five Daughters and never a Son, his beſt beloved, Mary by Name, he reſolved to Marry to ſome Perſon of Principal note and merit, and pitched upon one Alexius Moſeles, an Armenian by Birth, deſcended of the Genitæ, one beautifull in Perſon, and in the flower of his Age. He firſt conferred on him the Dignity of Patritian, then of Pro-conſul, afterward of Maſter, and at laſt created him Cæſar, and with a numerous Army, matters then requiring it, ſent him into Lombardy. There he managed his matters to the ſatisfaction of his Father-in-Law,but what ſatisfied him,diſſatisfied his Æmulatours,who accuſed him as Ambitious, and affecting the Empire, and they urged a Prophecy as if A ſhould juſtle out Th; which as ſoon as he underſtood he deſired leave of Theophilus to retire to the Monaſtical life. The Emperour unwilling to doe ſo much injury to his Daughter, denied his Requeſt, and compelled him to keep his Rank and Power; but ſhe dying not long after, and Theophilus having a Son born to him by Name Michael, when he again importuned him to diſmiſs him, he aſſented, though with much regret, and aſſigned him ſuch places as he thought moſt commodious for his retirement.

Endued with ſeveral other good Qualities.

41. Beſides this Alexius he was otherwiſe well furniſhed with eminent Captains, two eſpecially, Manuel and Theophobus. Manuel had formerly been General to Leo, and Maſter of the Horſe to Michael Rangabes. Theophobus was the baſe Son of a certain Perſian Ambaſſadour, deſcended of the Royal bloud, who after his birth preſently died, and left him at Conſtantinople. It happening that all thoſe of the Royal Houſe in Perſia being either deſtroyed or driven away by the Saracens, the Perſians hearing of him ſent to Theophilus to deſire they might have him to be their King; but he refuſed it, chuſing rather to make him a Patritian, and to give him his own Siſter in Marriage, and he made a Law which gave leave to his Subjects to Marry with Perſians. By this means many of that Nation came over to him, and gave their Names to the expedition he was now undertaking againſt the Saracens, out of whom he raiſed a Legion, which was called the Perſian, and joyned in the Army with the Roman Legions. The Saracens having invaded the Roman Territories, Theophilus with theſe two Captains marcheth againſt them. When they came near the Enemy, and began to conſider whether they ſhould give Battel, Manuel was againſt the Emperour's ingaging in Perſon, affirming it a thing below him to graple with a Man ſo inferiour as the Amermumnes was, and that ſome of his Captains with part of his Forces was to do it. But Theophobus contended that the Prince himſelf ought to fight, and adviſed him by Night to fall on with the Foot, and to leave the Horſe for a Reſerve. The Emperour approved not of his Advice as to falling on by Night, but reſolving to doe it by day light, Impræl the Amermumna or General of the Saracens, whether out of fear, or to let the Romans ſee how much he deſpiſed them, went away with part of his Army, and left eighty thouſand men with Abuzachar one of his Captains to fight them. Battel being joyned many fell on both ſides, and at length the Cohorts or Schools, as they called them, with their Captain or Domeſticus gave ground and turned their backs. The Emperour with his Guard, two thouſand Perſians, and Theophobus got to an Hill, where they were incompaſſed by the Saracens, who ſought to take him Priſoner, and his own men ſtrove as hard to defend him, and in this Contention they ſpent all the day; when night was come Theophobus commanded the Souldiers to ſhout and make a noiſe with their Trumpets and Inſtruments of Muſick as if they rejoyced for ſome Relief that was arrived, which Strategeme took ſo well that the Saracens concluding they had Succours come indeed, leſt they ſhould be ſurrounded by their Enemies, retreated to ſeven Miles diſtance, and by this means the Emperour eſcaped to the reſt of his Army which had run away. Yet did he onely chide, and in no ſeverer manner animadverted upon them. Theophobus, as reaſon was, he very much honoured, which made his Countreymen the more fond of him, inſomuch that they Petitioned Theophilus, that under his Conduct they might by themſelves make War againſt the Saracens. And he ſo far gratified them, that he ſuffered none elſe to command them.

Ingaging with the Saracens and Turks he is worſted.

42. The following year he marched againſt the Saracens with very good ſucceſs, which incouraged him to make another attempt the next Spring, but this did not anſwer expectation. For he had far the worſt, and was very near being taken in Battel, when Manuel his General conſidering what a diſgrace it would be to the Roman Name and Empire, propounded it to the Army as an Argument to animate them to fetch him off, and when he had broken through to him and found him him wearied and in deſpair, he intreated him to follow him as he made him way through the throng of the Enemies. But Theophilus ſtill loitered, pretending he muſt not diſcourage his men by flying, which Manuel perceiving came back when he had already paſſed to him the third time, and drawing his Sword threatned to kill him except he would follow him, (telling him it much more behoved the State that he ſhould die than be taken) by which means he brought him off. For this ſervice he deſerved a reward, and the Emperour was not ſlow to give it, and the thing being ſo evident, to confeſs he had been his Deliverer. But as Princes do not care too much to be beholden to their Subjects, he envied him for his Reputation, and there wanted not thoſe who gratified him by accuſing the General of Deſigns to Uſurp, ſo that it was reſolved he ſhould looſe his ſight. This was diſcovered to him by one that formerly had been his Servant, and now was Cupbearer to the Emperour, whereupon he fled to the Saracens, and upon condition that he ſhould not be conſtrained to change his Religion, revolted to them and was joyfully received. He was ſpeedily advanced to the higheſt Honour and Command he was capable of, and with an Army the Saracens ſent him againſt their Neighbours called Cermatæ. But he refuſed to fight with any other than ſuch Romans as there were in Captivity, whom gathering into a Body he therewith did very notable Service, and took a Caſtle called Choroſan, ſtriking greater terrour into the Beſieged, not onely by his valour, but the difference of Language and Habit, and an unexpected change of the manner of fighting. But not onely was he very acceptable to the Saracens, for fighting with Men, but making War alſo upon Wild Beaſts, which did very much at this time infeſt their Countrey, and afforded him this opportunity of keeping his Souldiers in Action.

And with difficulty brought off by his General in the next.

Who being accuſed to the Emperour flies to the Saracens.

But is ſent for to the Emperour.

And received into favour.

43. Theſe things being made known to Theophilus, vexed him much, as taxing himſelf with Ingratitude and high Imprudence, in diſobliging ſo ſerviceable a man, therefore he reſolved to get him Back by any means. At that time Monks being wont to travell and wander up and down in all Places, he employed one of that ſort whom he knew fit for his purpoſe, as leaſt liable to ſuſpicion, ſending by him Letters ſtrengthened by a Seal of Gold and a Croſs, which gave Manuel ſuch ſatisfaction, as concealing the Meſſage he ſtudied how to return, and after ſome time effected it in this manner. He deſired leave of Iſmael Prince of the Saracens to make an Expedition againſt the Romans into Cappadocia, to be revenged chiefly on thoſe who had accuſed him to the Emperour, and eaſily obtained it, together with the Son of the Prince to accompany him, as having already given ſufficient Teſtimony of his Fidelity. The Governour of Cappadocia he prepared beforehand to receive him, and being arrived at the place he deſired, and going out from the Army with the Prince his Son and a few Followers as to Hunt, he bid the Young man get him back to the Saracens, and let them know his Reſolution of returning into his own Countrey. Getting ſafe to Conſtantinople he was gladly received by the Emperour in the Church of Blachernæ, there had conferred on him the Place of Magiſter, and was ſhortly after Godfather to his Son Michael, whom afterwards he adorned with the Imperial Title and Enſigns of Majeſty. After this in the Spring Theophilus and the Saracens on each ſide made preparations for War, but coming near together were ſtruck with ſuch mutual fear, that both Armies returned home without having any thing performed. At his return came Ambaſſadours from Chagan the petty Prince of Chazaria, deſiring leave to build up a Caſtle called Marcol on the Borders, as very convenient for reſtraining the Incurſions of the Petzinacæ toward the River Tanais, which they obtained, and one Petronas was ſent to ſee the thing performed. Petronas when he came back acquainted the Emperour that he could not continue Maſter of Cherſon, except he ſent thither a Governour of his own, the manner having been to put ſome of the Natives into the command. The Emperour being ſatisfied with his Reaſons ſent him to execute the office, with orders to the Townſmen to put him into poſſeſſion, which they obeyed.

Theophilus enters Syria waſting the Dominion of the Saracens.

44. The year following Theophilus made an Incurſion into Syria againſt the Saracens, which waſting all in his way he took two Cities, and carrying away the Inhabitants made himſelf Maſter alſo of Sozopetra the Native place of the Amermumnes, though he ſent to him and earneſtly begged of him that he would ſpare it. This done the Emperour returned to Conſtantinople, leaving behind him Theophobus to ſettle ſome matters relating to the Army, which paſt, he was to follow after. But the Reverence which the Mercenary Perſians had for Theophilus, being removed they fell into a Mutiny, and laying hold of Theophobus at Sinope, would would needs make him Emperour, though he uſed all the Proteſtations and Intreaties he could; but when he could not divert them, he ſent private notice of it to Theophilus to ſignifie his Averſeneſs to the Thing, and as ſoon as he could made his eſcape and got to Court, where he was kindly received and enjoyed his former Honours. And for this time no farther trouble happened, the Perſians being alſo pardoned, and received to favour, yet it was thought fit that being thirty thouſand in Number they ſhould not continue together, but be diſperſed by two thouſands into ſeveral Provinces under their diſtinct Officers. But the Prince of the Saracens or Amermumnes, as theſe Greek Hiſtorians call him, was wonderfully inraged for the deſtruction of his Native City, and breathing nothing but revenge, hired men out of Babylonia, Phœnicia, Paleſtine, Cœloſyria, and the farther Africk, (that lying next Spain Cedrenus means) giving Orders to every Souldier to ingrave upon his Target the word Amorium which being the Birth-place of Theophilus he was reſolved to deſtroy. At Tarſus all his Forces met; and Theophilus aware of the danger marched to Dorylæum with ſuch an Army as he could raiſe, diſtant three days journey from Amorium. Now there were ſeveral that perſwaded to decline rather than withſtand the fury of the Saracen Prince whoſe Numbers far exceeded his, and to remove the Inhabitants of Amorium to ſome other place. But he thought it would much reflect upon him, and reſolving to protect the place, ſent thither Aetius a Patritian the Captain of the Eaſt with a ſtrong Party, which he alſo committed to the Conduct of Theodorus Craterus, (whom Zonaras will have to have commanded at Amorium) Theophilus Bubutzicus and others, men very eminent in their time.

Is requited by a Viſit from them.

Who rout the Emperour's Army.

45. The Prince of the Saracens lying at Tarſus, deliberated with thoſe about him what to doe; for he was of opinion that he ſhould not paſs on directly for Amorium, but ſend his Son with part of the Army to make an Attempt upon the Emperour, whom if he ſhould beat he ſhould ſhare in the Victory, and if it happened otherwiſe, it would be beſt for him to be quiet. His Son therefore he ſent together with Ameras, who then commanded Metylene; ten thouſand Turks, all the Armenian Forces, and his Commander in chief, and they came and incamped themſelves at a place called Dazymenum. Theophilus with his Army, conſiſting eſpecially of Perſians both Eaſtern and Weſtern, marching to a Town called Anzin, reſolved before he would ingage to view the Numbers of the Enemy, which finding to exceed his, it was to be conſidered with what Strategem and advantage they ſhould fall upon them. Manuel the Domeſtick of the Schools, as Cedrenus calls him, and Theophilus thought it beſt to be done by Night; but all the reſt were for day light, with whom the Emperour agreed. And by day light a moſt fierce Battel was fought, wherein firſt the Romans had the better, the Saracens turning their backs. But the Turks ſo exceedingly galled the Purſuers with their Arrows, that they quite turned the courſe of the fight, and made thoſe to run and forſake their Emperour, who but now ſeemed to have the Victory. Yet did the Captains manſully behave themſelves, and ſo did the Perſians, who compaſſed him about, and earneſtly laboured for his Preſervation: yet he had been ſlain had not Night come on and ſome Rain faln, which wet the Bowſtrings of the Turks ſo as they could not ſo conveniently uſe them, and the Romans had thereby opportunity to retreat. In the Night Manuel who commanded the Watch, obſerved the Perſians to entertain Diſcourſe with the Saracens in their Language, about betraying the Roman Army and returning into their own Countrey, which revealing with all ſpeed to the Emperour, he adviſed him by all means, with ſome choice Followers to provide for his own ſafety by flight, now while he had time, and not fall into the hands of the Saracens. He anſwered, that this he could hardly doe, eſpecially to leave thoſe to periſh whom he had brought into the danger, but Manuel replyed, that if God would but preſerve him, they would look to themſelves, whereupon Theophilus took his Advice and fled away to a place called Chiliocomum. Hither ſuch as we ſaid ran away from the Battel being fled, it's ſaid they met him, and confeſſing themſelves unworthy of life, who had ſo deſerted their Emperour, drew their Swords and would have killed themſelves, but that he reſtrained them, by affirming he was preſerved by God, and that therefore they ſhould not periſh.

46. But the Saracenian Prince underſtanding how matters had proſpered under his Son, reſolved without delay to fall on Amorium, which joyning Forces with him, he did, drawing firſt a deep Trench about it. The Turks plied it with Arrows, and the Saracens with Batteries, yet the Romans within Valiantly defended themſelves and it, though the ſtorm continued without Intermiſſion. Theophilus philus with much adoe having eſcaped at Dorylæum expected the event, whence he reſolved to try the temper of the Saracen by Meſſengers ſent with rich Preſents, and to deſire of him to deſiſt. But he being implacably incenſed by the Deſtruction of his Sozopetra, upbraided him with Cowardize, and ſcoffing at the Meſſage, commanded thoſe that brought it to be ſecured till they might ſee the Iſſue. Then did he more vigorouſly than ever attacque the Town, dividing his Forces into many Parties, ſo as when one was ſpent or beaten off, another freſh one might ſucceed, with which pertinacious courſe he hoped that the Beſieged would be tired out and ſurrender. Yet the Defendants were ſo reſolute, that the Town was not to be taken but by Treachery, to which one Badaties a Townſman was Bribed, who upon ſome diſcontent had abjured the Chriſtian Religion. He gave them notice where the Walls might moſt eaſily be mounted, and an Aſſault be made, which ſo ſucceeded as the Saracens by ſtorm took the Place, and made unſpeakable Slaughter of the Garriſon and Inhabitants, being inraged at their Reſolution, and for the Death of ſo many eminent Men as on their ſide had periſhed in the Siege. And with the Citizens ſo periſhed this moſt Beautifull of Eaſtern Cities, nothing remaining of it but Rubbiſh. The Women and Children were led away into Captivity, the Men generally being put to the Sword. But Calliſtus, Conſtantinus, Theodorus Craterus, all Patritians, and others who were eminent for their Employments in the Army or the State were taken, and the Prince now in an Inſulting manner cauſed the Ambaſſadours to take a view of the eſtate of Amorium, and then ſent them with an Account thereof to their Maſter.

And Race the City Amorium.

Which makes the Emperour melancholy.

After which he Dies.

Πρὸς τ̃ ῥῆγα φραγγίας. ſic Imp. Occid. communiter vocant Cedrenus, alii.

47. He ſent them back again to deſire that ſuch eminent Perſons as were taken, being his Kinſmen and Allies, and the reſt of the Priſoners might be ſet at liberty for their Ranſome, offering four and twenty Centenaries; but he rejected them and their Meſſage ignominiouſly, ſaying he ſhoud be unjuſtly accounted a Fool indeed, if he ſhould accept of but ſo many Centenaries, when it had coſt him no leſs than a thouſand Centenaries in his Preparations. Theophilus hereupon as overwhelmed with inſupportable Calamity fell into exceſſive Melancholy, ſo as to abſtain from all ſuſtenance, receiving nothing but ſome Snow-water, which caſt him into a Dyſentery. The onely Thought or Diſcourſe he would admit, was how to be revenged for Amorium. To this end he ſent away Theodoſius a Patritian toward the King of France, to deſire his Aſſiſtence, and to procure him to invade thoſe Parts of Africk which belonged to the Amermumnes; but this Deſign came to nothing, Theodoſius Dying upon the way e'er he could deliver his Meſſage. His Melancholy and Diſeaſe both encreaſing upon this Diſappointment, in his Litter he would be carried to Magnaura, where calling together the Senate, with the Chief Men of the City, he moſt ſadly lamented the poſture of his Affairs, and earneſtly moved them, that being mindfull of their kindneſs to him, they would continue faithfull to his Wiſe and Son, and ſecure them from all Treachery. His lamentable Speech they Anſwered with as lamentable a Cry, and praying for his Life and Health, promiſed him that in caſe ſo unacceptable a thing as his Death ſhould happen, they would ſtand by his Wife their Lady and Miſtreſs with their Lives and Fortunes to the utmoſt. After this he lived not long, yielding to the Diſtempers of his Mind and Body when he had Reigned twelve years, three months and twenty days. His care for his Poſterity it ſeems was ſo great, that he would not Dye without having Theophobus bear him company, whoſe Enemies took advantage at the Revolt of the Perſians in the Battel we mentioned, and encreaſed the Jealouſie conceived of him by the Emperour, from their giving to him the Title of Emperour, urging that the Revolt was not without his Device and Procurement. Having before cauſed him to be Impriſoned, when he was at the point of Death he commanded his Head to be cut off and brought to him, which touching with his Hand he breathed out theſe words, together with his Soul: Henceforth I am neither Theophilus, nor thou Theophobus. But ſome reported that Oriphas the Drungarius of Bigla ſlew him without having received any orders.

Michael his Son ſucceeds.

Joannes Curopalata. Cedrenus. Zonaras. Glycas.

48. Theophilus being Dead, Michael his Son ſucceeded him, the third of that Name, Sirnamed the Drunken: in the ſecond year of Lotharius, Emperour of the Weſt; the fifteenth of Gregory the Fourth, Biſhop of Rome; the Fifth Indiction, A. D. DCCCXLII. His Father by his Will left Manuel the Magiſter and Domeſtick of the Schools, and Theoctiſtus the Patritian and Logotheta Dromi his Tutours or Governours, but the Regency was committed to Theodora his Mother, who by their Directions ordered all Affairs of State. Preſently after the

A Perſecution againſt the Manichees.

Which cauſes a Rebellion,

And the Deſtruction of the Eaſt by the Inrodes of the Saracens.

Old Emperour's Death, the two Great Miniſters lately mentioned went into the Circus, where calling the People together they rehearſed to them his laſt words and Will, inſiſted upon his Love and good Inclinations to them, and with many fair and alluring words endeavoured to gain their Affections toward his Young Son and Succeſſour, who promiſed, if need ſhould ſo require, to ſhed their Bloud in his behalf, and their Promiſe inſtantly confirmed by Oath. Theodora thus ſettled in the Government was drawn wholly to matters relating to the Church, binding all her endeavours for the reſtoring of Images. which for a conſiderable time by the late Emperours had been forbidden: and ſhe raiſed a great Perſecution againſt the Manichees, which became an occaſion of unſpeakable Calamities in the Eaſt. For thoſe ſhe employed in the Inquiſition, uſing no moderation but great cruelty in their Office, Nailed ſome of thoſe they Comdemned to Croſſes, and others put to Death by many and unheard-of ſorts of puniſhment. An hundred thouſand by this courſe they made away, and confiſcated their Eſtates, which drove the reſt into Deſperation and Rebellion, which was began by one Carbeas of that Sect, who ſerved Theodorus Meliſſenus, Commander of the Eaſt, in quality of Pratomandator. He underſtanding that his Father was Crucified, inraged by ſo ignominious an Affront, fled with five thouſand of his Perſwaſion to the Ameras of Mitylene, and from him to the Amermumnes himſelf, by whom being gratiouſly received he preſently after invades the Roman Territories, and therein builds two Cities, which he called Argannum and Amera. Then great numbers of the Manichees flying to him for ſhelter, to theſe two he added another for their Reception, by the Name of Tephrica. From theſe three places joyning with ſome Saracen Officers, they made Inrodes without intermiſſion into the Emperour's Dominions, with ſuch ſucceſs generally as pleaſed them, onely Alimus the Governour of Tarſus making an Inrode into Armenia, was cut off with his Party, and Amer the Ameras of Melitena for ſome time was diverted by the Revolt of one of his Felow-officers. But having Conquered his Adverſary, and being a Man impatient of Reſt, he joyned himſelf with Carbeas, and renewed his Hoſtilities. Againſt them at length was ſent Petronas, Brother to the Empreſs, and Domeſtick of the Schools (which Office he executed, though it properly belonged to his Brother Bardas, who otherwiſe employed in State Affairs could not attend it) who led down an Army of Thracians againſt them, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

Manuel one of the Emperor's Guardians leaves the Court.

Theoctiſtus the other, Murthered by the procurement of Bardas, Uncle to the Emperour.

49. In the mean time Michael the Emperour growing up towards a Man, was mightily inflamed with a deſire to Govern by the procurement of this Bardas his Uncle, who thereby and by all other ways ſought to ſcrew up himſelf into Power. The great obſtacles to his Riſe were Manuel and Theoctiſtus, who being the Emperour's Governours, and conſtantly attending in Court, were by one means or other firſt to be removed. It luckily happened for him that there fell ſome miſunderſtanding betwixt them, which he ſo encreaſed that thereupon Manuel quitted the Palace, and retired to his own Houſe. Having thus removed him, he attempted the ſame upon his Inſtrument Theoctiſtus, whom he more hated, becauſe he had taxed him for having inceſtuouſly to doe with his Daughter-in-Law. The Engine he uſed was the Emperour's School-maſter, a wicked and intractable Man, whom the Scholar (commendable yet in this, that he was his Maſter) willing to Prefer to ſome conſiderable Office, Theoctiſtus had oppoſed it, telling him ſuch Preferments were to be beſtowed according to Merit, and not upon undeſerving Perſons. The Scool-maſter acted by Revenge, and the conſtant incouragements of Bardas, never left whiſpering into the Ears of the Youth, that all things went ill through the bad management of Theoctiſtus; that he had a Deſign to make a Marriage for the Empreſs or one of her Daughters, and put out the Emperour's Eyes; otherwiſe terrifying him, and telling him he muſt be quick, and very crafty in providing for his own ſafety. They having often met and deliberated about this matter, reſolved to have Theoctiſtus made away, and that after this manner. As he went to Lanſiacum for the Recording of ſome Tranſactions, the Emperour following after at ſome diſtance ſhould give the ſign by theſe words, Take him away. Theoctiſtus apprehending the ſign, endeavoured to ſave himſelf by flight towards the Court in the Circus, where the Secretaries then had their Office, but was ſtopt as he ran, and Bardas drawing his Sword threatned to kill any that ſhould make any oppoſition or defend him. He was then committed to Priſon till order ſhould be taken about him, which was not long in taking nor executing; for leſt the Empreſs ſhould in the Interim attempt any thing, they ſent one to diſpatch him, with whom he ſtrugled ſome time, but Died of a wound received in his Belly.

50. He being dead, Bardas took upon him the Office of Canicleus; but Theodora underſtanding what was done, ran with her hair all about her ſhoulders up and down the Court, which ſhe filled with her ſhrieks and cries, curſing her Son and Brother, and wiſhing to them the like end. Bardas could not bear her Reproaches, but reſolved that ſhe, as the next obſtacle to his Deſigns, was to be removed. She being an underſtanding Woman, was aware hereof, and reſolved not to put all into bloud by making reſiſtence, but to call together the Senate, and give them an Account what Treaſure was now in the Palace, both to obviate the extravagant expences of her Son, and to make manifeſt how carefull and frugal ſhe had been, during her adminiſtration of Affairs. She told them, that of Gold there was one thouſand and ninety Centenaries, and three thouſand of Silver, partly gathered together by her Husband, and partly by her ſelf; beſides very great Wealth in other kinds, of which ſhe thought fit to let them know, leſt her Son ſhould hereafter make them believe that ſhe had left him an empty Purſe; and ſhe cauſed the Officers of the Treaſury to be preſent, who bore witneſs to what ſhe had ſaid. Having thus delivered her ſelf, ſhe reſigned her Power and Government, and departed from Court; of which her Son was not at all diſpleaſed. For all this Wealth the fooliſh Young Prince in a ſmall time conſumed. Being above all things delighted in Riding, and Driving of Chariots, he refuſed not the Office of a Driver himſelf in the Cirque, and ſuch as would accompany him and play with him at this or other idle and Raſcally Sports, he profuſely enriched, beſtowing upon each an hundred, eighty, or at leaſt fifty Pounds at the Chriſtening of their Children. Having thus made away all his Mother had left him, when the ſolemn time came that he was to make Preſents, having no other means left him of making Money, he cauſed to be melted and ſtamped thoſe famous Trees of Gold, which (as Glicas relates) being made in the late Emperour's time by Leo the Philoſopher a Biſhop, the greateſt Scholar of his time, held in the Boughs a number of Golden Birds, which by virtue of an Engine ſung melodiouſly, together with Golden Lions which roared alſo by the ſame Device, beſides as many Vultures, and other ſtuff of the ſame metal, with other things, for which the Imperial Palace was famous, and gratified the curioſity of Strangers. In the ſame manner he had dealt with the Imperial Robes, but that Death prevented him, and Baſilius his Succeſſour recovered them out of the Hands of his Inſtruments, who found in the Houſe onely three Centenaries of Gold, and nine Bags of Miliariſia, which he produced to the Senate, and deploring the Poverty of the Empire, Commanded them to Conſult by what means it might beſt be ſupplied.

Theodora the Emperour's Mother gives an account of the Treaſure,

Which Michael laviſhly conſumes.

51. But Bardas and his Nephew proceeding in their evil courſes, and ſtill jealous of the Empreſs, cauſed Petronas her own Brother, when on a time ſhe came to the Church in Blachernis, to lay hands on her and her Daughters that accompanied her, to ſhave them, and make them all Nunns, which Indignity ſhe not long ſurvived. Now the whole Power was in Bardas his Hands, whom his Nephew Honoured with the Dignity of Curopalata, as a Reward for thus dealing with his Mother. After this he raiſed an Army, and undertook with him an Expedition againſt the Saracens, and the Ameras of Melitena, and laid Siege to a City of theirs, ſituate upon the River Euphrates. Herein they contained themſelves, as willing to have it believed that they durſt not adventure out, and their Deſign proſpered ſo well, that the Emperour's Army thereupon grew ſecure, and took no care how they ordered their matters. The Saracens then took the advantage when they were at Prayer, and going to Communicate on the Lord's Day, and iſſuing out fell upon them, put them eaſily to the Rout, the Emperour eſcaping by the ſwiftneſs of his Horſe. All the Baggage of the Army was taken, and Charbeas Captain of the Manichees ſo notably behaved himſelf, that beſides many of the Inferiour ſort which fell by his Hands, he took no fewer than an hundred of the moſt eminent Commanders alive, who were all put to Ranſome, onely one Seon died in Reſtraint. Two years after, Amer with an Army conſiſting of thirty thouſand Men invaded the Roman Territories, whom Michael oppoſed with no fewer than five and forty thouſand Thracians and Macedonians; but Amer making his Paſſage through bye-ways, fell upon him unexpectedly, and with as much eaſe as formerly, put his Army to flight. And he himſelf had been taken, but that Manuel the Domeſtick of the Schools in good time came in to his Reſcue with a ſtrong Party. The reſt ſhifted for themſelves, every Man as he could.

Theodora. ſhaven.

An Expedition againſt the Saracens.

But with ill ſucceſs.

They invade the Roman Territories, and rout the Emperour's Army.

52. Two

Another Invaſion.

Wherein the Saracens are worſted.

Bardas made Cæſar.

52. Two years more having paſſed after this Ingagement, Amer marches with another Army of forty thouſand Men into the Roman Provinces and waſtes Armenia, with the Maritime Parts; at which time it's reported that he imitated the mad frolick of Xerxes, in laſhing the Sea, becauſe it ſtopped his farther pleaſant progreſs. The Emperour upon the News, ſent Orders to his Uncle Petronas, with all the force he could make to march againſt him, who then lying at Epheſus, and much diſturbed upon Receit of the Letters, conſulted one John a Monk, who had the opinion of a Prophet, and by him was promiſed victory againſt the Saracens. Incouraged hereby, he haſtes toward the Enemy, whom in an advantageous place he compaſſes about, and after ſome vain attempts of getting looſe, cuts him off, and his whole Army. The Son of Amer being abroad on Foraging, and hearing of the diſaſter, made with all ſpeed he could toward Melitena, but the Officer that commanded the Charſian Straits, took him and his Party and preſented him to Petronas. Now returned Petronas to Conſtantinople, carrying along with him this Monk, whom he commended as a wonderfull Man to the Emperour and his Brother Bardas, and for his good Service was made Domeſtick of the Schools, Manuel being lately dead. Bardas being now left without a Competitour, ordered all things as he liſted, putting in and out all Officers, and now procured to himſelf the Dignity of Cæſar, Michael in the mean time, as he was well pleaſed he ſhould, by his ridiculous Actions making himſelf deſpicable in the eyes of all Men. Bardas hoping one day to be ſole Maſter of all, that he might by ſomething commend himſelf to the publick, endeavoured to bring into faſhion again Philoſophy and other Parts of Learning, which by reaſon of the ignorance of the later Emperours, had for many years lain buried in oblivion, appointing to each Science it's ſeveral School in the Palace of Magnaura. He was frequently preſent alſo in the Courts of Juſtice at the Cirque, and procured the Laws again to flouriſh, which in theſe times had been alſo much neglected.

The Maritime Coaſts of the Empire infeſted by Pirates.

The firing of Beacons forbidden by the Emperour.

53. In the mean time, all the Coaſts lying upon the Euxine Sea, were grievouſly waſted by a ſort of Pirates called Roſſi, a Scythian People, fierce and cruel, inhabiting ſome of the Northern Parts of the Mountain Taurus. They brought the City of Conſtantinople alſo into great danger. About the ſame time another Fleet of Pirates from Crete infeſted thoſe Parts, lying about Proconneſus and the Cyclades, and moſt horrible Earthquakes happened, whereof the greateſt on Aſcenſion day, wherewith Walls, Churches, and other Buildings and Works were overturned. Beſides Rivers and Fountains failed of their Waters, and many other Prodigies happened in divers places; of all which when the Emperour had notice, he regarded them not, ſo intent he was upon his Races. One ſottiſh Act of his muſt not be paſt over in ſilence. His Predeceſſours, that they might have certain notice of the Incurſions of the Saracens, and to give warning to the Inhabitants of the Neighbouring Countries, that they might not be ſurprized, cauſed to be Built as near Tarſus, in the Border of theirs and the Saracenian Dominions, a ſtrong Fort or Tower called Luluni, on a very high Rock, wherein were placed certain Men, who as ſoon as ever they perceived theſe People to be about an Invaſion, by fire kindled, were to give notice thereof to others that kept their ſtation in another Hill called Argens. Thoſe in Argens gave a ſign in the ſame manner to others that watched in Ægialus, thoſe to others at Mamas. From Mamas the ſign was given to the Cirque, from the Cirque to Mocillum, and from Mocillum to thoſe that watched in the Mount of St. Auxentius, who in the laſt place gave the ſign to the great Palace. By theſe Beacons were the Emperours, in a moment as it were, certified of the Enemies motion, and the Countreymen had timely warning to ſecure themſelves and goods, in the ſtrong holds adjoyning. Now it happened that on a time, near the Church of St. Mamas, this Michael beginning his Races, the Beacon was ſet a fire, which exceedingly afflicted him, leſt the People ſhould not view well, and conſider his Dexterity in Riding. And leſt by any ſuch ſight; the attention of the Spectatours ſhould be diverted for the time to come, he forbade the fires to be made in the places that were near to the City.

Who is wholly addicted to Racing and Villany.

54. Another time as he ſate in his Chariot, and the Horſes were juſt ready to be let goe, word was brought, that the Ameras of Melitena, did grievouſly haraſs the Province of Aſia, and being come already as far as Malagina, threatned the reſt with Deſolation, which being told him by the firſt Notary, in a ſorrowfull manner, who alſo preſented him with the Letters of the Domeſtick of the Schools, matters of Importance as he imagined, he looked upon him with a grim and angry Countenance, asking him how he durſt, Villain as he was, diſturb him, buſied

UMI

buſied in ſo important an Affair, with ſuch trifling matters, eſpecially now onely intent upon this, to turn off him that ſhould Encounter him, to the left Hand, which was the wager laid. He would debaſe himſelf with all ſorts of mean Actions, blaming his Predeceſſours for inſiſting upon State. He had ever in his company a crew of moſt impure and profligate wretches, whom to abuſe all things Sacred, he would cauſe to put on Copes, and other Veſtments wherein Churchmen were wont to Officiate, and thus Habited, to imitate the moſt Sacred Functions and Holy Myſteries. One Gryllus a Rogue, he called Patriarch; others he named Metropolitans, and took to himſelf the Title of one of the chief Biſhops and Preſident of the Colony. With this crew he would meet the Patriarch in Proceſſion, and once ſent for his Mother, as to meet Ignatius, who then held that Place, and as the good Woman on her knees begged a Bleſſing, the Villain Gryllus appeared, having all the while hid his Beard, and with filthy geſtures derided the poor Lady, who with ſuch Anger as upon ſuch an occaſion became her, denounced vengeance unto her Son. Such were the manners and company of this diſſolute Prince, whom veangeance at laſt overtook according to his Mother's Prediction, but firſt all his Governours, and ſuch as ſhould have better principled and adviſed him, were to receive their Puniſhment. How Theoctiſtus came to his end we have already ſeen, and Bardas his Tragedy is now to follow, which was uſhered in by a terrible Dream, and ſeveral other preſages, as our Authours obſerve.

55. He had perſwaded the Emperour to Arm againſt the Saracens of Crete, who infeſted his Subjects upon all occaſions, and were now come in their Expedition into Thrace, as far as a place called Chorus. There the Servants of Bardas, whether out of Deſign or unadviſedly, for they were in an hurry, pitched their Maſters Tent upon an Hill, the Pavilion of the Emperour being placed below in the Plain. This advantage was taken by his Enemies, who ceaſed not to render Michael jealous of him, and to inſtigate him againſt him to procure his ſudden Deſtruction. Yet the Intereſt of Cæſar was ſuch at Court, that they had much difficulty to bring about what they deſired. For, his Son Antigonus bore the Office of Domeſtick of the Schools, and had the other Officers of the Army much at his Devotion; and Symbatius the Logotheta Dromi, being his Son-in-Law, was concluded of his Party, although the Emperour himſelf privately had taken him off, and no Man ſo much watched an opportunity to deſtroy him, and to him alone was committed the truſt of giving the privy ſign when it ſhould be done. Now Symbatius making a Relation of what had happened, ſigned his Face with the Croſs, which was the ſign agreed of among the Conſpiratours. Yet were they very ſlow, being awed by the Relations and Dependents of Bardas, there preſent, though Michael fearfull leſt the Plot, if not now executed, might be turned upon himſelf, by one he could truſt, ſent and animated them all he could. The Fact had not now been committed, but Baſilius the Emperour's Chamberlain, (who for eſpecial reaſons, as we ſhall ſee at large, was more concerned than any other to have him made away) ſtirred up his courage, and exhorting thoſe preſent to ſtand to him courageouſly, reſolved upon it. Bardas ſeeing them come upon him with drawn Swords, fell down at the Emperour's feet, and was cut all in pieces, after which they expoſed his Genitals ignominiouſly fixed upon a Pole. So great a Tumult hereupon enſued, that brought the Emperour into extreme danger; and he might have eaſily miſcarried in it, had not Conſtantine the Drungarius of Biglæ come in in good time with a ſtrong Party of Men and quieted thoſe concerned, affirming that Bardus was juſtly put to Death. He being after this ſort diſpatched, Michael caſt off all thoughts of the Expedition to Crete, and returned to Conſtantinople.

Bardas Murthered.

56. Here it's obvious to remark the Cuſtome of Courtiers and great Miniſters to raiſe themſelves upon the Ruine of others, and that uſually they themſelves are ſerved in the like ſort; the Intereſts of times or humours of Princes eaſily changing, although their hopes ſo beguile their wits that they do not conſider it. Bardas had caſt down others, as ſteps to mount to his great Preferment, and more than probable it is, that the Emperour himſelf muſt at length have faln for a greater advantage, had he not been prevented; but now his Removal makes way for another Favourite, who executes at laſt what he had but deſigned. This was Baſilius but lately mentioned, by Birth a Macedonian, but as ſome reported, of Armenian Deſcent, and that from the ſtock of the Arſacidæ, out of which alone of old time the Kings of the Parthians, Medes and Armenians could be choſen, out of reſpect to Arſaces the Firſt, who recovered the Kingdom to the the Parthians from thoſe of Perſia. And long did this Race continue, Artabanus and Clienes being the two laſt of the Kings, who being driven from their Inheritance, came in the time of Leo the Great to Conſtantinople, and he entertained them honourably, aſſigning them convenient abode in the City. Afterward the King of Perſia invited them to return, about which while they were Conſulting, Leo removed them to Nice, a Town in Macedonia, whence in proceſs of time, when the Saracens had Conquered the Perſian Kingdom, the Amermumnes alſo invited their Poſterity to return. This being underſtood by the Emperour Heraclius, who perceived that he recalled them not out of any affection, but that by their means he might the better maſter the Armenians and Parthians, he removed them firſt to Philippi a City in Macedonia, and thence to Adrianople, where they multiplied, yet kept their race unmixt with other People. Sometime after when Conſtantine and his Mother Irene reigned, one of them by Name Maictes came to Conſtantinople, where lighting upon Leo one of his own ſtock he contracted ſuch Friendſhip with him, that coming to Adrianople he gave him his Daughter in Marriage. Of this Conjunction was born the Father of Baſilius, ſo gracefull a Perſon, that a certain eminent Matron, ſaid to be deſcended from Conſtantine the Great, married to him her Daughter. This is the Pedigree Cedrenus gives us of Baſilius, but by others generally it's accounted but a fiction, who affirm him born of very ignoble and obſcure Parents.

Baſilius put into his Place.

Some account of him.

57. It's granted on all Hands, that when Crumus the Bulgarian took Adrianople his Parents were led away Captive, and carried him with them being a young Infant hanging on the Breaſt. The Succeſſour of Crumus, being ſore diſtreſſed by ſeveral Defeats received from the Romans, made peace with the Emperour, and by virtue of that Agreement reſtored all Priſoners formerly taken, amongſt whom Baſilius returned. Many Prodigies are ſaid to have portended to him the Empire. An Eagle, when being a Child he was laid in the Field, as his Parents were at work, covered him with her Wings, and being beaten off once or twice ſtill returned to her former Poſture. When he was grown up to be a youth, his Father died, and his Mother being left a poor Widow, and not able to maintain him, he went to Conſtantinople to ſeek a ſervice, where he got into the Family of one Theophilizes (ſo called from his ſmall ſtature) who was of kin to the Emperour and to Bardas, being recommended it's ſaid by him that kept the Church of St. Diomedes, to whom they will have it that the Martyr revealed it that he ſhould be Emperour, and commanded him to take him in as he lay at the Gate for want of a better Lodging. Theophilizes being much taken with him, for he was tall, beautifull of Body, and wore long curled Hair, being beſides very active, and of a very good wit, made him Gentleman of his Horſe, which they in thoſe days and places called Protoſtrator. The Emperour at this time having an unruly Horſe, none could tame him, till at length it was effected by Baſilius, who when he was got looſe rode after, and leaping into the Emperour's ſadle made him quiet and tractable, which was accounted another Omen, the Imperial trappings and purple Bridle, Enſigns of Majeſty, being conſidered. For this Service and Contemplation of his Dexterity, he was taken amongſt the Officers of the Emperour's Stable, and ſhortly after Bardas having out of Jealouſie cauſed the former to be turned out, was made a Protoſtrator or Maſter of the Horſe a place both very honourable, and which gave him occaſion often to be near and converſe with him. So much he grew into favour, that Bardas began to caſt a jealous Eye upon him; as alſo the Empreſs Theodora her ſelf, by reaſon of I wot not what ſecret marks ſhe eſpied in his Face, which had been formerly deſcribed to her by her Husband, as appropriate to him that ſhould put a Period to his Family.

58. But neither her ſwooning at the ſight of theſe marks, nor all the Caution ſhe could give her Son could in the leaſt diminiſh his Reputation with him, who after ſome time preferred him to be Chamberlain, which ſo inraged Bardas, and augmented his jealouſie that he ſought his deſtruction; and this being known to the other, impoſſible it was that both of them could long ſubſiſt. But the expedition towards Crete gave Baſilius the Advantage, who as Cæſar ſtood and talked with the Emperour, lift up his Hand in a threatning manner at his back, which the other by chance looking behind him having eſpied, fell down at the Feet of Michael, where the reſt of the Conſpiratours cut him in pieces, but not till the firſt ſtroke was given by Baſilius. Returning then back with the Emperour to Conſtantinople, he received from him in Marriage Eudocia the Daughter of Juceres, a Lady much extolled for her Chaſtity aſwell as Beauty, and other Qualifications by Baſilius made Emperour.

Conſpires with others who murther Michael.

by Cedrenus, but Zonaras writes, that ſhe was Concubine to Michael, and that ſhe was then believ'd with Child by him of Leo, who afterward ſucceeded Baſilius as his Son. After this the Emperour made him his Collegue, or Emperour cauſing him to be Crowned by the Patriarch in the Great Church of St. Sophia. For after the Death of Bardas, the Adminiſtration of Affairs having faln upon Michael alone, his Weakneſs and Debauchery came to be made more publick than ever, no buſineſs being diſpatched, but all things going to Ruine, which conſtrained him as ſtupid as he was to think, of ſome one who ſhould bear the Burthen. Being eaſed ſomething in his mind by this he returned to his Drunkenneſs,his driving of Chariots and other looſe Courſes rather more than ever, and on a time when he had won the prize entertained Baſilius and Eudocia at Supper,being grievouſly incenſed againſt him for rebuking and admoniſhing him; for in his mad and drunken fits he would command the Ears of ſome, the Hands others, and ſometimes the Heads to be cut off. But there one Baſilinus, of late Maſter of his Barge, but whom for his comely Perſon he had made ſomething familiar with him, ſtanding by the Table fell into a great Harangue, wherein he wonderfully extolled him for his ſkill, and his management of his late exerciſe in the Cirque. Michael being even drunk and much elevated with Commendation, delivers him his Purple ſhooes,bids him put them on,and ſalutes him Emperour; at which when he was abaſhed and looked upon Baſilius, the Emperour growing angry, Baſilius beckoned to him to doe as he was bidden. The ſhooes being on, Michael inraged at Baſilius told him, that theſe Enſigns of Empire did much more become Baſilinus than him, and asked him whether as he made him Emperour, by the ſame Authority he might not create another. To this relation of Zonaras Cedrenus and Glycas add, that as Emperour and more fit than the other he recommended Baſilinus to the Senate. However, Baſilius ſaw plainly there was no way but one, he muſt either ſtrike or be ſtricken, and therefore making a Party, as Michael was drunk another time in the Palace of St. Mamas, being led into his Chamber, when he was faſt aſleep he made ſure the Doors, and then came with his Conſpiratours who being reſiſted by thoſe that waited without, a noiſe was made,and the Emperour therewith awaked. One going in to him with a drawn Sword,cut off both his Hands as he held them up, and therewith returned to his Companions. Not able to go he ſtumbled, lay roaring on the ground, till another of them thruſt his Sword through his Breaſt, and ſo opened his Body that his Entrails came out. To ſuch an end came Michael ſirnamed the Drunken, after he had reigned twenty five years and three Months, whereof fourteen years together with his Mother.

Baſilius ſole Emperour.

Furniſhes his Treaſury.

Takes care that Juſtice be rightly adminiſtred.

Prevents cheating.

59. Michael being dead, Baſilius became ſole Emperour by conſent of Nobility and People, in the twelfth year of Ludovicus the ſecond Emperour of the Weſt, the tenth of Nicholas Biſhop of Rome, the fifteenth Indiction. A. D. 867. The firſt thing he did was to call together the Senatours and Magiſtrates, and to open the Treaſury wherein were onely found as we ſaid before three Centenaries. But to know how theſe vaſt Summs of Money had been ſpent, he procured the Accounts of an old Eunuch belonging to the Revenue, and ſhewed them to the Magiſtrates and Senate, by whom it was unanimouſly reſolved, that thoſe who had received them for ſuch diſhoneſt or frivolous ſervices ſhould refund to the Treaſury, which ſentence he ſo far mitigated as to make them pay half, by which means three Hundred Centenaries of Gold were recovered. By this and other Courſes very acceptable and honeſt he ſo furniſhed himſelf, that he made great largeſſes to the People. Hereby he got great Reputation and Love, which he augmented by beſtowing Offices upon fit Perſons alone, by taking great care for equal and indifferent diſtribution of Juſtice, to which end he appointed upright Judges to whom he aſſigned convenient Salaries, and dividing them into three Courts which he appointed to ſit dayly in Magnaura, the Cirque and Chalce or the Braſen Gate, which for this purpoſe he repaired. To ſuch as were poor and unable to be at the expence, he allowed Money for their ſuits. As his publick Affairs permitted, he himſelf would attend theſe matters, and going down to Genicum where his Cuſtome-Houſe was, took care that no Man ſhould be oppreſſed. It's reported that once being at the Place he was wont to hear Cauſes, and finding none that exhibited any complaint, he ſuſpected that ſome of his Officers hindred ſuch as had recourſe to Juſtice, and therefore he ſent certain Officers about the City to make inquiry, if there were any that deſired to prefer their Petitions, who returning with this anſwer that they could find none, he wept for joy, and gave God Thanks. Taking notice that the weights and Meaſures of the City were ſtamped onely with Figures,which wearing out,or ignorant Perſons not underſtanding them, gave opportunity to many Tradeſmen to cheat, he cauſed inſtead of Figures the quantity to be expreſt in words at length, that any Countreyman might reade them, and this at his own charge. To theſe commendations is added by ſome, that he altered and new modelled the Civil Laws themſelves, of which we ſhall inquire in another place.

A Conſpiracy againſt him, but diſcovered and puniſhed.

He ſettles his Family.

He waſtes the Countrey near Tephrica.

Enters the Territories of Melitena.

Thence to the Manichees deſtroying all things in his return to Conſtantinople.

60. But though he gave content to the generality, all were not ſatisfied; for in his firſt year one George and Symbatius, both Patritians, made a Conſpiracy againſt him, which being revealed by one of the Party, their Eyes were put out, and the reſt being ſhewn up and down in diſgrace were ſent into Baniſhment. The better to obviate all Deſigns, to gain Diadems to his two Eldeſt Sons Conſtantine and Leo, and in his third year to his third Son Alexander. His fourth, Stephen by Name, he cauſed to take orders with intention to prefer him to be Patriarch, as ſome have written, and his four Daughters he made Nuns in the Monaſtery of Euphemia the Martyr. Having ſetled his Domeſtick affairs as to him ſeemed moſt prudential, he then reſolved upon War, and finding the uſual Number of Souldiers much diminiſhed, by reaſon that Michael had otherwiſe ſpent their Pay, he took care for making up the ſeveral Companies by new Levies. Then went he againſt Tophrica, the Governour of which was one Chryſochir a Man of approved Valour and Skill, who had done much miſchief by his Inrodes made into the Roman Territories. Upon notice of the Emperour's approach he ſhut himſelf up within the Walls, to which Baſilius purpoſed to lay Siege, but underſtanding that the Place was ſtrong and well furniſhed, he waſted the Countrey adjacent, and taking three Neighbouring Caſtles Abara, Coptus and Spatha, he departed thence with much booty. This expedition ſo terrified Taurus, a City not far diſtant from Tephrica, that it made peace with the Emperour, and Curterius an Armenian, who held a City called Locana, and had done great harm in the Roman borders, gave it up into his Hands. In the mean time, a ſelect Party took in Zapetra and Samoſata, where a great Number of Chriſtian Captives were ſet at liberty, and then paſſing over Euphrates waſted the Countrey, and with many Captives and rich Spoils returned to the Emperour, then lying upon the River Artzanucus. He incouraged by this Succeſs marched to Euphrates, and laying a Bridge over it beſides other Acts of Hoſtility, took a Caſtle called Rapſacium, as a Party he ſent to haraſs the Countrey, lying betwixt Arſines and Euphrates, deſtroyed five other Forts. Entring the Territories of Melitena, he killed and took many of thoſe that made oppoſition, and at firſt thought of attacking the City, but finding it very ſtrong, and ſo furniſhed with Proviſions as to hold out a very long Siege, he departed into the Countrey of the Manichees, where deſtroying all things as he paſſed with Fire and Sword he took four Caſtles, and then returned to Conſtantinople, which entring at the Golden Gate from the Hebdomus, he went in triumph accompanied with the Acclamations of the People to the Church of St. Sophia, where having given thanks, the Patriarch, according to the Cuſtome, ſet a Crown upon his Head. This done having diverted himſelf a little with his Wife and Children in the Palace, he returned to the Cares of the Commonwealth.

The Manichees invade the Emperour's Dominions.

But are met.

61. The year that followed, the Manichees, under Command of Chryſochir, again made an Inrode and waſted the Emperour's Dominions, againſt whom, according to the Cuſtome, he ſent the Domeſtick of the Schools. He with all the Forces that could be made reſtrained their Incurſions as he could, but not daring to hazard all in a Battel, as the Enemy retired, ſent two Commanders with Orders to follow him at ſome convenient diſtance to watch his motions; if he returned to let him know, but if he went directly home then to return back to the Camp. It happened that thoſe two Officers being upon their Duty, and watching the Enemy as he had ſate down at the Foot of a certain Hill, their two ſeveral Parties they commanded, fell into a ſharp Contention about their Valour, and which had moſt deſerved for their Service in the Field. The Contention continuing, a cunning Fellow amongſt them, told them it was vain to contend in words, ſeeing that ſo notable an opportunity preſented it ſelf by their Actions, as to declare their Superiority in Courage. The thing took ſo well, that their Officers reſolved to make uſe of this their preſent Heat, which would receive much advantage from the convenience of the Place, they being upon the higher Ground. The half of their Men ſix Hundred and no more, they led down againſt the Manichees, and the other ordered to ſtand upon the Hill, and by making a great Noiſe to amuſe them with apprehenſion of greater Numbers. By

And taken by the Romans.

Night they made their Onſet with ſuch Clamour, as put the Enemies into a great Fright, which hindred him from looking about or conſulting, and he fairly betook himſelf to his Heels. Then was notice ſent to the Domeſtick of the Schools, and purſuit was made for thirty Miles with great Execution. Chryſochir himſelf was ſlain, and his Head ſent to the Emperour, and with him fell the whole Vigour and Strength of the Manichees, who from Tephrica had done ſo great miſchief, and Cameia their Metropolis our Greek Hiſtorians call it, or chief City, was preſently after deſtroyed. About which time alſo Baſilius recovered Lulum a Caſtle from the Saracens; and Melvus another Fort yielded it ſelf.

Another Conſpiracy, diſcovered and puniſhed.

Baſilius invades Syria.

62. This good ſucceſs of Baſilius abroad was envied at home, another Conſpiracy being at this time hatched againſt him, by one Curcuas a Patritian; but one of the Number revealed it; Curcuas had his Eyes put out, and the reſt being ignominiouſly beaten and ſhaven were baniſhed their Countrey. Having eſcaped this danger, in the beginning of the Spring with his eldeſt Son Conſtantine he made an Invaſion into Syria, and took Cæſarea the chief City of Cappadocia, where he ſtaid ſome time and trained his men. But thence by ſeveral Parties ſent abroad, he took in ſeveral Places, and either cauſed the Governours of the Saracens to run away or to ſubmit; after which he paſſed over the Rivers Onopnictes and Sardus, and came to Cucuſus, and thence through the Straits of the Mountain Taurus to the City Germanicia, the Inhabitants whereof, as of other Towns, ſhutting up themſelves he waſted the Countrey about, and having taken a Fort called Geron, with all his might fell upon the City Adapa. The Inhabitants moſt valiantly defending themſelves, he asked how they could be ſo confident, ſeeing ſuch certain deſtruction to hang over their Heads, to which an Old Man amongſt them anſwered, that their City was not to be taken by him at this time, but by one deſcended from him named Conſtantine, therefore they were nothing terrified by this Attempt he made. He replyed, that he had a Son there whoſe Name was Conſtantine, but the Old Man again affirmed, that he was not the Perſon, but another of that Name and of his Poſterity long after ſhould deſtroy the Place, which inraged Baſilius ſo as he indeavoured by all means poſſible to prove the Prediction falſe, but his indeavours would not ſucceed, and the Froſt coming on he was forced to riſe up and be gone homewards. In his return he cauſed many of the Priſoners to be killed becauſe they were too numerous, and by ſeveral Hoſtile Acts ſtruck ſuch terrour into Abdelomeleres a Saracen Governour, that he ſubmitted himſelf to him and became his Aſſociate againſt his own Nation. Coming to Cæſarea out of Meſopotamia, and from elſewhere he received news of good ſucceſs of his Forces and Multitudes of Captives, whom he commanded to be put to death as Cumberſome and Dangerous. At Medæus he rewarded ſuch as had done worthily in this Expedition, and ſending the Army into its Winter Quarters returned to Conſtantinople, where he received a Crown from the Patriarch, as the manner was, and was Careſſed after the uſual ſort by the Inhabitants.

Returns with vaſt Spoils to Conſtantinople.

The Saracens beaten by the Conduct of Andreas.

63. By this ſucceſs of his Arms he quite broke the Power of the Manichees, or thoſe of Tephrica; but the Saracens from Tarſus began to renew their Hoſtilities, and rather more than ever to practiſe their Robberies and Depredations. Againſt them one Andreas a Scythian made very ſtrong oppoſition, and did ſo eminent ſervice therein, that the Emperour honoured him with the Dignity of a Patritian, and at length made him Domeſtick of the Schools. Furniſhed now with great Strength and Authority, he fought ſeveral Battels with the Ameras of Tarſus, wherein he had ever the better, and in one of them ſlew him who had by a Blaſphemous Letter challenged him to an Ingagement. Yet, as Envy is never wanting to great Atchievements, there were ſome at Court who maligned and accuſed him to the Emperour, as having had Tarſus it ſelf in his power, which he might eaſily have taken had he not wanted either Courage or Conduct, or both. They perſwaded Baſilius to take away his Command, which was given to one Stipeiotas, one of his Accuſers, one who made great Brags, and undertook ſpeedily to put the Emperour into poſſeſſion of Tarſus. And thither indeed he led an Army, but managed his matters without any diſcretion or forecaſt, and ſuffered his men to lie in ſuch diſorder, that the Saracens iſſuing out frighted them by certain Noiſes they made, and eaſily routing put moſt of them to the Sword, for by the many Overthrows received from Andreas they were reduced to ſo ſmall a Number, that they durſt not venture a Battel but were forc't to uſe their Wits. Such was the State of Affairs in the Eaſt, how they ſtood in the Weſtern parts we muſt now diſcover according to the meaſure of our Intelligence.

Pannonia and Dalmatia waſted by the Saracens.

But ſomewhat relieved by the Emperour's Forces.

64. All buſineſs, eſpecially Foreign, being neglected by Michael, ſuch Parts of Italy as had belonged to the Empire, with the Roman Pale in Sicily, were faln into the hands of the Saracens of Africk, and made Tributary to thoſe Barbarians. Farther, the Scythians (ſo our Authours call them) inhabiting Pannonia, Dalmatia, and the other adjoyning Countries, as the Chrobatæ, Servi, Zachlubi, Ferbuniotæ, Canalitæ, Diocletiani and Reutani, having been formerly ſubject to the Empire, had caſt off the Yoke and declared themſelves free People, againſt whom the Saracens of Carthage watching an opportunity, made War, and creating Goldan, Saba, and Calphuſus their Generals, with a Fleet of ſix and thirty Ships took ſeveral Cities of Dalmatia, as Butama, Roſa, and the lower Decatara, and thus proſpering they fell upon Raguſium the principal City of the Province. The Inhabitants being almoſt ſpent with a long Siege ſent to Conſtantinople for Relief, begging they might not be neceſſitated to fall into the hands of the profeſſed Enemies of Chriſtian Religion, and it well happened for them that by this time Michael was dead, and Baſilius in poſſeſſion of the Government. He commiſerating their condition ſent away with all expedition poſſible a Fleet conſiſting of an hundred Sail under command of Nicetas Oryphas a Patritian and the Drungarius of Naval Affairs, or Admiral of the Empire, a prudent and skilfull Perſon, whoſe coming the Saracens apprehending, raiſed their Siege, and ſailing to Lombardy ſeized on a Caſtle called Baris, whence they grapled by degrees all the Countrey about, and extended their power well nigh as far as Rome it ſelf. But the Chrobatæ, Servi, and the reſt of the Scythian Nations perceiving how well their Neighbours in Dalmatia had ſucceeded in ſending to the Emperour for aid, by their Meſſengers craved that they might return into their former Obedience and Protection of the Empire, to which their Petition Baſilius willingly aſſented, their Recovery bringing no little acceſſion to the good Fortune and Glory of his Reign.

Siege laid to Euripus, but to the great loſs of the Saracens.

65. But the Saracens that from Raguſium had invaded Italy, making great Devaſtations in that Countrey, Baſilius conſidered that his Fleet under Command of Nicetas was not ſufficient for the Enterprize, and therefore he ſent to Dolick King of France (Lodovick the Emperour of the Weſt theſe Greek Authours mean) and to the Pope of Rome, ſo they word it, to deſire their Aſſiſtence; moreover, thoſe his Subjects that were lately returned to obedience, he deſired not to be wanting to ſo good a work. Hereby a very great Army was got together, wherewith Baris was taken with Soldan, and ſuch as fought under his Command, whom the King of France led away Priſoner unto Capua. Here being kept two years, at length he beguiled the King and got his Liberty (as is more proper to be related in another place) and returning into Africk, thence brought a great Force againſt Capua (the Inhabitants of which had ſet him free) and Beneventum. Being thus diſtreſſed they ſent to the King for aid, but by the cunning of Soldan, having been brought to revolt from him, he refuſed to give them any, wiſhing them deſtruction, and thereupon they ſent to Baſilius, who on the contrary returned them a very comfortable anſwer. But it happened that the Meſſenger at his return, was taken by ſome of Soldan's Army, to whom being brought, he told him, That except going to the Walls, he would deliver to his Friends a quite contrary anſwer, and put them out of all hope of Relief, he ſhould die, which yet he refuſed, ſo great was his love to his Countrey, and telling them truly what he had in charge from the Emperour, was accordingly cut in pieces; after which, the Soldan not daring to abide the coming of the Succours, raiſed his ſiege and departed. About this time Eſman the Ameras of Tarſus, puffed up with his late Victory, ſends an Army aboard thirty great Ships (by the Saracens called Cumparia) againſt the City Euripus. But Baſilius being aware of ſuch an attempt, had ordered Orneiates the Governour of Greece, to have it very well manned, and furniſhed with all manner of neceſſaries; which rendred Eſman's attempts ineffectual, ſo as inſtead of taking the Town, he loſt many Men, and had ſeveral of his Ships burned. Inraged hereat, and knowing that Gold was wont to operate much, he cauſed a great quantity thereof to be ſet before the Wall, together with an hundred moſt beautifull Captive Virgins, propoſing theſe as a reward to him that ſhould firſt mount the works and enter. This being taken notice of by the Defendants, they incouraged one another, and ſetting open all their Gates, made an univerſal ſally, wherein they killed the Ameras and many of his followers, and drove away the reſt to their Ships, who few in number, with ſufficient ignominy, returned home.

Another Invaſion from Crete with like ſucceſs.

Μετὰ ἑπτὰ ϗ εἴκοσι Κȣμπαρίων, ἃς δὴ γαλέας κατονομάζειν εἰώθασιν. Cedrenus.

66. But this being over, another ſtorm came from Crete, the Lord whereof, Sael the Son of Apochapſe, ſent one Photius a ſtout and skilfull Souldier, with ſeven and twenty Cumparia, called alſo Gallies, againſt the Romans. Such Iſlands as lye in the Ægean Sea and all the Maritime Coaſts they waſted as far as Proconneſus and the Helleſpont. But Nicetas the Admiral, met with them at Cardia, in the mouth of the Ægean Sea, and in a ſharp Ingagement burnt twenty of their Ships, the reſt ſhifting for themſelves by flight. Notwithſtanding this great defeat, yet they of Crete under command of Photius, again Rigged out a Navy, and therewith much diſtreſſed the Weſtern parts of Peloponneſus. Nicetas going againſt them, found he ſhould looſe much time, and perhaps the expedition if he ſhould Coaſt round about that Peninſula, and therefore with admirable induſtry and expedition, conveyed his Ships over the Iſthmus or Neck of Land of Corinth, and fell upon the Pirates e'er they heard of his coming, of which he killed and took great Numbers, ſlew their Commander, ſunk, burnt, or took many of their Veſſels, and forced the reſt to run, and hide themſelves amongſt the Iſlands where he hunted them out, and ſuch as he could come by, put them to death, by various and exquiſite torments. This courſe had ſuch effect upon the Saracens of theſe Parts, that it made them more backward afterward to invade the Roman Countries, but could not ſo much operate upon thoſe of Africk, who with hopes of better ſucceſs ſet forth a Fleet conſiſting of ſixty Ships, of unuſual bigneſs, wherewith they did very much miſchief, roving as far as the Iſland Cephalenia and Zacynthus. Againſt them was ſent Naſar, or (as Zonaras calls him Narſan) the ſucceſſour of Nicetas, who haſted with a very ſtrong Fleet to Methona, but thence ſo many of his men ran away, that he durſt not venture to Ingage, his Ships were ſo unmanned. This he ſignified to the Emperour, who preſently thought of this device. Thirty Saracens then Priſoners at Conſtantinople, having their Faces beſmeared ſo as they could not be known, he cauſed to be led into the Cirque, and there whipped, thence to be ſent into Peloponneſus, as if they had been the Authours of the Defection, and there to be nailed to Croſſes, in the place whence it muſt be imagined that they fled. This ſtruck ſuch fear into all the Seamen and Souldiers, that it did the work, and they earneſtly deſired to be led againſt the Enemy, to which he readily aſſented, as ſoon as he had from Peloponneſus ſufficiently furniſhed himſelf, and given order to the Governour to meet and aſſiſt him.

Which cauſed the Saracens to deſiſt from invading the Roman Territories in the Weſt.

Thoſe of Africk make an invaſion.

67. The Saracens were much elevated at this delay of the Romans, and as fully ſecure left their Ships, and were intent upon Rifling and Pillage at Land, when Naſar by night, and unexpectedly fell upon their Fleet, and ſunk, burnt or took all their Veſſels; ſuch as remained he offered to God at the Church of Methona. The Emperour much commending his Conduct, ordered him to proceed in the hunting of theſe Pirates; whereupon he Sailed to Sicily, where he deſtroyed ſuch Ships as the Saracens had hired, and took many Veſſels full fraught with Merchandize, eſpecially with Oil, of which by this means he cauſed ſuch plenty, that a pound thereof was ſold for no more than an obolus. From Sicily he proceeded to the Coaſts of Italy, where joyning with the Emperour's Land Forces, commanded by Procopius his Protoveſtiarius or Gentleman of his Wardrobe, and Leo a Patritian, the Governour of Thrace and Macedonia, did very commendable Service. For another African Fleet was defeated at the Iſland Stele, and moſt of the Forts in Calabria and Lumbardy, were taken from the Saracens, which done, Naſar returned Victoriouſly to Conſtantinople. After his departure, things went not ſo well in Italy, where the two Commanders, Procopius and Leo falling out, and an Ingagement happening with the Enemy, Leo was ſo far tranſported with Anger and Revenge, as to ſuffer the other to periſh in the Battel for want of help, when he might eaſily have relieved him, having the better of the Saracens in that Wing where he fought. He endeavoured to make amends by his good Service in taking the Caſtle of Tarentum, and ſending the Plunder to Baſilius, but he underſtanding the manner of Procopius his Death, would not ſo let it paſs, but Baniſhed Leo, ſome of whoſe Servants preſently accuſed him of Treaſon, and for that were killed by Bardas, and David his Sons. Fearing puniſhment, they fled with their Father towards Syria, but were overtaken in Cappadocia by ſome the Emperour ſent to purſue them. Refuſing to yield, the two Sons were ſlain in the place. The Father was brought back to Conſtantinople, and Sentenced by the Judges to looſe one Eye and one Hand, which being executed, he was Baniſhed to Meſembria, and there ſpent his days.

But are beaten by Naſar, General to the Emperour.

Who returns to Conſtantinople in triumph.

Syracuſe Beſieged and taken by the Saracens, through the neglect of Adrian the Roman General.

Stephen, another General baniſhed for the like fault.

68. While the Emperour's Officers were thus employed in the Weſt, the Saracens of Africk thinking him careleſs, and unprovided at home, from Ægypt, Phœnicia, and Syria, got Ships together, and made up a conſiderable Navy, yet reſolving to eſpie out the condition of Baſilius, before they would attempt any thing, but the Spye returning, acquainted them how he kept many Men in readineſs for any occaſion, and employed them in Building of Churches and other Works to keep them in Action, which underſtood they deſiſted from their Enterprize. They of Carthage, had prepared a Fleet to defend themſelves, imagining Baſilius would make War upon them, but when they found no ſuch thing, concluding that he was diverted by ſome other Enemies, they Sailed over to Sicily, and Beſieged Syracuſe, to aſſiſtence whereof, one Adrian a Patritian was ſent, but he either wanted Wind, or loitered ſo by the way, that at Poloponneſus he heard that the City was taken (the ſtory went as firſt told by Spirits) which the Infidels deſtroyed, together with all the Churches. Adrian having certain Intelligence by ſome that had eſcaped, how he ſhould come too late, and was prevented, returned with the Fleet to Conſtantinople, and took Sanctuary in the Great Church, but was thence taken and ſent into Baniſhment. Much after the ſame manner miſcarried one Stephen a Cappadocian, who with a ſelect number of Thracians, Macedonians and Cappadocians, was ſent into Lombardy, but minding nothing but his eaſe and luxury, he was turned out of Command, and one Nicephorus Phocas ſent in his Room, (a valiant and worthy Perſon) with a new ſupply, and a Party of Manichees, formerly belonging to Chryſochis. Joyning theſe with the Forces of Stephen, he obtained many Victories over the Saracens, taking ſeveral Towns, as Amantia, Tropæ and St. Severina. Theſe were the Wars managed by Baſilius, in the ſeveral Quarters of the World.

Crimes laid to Baſilius his charge.

69. Otherwiſe he moſt employed himſelf in the Building or Repairing of Churches, of which Cedrenus reckons up a great number, beſides other expenſes upon the Imperial Palaces, much admiring him for his Prudence and Goodneſs, whereas Zonaras rather taxeth him for his toiling of his Subjects in ſuch works, and inſiſts moſt upon the Churches, built to St. Michael, as provoked to ſo much expenſe upon them by the ſtings of his Conſcience, to expiate as it were the Murther of the Emperour Michael, his Maſter and Benefactour. Two things beſides that there are upon Record againſt him, which cannot be excuſed, whereof the one was his being in a manner bewitched by the cheating tricks of a certain Monk called Theodorus Sandabarenus, who after he had loſt one Son, had almoſt procured him to make away the other. His Eldeſt Son Conſtantine being dead, his thoughts and hopes were fixed upon Leo the ſecond Brother, yet ſo he could not ceaſe from mourning for Conſtantine, and was ſo fond as to deſire he might have his ſhape, as alive, repreſented to him. This it's ſaid, this Sandabarenus being a Conjurer, undertook, cauſing a Spectrum in his ſhape to meet him on Horſeback, which he imbraced and kiſſed. However it was, this Monk got very much into his favour, and often deluded him by his cheating tricks, which Leo his Son could not but take notice of, often exclaiming againſt him as a Mountebank and Impoſtour; The Monk for this bore him a Mortal grudge, reſolving to be revenged of him, but concealed his Malice, and carried it fair towards him, the better to bring about his Deſign. He perſwaded him when he went abroad with his Father, to carry a knife along with him, therewith to ſerve his Father in hunting, if need were, or if any Treaſon ſhould be committed againſt him, that he might be in a capacity the better to aſſiſt him.

70. The young man not knowing his drift, and thinking it no imprudent advice, the next time he went abroad put a knife into his Boot, which the Monk underſtanding, and how his device took, then betook himſelf to the Father, telling him that his Son Leo had reſolved to kill him, and for that purpoſe that he might not doubt thereof, came prepared with a knife into the Field. The old man's jealouſie is eaſily kindled, the young man is ſearched and the knife found, whereupon he is committed to cloſe Priſon, in an apartment of the Palace, where his Eyes had been put out at the Inſtigation of the Monk, had not the Patriarch and the Senatours made vigorous oppoſition. But for a long time in Priſon he continued, notwithſtanding all interceſſion uſed in his behalf, ſo powerfull was the ſuſpicion of Baſilius, till on a ſolemn day, entertaining ſome of the Nobility at dinner, there was a Parrat hung up in a Cage, which, in imitation of ſome one he had heard, lamented the young Prince his condition, ſaying often, Alas, my Lord Leo? This occaſion the Senatours took to renew their ſolicitation to the Emperour in behalf of his Son, for whom they undertook to anſwer, as if the Baſilius dyes.

Bird it ſelf did reprehend them for their neglect, and the good nature of Baſilius was now ſo much wrought upon, that he ſet him at liberty, and reſtored him to his former place and favour. Baſilius not long after died, when he had Reigned eighteen years ten months and ſeven days, by himſelf, and about one year with Michael. About the cauſe of his death there is ſome difference; Cedrenus writes, that he died of a Diarrhœa, but Zonaras tells us another ſtory of his going to hunt, and how a certain Deer, more ſtout than ordinary, making reſiſtence, thruſt his horn under his girdle, and lift him up from the ground, bringing him into danger of his Life, which was ſaved by one of his Followers, who drew his Sword and cut the girdle. He adds, that inſtead of rewarding the man, he cauſed his Head to be cut off, as having drawn his Sword againſt the Emperour. Of this, Cedrenus is ſilent, and ſo John Curopalates, who mentions alſo the Flux he died of, though Zonaras attributes his death to an hurt received from the Deer. Leaſt of all is that ſtory to be believed of him that he ſhould make a vow, that if he could conquer and reduce the Bulgarians, he would turn Monk, and having conquered them in effect, performed it, abſtaining from all fleſh (both of Woman and Beaſt) ever after, though he ſtill uſed the Imperial Enſigns. Take it all together, his Government was ſuccesfull and eaſie to his People, which we may believe, though we gave no credit to what Cedrenus farther hath in his commendation, that when the Senatours adviſed him to ſend ſome Officers down into the Provinces, who ſhould be ſevere in exacting the publick Revenue, he would not permit any ſuch ſtrict inquiſition to be made.

Hiſtoriæ Acquitanicæ, apud Pithæum fragmentum.

Leo ſucceeds.

71. Baſilius being dead, Leo the Sixth of that Name, ſucceeded him in the ſixth year of Charles the third Emperour of the Weſt, the ſecond of Stephen the Sixth Biſhop of Rome, the fourth Indiction. A. D. DCCCLXXXVI. He ſucceeded him as his Son, though as to his Birth, Glycas bids us obſerve that the Writers of Annals differed amongſt themſelves. For Scylitzes wrote, that the Emperour Michael left no Natural Iſſue, ſuch as are much given to Drink ſeldom being able to get Children, as he tells us that Men skilfull in thoſe matters affirm. But others delivered it for a truth, that Leo was the Son of Michael, particularly Zonaras, that he was indeed the Son of Michael, and in the opinion of the world the Son of Baſilius. His ſeverity to him ſo long in reſtraint, may a little increaſe the ſuſpicion that he thought him not his own, and yet ſcarcely would he have left him the Empire, having other Sons, except he did it to make amends for the death of Michael. However, as to his Son, he left him very good Inſtructions, whereof ſome had Relation to his Faith and to the Church, and others to his univerſal good behaviour. And as a great means for his Information and Direction of his Life, he charged him to be conſtant in reading ancient Hiſtories, wherein with little labour he ſhould find what others with great pains had laid together. There he ſhould have a view of the vertues of good, and the vices of bad Men, with the ſeveral changes incident to humane Life, the viciſſitude of Affairs, and Inſtability of all worldly things, as alſo how prone Empire and Sovereignty it ſelf is to decay and periſh. In ſhort, he ſhould therein reade the rewards of good Actions, and the puniſhment of Wickedneſs, to learn to obtain the one and avoid the other. Leo, ſo far obſerved theſe Precepts, as by his Study, at leaſt to obtain ſo much Theory, that for his extraordinary knowledge he got the Sirname of Philoſopher. How he obſerved them as to practice the Hiſtory of his Actions, will beſt declare, though by Curopalates, and the reſt of the Writers, who have taken in a manner all from him, though it be moſt obſcurely and confuſedly delivered.

Evolvere ne unquam ceſſes Hiſtorias veterum, ibi enim reperies ſine labore, &c. Apud Baron. ad An. 886. n. 13.

Obtains the Sirname of Philoſopher.

Animadverts upon Sandabarenus.

72. The firſt thing that Leo did, was to be revenged of Sandabarenus, in order to which he removed Photius from the Patriarchal See, as one that bore him good will, and had conſulted with him for the promotion of a Kinſman of his own to the Empire; Sandabarenus he cauſed after Judgment to be ignominiouſly and grievouſly Whipped, though a Biſhop, and thence Baniſhed to Athens, where having his Eyes put out, he was ſent into the Eaſt, though long after he recalled him, and ordered him maintenance from the New Church; he outlived Leo, Dying in the Reign of Conſtantine his Son. While he was intent upon this courſe of Revenge, he ſought to get Reputation, and make amends for his Father's fault by taking up the Body of Michael the Emperour out of the Monaſtery at Chryſopolis, and conveying it to Conſtantinople, attended by a number of Prieſts, Torches and Candles, perfumed with ſweet Odours, placed in a Coffin of Cypreſs wood, and graced with all Rites and Ceremonies ſuiting the Place and Dignity which he bore. Being at the City received by the Emperour's Brothers, viz. Alexander and Stephen (whom he had made Patriarch in the room of Photius) with Singing and Removes the Body of Michael the Emperour to Conſtantinople.

The Saracens make an Inrode into the Empire.

other Solemnities it was intombed in the Church of the Apoſtles in a Marble Monument. While he thus employed himſelf, the Saracens the Enemies of the Empire were not idle, but took the uppermoſt City, lying upon the River Charſianus, making Priſoners all the Inhabitants. And at the ſame time happened a Fire in the Southern Part of Conſtantinople, which with other Buildings, conſumed the Church of St. Thomas the Apoſtle, repaired afterward by the Emperour with very great charge.

'Αγγαίων ὁ Λογγοβαρδίας δοὺξ γαμβρὸς ὢν τοῦ ῥηγὸς Φραγγίας, &c. Cedrenus.

73. In the ſecond year of Leo, the Greek Hiſtorians to whom thoſe of Italy herein bear no Teſtimony, tell us, that Angæus Son-in-Law of the King of France, and Captain or Governour of Lombardy, having notice of the Death of Baſilius, fell off from the Romans, and ſubjected all the Countrey to the obedience of himſelf. Againſt him was ſent Conſtantine, a Patritian and Overſeer of the Emperour's Table, with the Weſtern Forces, but he received a total Defeat, loſing all his Army, and eſcaping himſelf with much difficulty. About the ſame time the Sun ſuffered ſo great an Eclipſe, that the Stars were ſeen at Noon, and terrible Thunder and Lightning followed, with the force of which ſeven Men were killed in the Forum upon the Stairs of Conſtantine. Then was Saxius Beſieged by the Saracens, and the Emperour being exceedingly enamoured of a certain Lady called Zoe, gave a new and unheard-of Title to her Father Zantzas, of Father to the Emperour, having formerly made him Magiſter, and Logotheta Dromi. This Zoe was eſteemed the moſt Beautifull Woman of her time, and had been Married to a Patritian called Theodorus Guniazitzas, but he being removed it's ſaid by Poiſon, Leo uſed her as his Concubine in the lifetime of his Wife Theophania.

A War with the Bulgarians.

The year that followed happened a Quarrel and War with the Bulgarians upon this occaſion. There was an Eunuch, Muſicus by Name, belonging to Zantzas, who being very intimate with the Chief Merchants of the City, by his Intereſt with his Maſter procured the Mart of the Bulgarians to be removed from Conſtantinople to Theſſalonica on a ſudden, and theſe Merchants by whom the Deſign was contrived to be made Officers and Receivers of the Cuſtoms, who impoſed grievous and unuſual burthens upon thoſe of that Nation, and quite tired them out of their Traffick. Simeon their Prince, who ſought all ways poſſible of picking a Quarrel with the Romans, made complaint hereof to the Emperour, who by the ſuggeſtions of Zantzas, having his ears ſtopped to all that could be urged, he gladly laid hold of the opportunity, and took Arms againſt him.

The Romans are beaten.

Upon which Leo deſires the Turks to invade Bulgaria.

74. Leo having Intelligence hereof, prepared alſo for War, and ſent an Army againſt him, under Command of Procopius Crenites, with whom he joyned one Curticius an Armenian. In Macedonia the Armies met, but the Romans were overthrown, and their Generals ſlain; ſuch Priſoners as Simeon took he cut off their Noſes, and ſo ſent them in ſcorn to Conſtantinople. Leo moſt grievouſly netled with this Affront, ſent one Nicetas a Patritian to the Turks or Ungri (Hungarians) to perſwade them to paſs the River, and invade the Bulgarians, which they readily undertaking, he reſolved alſo to fall upon them on the other ſide. His Fleet he committed to the care and Conduct of Euſtathius, a Patritian and Drungarius; and his Land Army to Nicephorus Phocas a Patritian, whom after the Death of Andreas he had made Domeſtick of the Schools; yet having a mind ſtill more deſirous of Peace, he ſent to Simeon one Conſtantinacius about that Affair, whom he imagining to be ſent onely to put a trick upon him, for Nicephorus was now at hand, committed to Priſon Simeon, preparing himſelf to meet and ingage Nicephorus: the Turks (ſo they call them) paſs the River, and waſte all Bulgaria; which he underſtanding, omits his Deſign of meeting him, and marches directly againſt them. They readily ingaging with him, defeat his Army, he with much adoe eſcaping to Doroſtolum, otherwiſe called Driſta. The Turks being Conquerours, deſired of the Emperour that he would buy of them their Bulgarian Priſoners, which he did, ſending ſome on purpoſe to drive the Bargain. Simeon his matters going ſo ill, deſired Peace of the Emperour, to which he being ſufficiently inclined, ſent one Leo Choiroſphactes with ſufficient Inſtructions for concluding of it, and ordered Phocas, with Euſtathius the Drungarius to return Home with the Forces. But now the cunning Bulgarian ſeeing himſelf freed from great Danger, caſt the Ambaſſadour into Priſon, and with a great Army ſuddenly fell upon the Turks or Ungarians and defeated them, which done, he waſted their Countrey, the Emperour not being in a capacity to ſend them Relief, by reaſon of the ſhortneſs of the warning. Now puffed up at his ſucceſs, he writes to the Emperour, that he would not in any caſe admit of Peace, except firſt the Bulgarian Captives were ſet at liberty, to which he yielded, receiving Who Defeat the Bulgarians, and force Simeon to deſire Peace of the Emperour.

Χοιροσφάκτης Occiſorem porci ſignificat.

ceiving back his Ambaſſadour, with whom came one Theodorus to receive the Priſoners.

Which afterwards he ſlights.

Provoking the Emperour to Ingage in another Battel,

But with ill ſucceſs.

A Conſpiracy is Diſcovered, and Puniſhed.

Another.

75. The Priſoners returned, and yet Simeon would not accept of Peace, which inraged Leo to that height, that he was reſolved with all the Power he could make to chaſtize, and if poſſible, utterly to deſtroy him. This Army he committed to Catacalon (a man lately preferred to be Domeſtick of the Schools, in the room of Nicephorus Phocas, whom Zantzas, becauſe out of fear of the Emperour, he refuſed to become his Son-in-law, had procured to be diſcharged of that Office) and Theodoſius a Patritian, and the Potoveſtiarius, who giving Battel to Simeon, were defeated by him, with great ſlaughter of their men, with whom fell alſo Theodoſius. This Diſaſter abroad was followed by an imminent Danger at home from a Conſpiracy, while he uſed the company of Zoe the Daughter of Zantzas in the Countrey. She happened to overhear the Conſpiratours Diſcourſe, and awaking the Emperour, cauſed him to ſhift for himſelf, which he did by returning to his Palace by water. John the Drungarius of Biglæ, who then Commanded the Guards, he put out of his Place, for having Watched no better; and it ſeems he had Zantzas himſelf ſuſpected, for he was ſorely diſpleaſed with him, we are told, and was at length brought to a Reconciliation by the means and ſolicitation of Leo Theodotaces the Magiſter, and an intimate Friend to them both. Yet that excellent Lady Theophano his Empreſs being Dead, he Married Zoe his Daughter, who was formerly his Concubine, and ſet the Diademe on her Head, in which ſhe joyed not long, dying after a year and eight months. She being Dead, another Conſpiracy was hatched by a Kinſman of her, by Name Baſilius, the Pectes, as * Zonaras calls him, or Epeictes of the Emperour, as † Cedrenus hath it, who communicated his Deſign to Samonas the Chamberlain, under an Oath of ſecrecy. But he, though a Saracen by Birth, revealed the matter; whereupon Baſilius was ſent into Macedonia, as there to celebrate the obſequies of Zoe, and at his return ſubjected to Examination and Tryal, together with his Complices, by which being found Guilty, he was led ignominiouſly through the City, and Baniſhed to Athens. The good ſervice of Samonas was ſo far applauded by the Senate, that they gave him thanks, and judged him fit for the greateſt preferment: and the Emperour who had made a Relation of it to the Fathers, ſo far approved their judgment, that he made him preſently Protoſpatharius, and began to uſe him very familiarly. Now about this time did Leo Marry a third Wife, a Woman of extraordinary Beauty, by Name Eudocia; but ſhe died not very long after in Childbed, together with her Infant. To the memory of his firſt Wife Theophano he now Built and Dedicated a Church, in which and other Buildings while he employed his Seamen, a Fleet of Saracens took Taurominium in Sicily, with great ſlaughter of the Romans, and made themſelves Maſters of Lemnus, whence they led away a great multitude of Captives.

The Saracens make an Invaſion.

Leo like to be Brained.

Another Invaſion by the Saracens.

76. To Leo it ordinarily happened that one miſchief did not come alone; for at the ſame time that his Subjects ſuffered theſe things in other Parts, he himſelf eſcaped narrowly with his Life at Conſtantinople. It was the Cuſtome on Whit-Sunday to make a ſolemn Proceſſion to the Church of St. Mocius. He being preſent thereat, juſt as he entred the Church, a certain Fellow aſſaulted him with a great Club, and ſtriking him on the Head had killed him outright, but that a Candleſtick hanging in the way kept off part of the Blow; but as it was it fetched bloud in abundance. Alexander his Brother being not at the Solemnity, was ſuſpected by many as guilty of the Contrivance; but the Man, though grievouſly tortured, accuſed no Man, and therefore no farther inquiſition was made, he having his Hands and Feet chopped off, and ſo burnt alive in the Cirque. The Emperour no ſooner recovered, but being now a Widower, and having himſelf much dabled in Aſtrology, aſwell as hunted after the Opinions of others, who affirmed he ſhould have a Son to ſucceed him, applied his mind to new loves, and ſhortly after Married another Zoe, called Carbonopſina, from the place of her Nativity or abode, who lived with him a good ſpace before he ſet the Diademe on her Head, not till ſhe had brought him a Son, which he called Conſtantine. But his Nuptial Joys were preſently allayed by ill News he received from Sea, where now the Saracens having taken Encouragement from the Hoſtility which the Bulgarians exerciſed, tyrannized exceedingly, and under Conduct of one Leo Attaleus a Renegado of Tripolis did great miſchief upon the Coaſts, who threatned Conſtantinople it ſelf with ſpeedy Deſtruction; the Emperour upon the News diſpatched away Euſtathius his Drungarius of the Fleet, who finding himſelf too weak for Leo, returned, but with him at his back, for he followed him into the mouth of the Heleſpont, and proceeded on as far as Parium.

---

* Ὁ πήκτης Βασίλειος.

† Βασίλειος ἢ ὁ ἐπείκτης τοῦ Βασιλέως.

77. This much diſturbed the Emperour, he ſent away Himerius his Principal Secretary with the Fleet, who found out the Renegado, but finding him ſuperiour to him in Numbers and his Men more courageous, he durſt not venture upon an Ingagement, but ſuffered the Saracens quietly to return and lay Siege to Theſſalonica which they took, ſhed much bloud and made many Priſoners. A little before it fell out, that one Rhodophyllus one of the Bedchamber, travelling upon publick buſineſs for Sicily, with an Hundred Pounds of Gold fell ſick by the way, and for his eaſe and recovery was forced to take in at Theſſalonica, where Leo the Renegado finding him tortured him to death, to force him to betray this Treaſure into his Hands. But indeed the Money he had left by the way, which was taken up by Simeon one of the Secretaries, who had other occaſion to travell on that Rode. He perceiving Leo reſolved to deſtroy that City, perſwaded him to accept of the Money as a Ranſome of it, which the Emperour took ſo well from him, that he rewarded him with the Dignity of a Patritian, and of Principal Secretary. The Saracens having left Theſſalonica, Himerius prepared to purſue them, but they ſailed to the Iſle of Crete, and there having left part of their booty, departed home unmoleſted leaving him idle at Lemnos. The Emperour not able to graple with them at Sea, ſent two of the greateſt Captains he had by Land into the Eaſt, Euſtathius Argyrus, and Andronicus Ducas who ſo managed their Affairs, that they got many Victories. In the mean time Gamonas, who, as we ſaid, had diſcovered the Treaſon intended againſt the Emperour's Perſon, and for that was with him in great eſteem, veiled a Saracen's mind under the habit and ſhew of a Chriſtian and a Roman, and pretending a Journey to his Monaſtery (of his own founding it ſeems) endeavoured with much Money and Horſe to eſcape into his own Countrey, and leſt he ſhould be purſu'd, hamſtring'd, the publick Poſt-Horſes in the way. Leo ſent ſeveral after, but at the River Halys he was taken and ſtopt by Nicephorus Caminas the Drungarius, though he uſed many Intreaties, and offered a great reward to be let paſs. When he ſaw he could not eſcape, he then pretended that he was on his way towards the Croſs of Siracha, there to diſcharge himſelf of a Vow he had made, but for all that Conſtantinus Ducas brought him to Conſtantinople. There Leo ordered him to be kept in the Houſe of Bardas Cæſar, and cauſed Conſtantine to tell another Tale in the Senate, how indeed he was going to the aforeſaid Croſs to pay his Vow. The next day calling the Senate together, he cauſed Conſtantine to ſwear by God and the Emperour's Life, and then asked him the queſtion whether Samonas was going into Syria. He reſolving not to forſwear himſelf, openly proteſted that he fled toward Melitena his own Countrey. Hereat the Emperour was angry, and having kept Samonas for ſome ſpace in cuſtody, ſet him afterwards at Liberty, and reſtored him to his former Dignity and Place. Zonaras adds, that he made him a Patritian, and deſigned him to the Office of Chamberlain.

Upon which Leo ſends a Land Army into the Eaſt who perform great Execution.

Leo excommunicated for marrying thrice.

78. Not long after, at the Birth of his Son Conſtantine a Comet appeared, caſting its Tail toward the Eaſt for forty Days. Zoe his Wife he now declared Empreſs, for which the Patriarch excommunicated him, or forbade him as they term it entrance into the Church, ſo as he was forced to go on the right ſide to the Mitatorium. Hereat grievouſly offended, he yet earneſtly begged of him that he might be reſtored to Chriſtian Communion, and when all this was to no purpoſe, reſolved to exerciſe his Authority over the Prieſt, ſo as to correct him for his Arrogance, and ſent him as a baniſhed Man into a Monaſtery. In his Room he made Patriarch one Euthimius Syncellus, who it ſeems took off the Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, but whenas by the Advice of his Nobility, he was about to publiſh an Edict, to make it lawfull to marry three or four Wives, he vehemently withſtood, and prevented it, ſo nice and ſevere was this Age in the Point of Marriage. For, Reader, neither the Practice nor Deſign of Leo, was to have or allow more than one Wife at a time, but ſucceſſively after the death of the former. Yet muſt not this be allowed to him, though ſome of his Wives lived not long with him after Marriage. But the truth is, he led aſide by the Humour of the Eccleſiaſticks, who all along by a great Fatality had been from the time of Conſtantine the Great, inclined to the Commendation of Celibate and Averſion to Marriage, he made formerly an Edict (a) againſt the Multiplicity of Marriage, ſubjecting ſuch as were thrice married to the Penalties (b) impoſed by the Ca-

---

(a) Leonis conſtit. 9. quæ ſic incipit oportebat nos.

(b) Tempus aliquod pœnitendi Bigamis & Trigamis imponebatur, inſuper vetabantur Presbyteri intereſſe nuptiis ejus quæ ſecundo nubit, privabant enim nonnulli benedictione ſecundas nuptias. Vide Aug. ſerm. 243. Ambroſ. in Cap. 7. 1. ad Corinth. & in 3. Cap. 1. ad Corinth. Concil. Lateranenſe ſub Alexandro 3. Tit. de ſecund. nuptiis. c. 1. Gothofred. in locum.

The Saracens again renew their Incurſions, but are beaten by one of the Generals to the Emperour.

nons, of which now he late enough repented. This ſame year the Saracens, ſet out a Fleet againſt the Emperour's Subjects, againſt whom he ſent Himerius the Logotheta Dromi, and with him joined Andronicus Ducas, the Father of Conſtantine formerly mentioned. Samonas bearing implacable hatred to this Family, for his being intercepted by Conſtantine on his way homeward, bribed a familiar Friend of Adronicus to write to him, that he ſhould by no means adventure to join in the Enterprize with Himerius, who had order from the Emperour to put out his Eyes, aſſoon as he could have an Advantage to doe it. Andronicus believing this ſtory, refuſed to accompany Himerius in the Expedition, who ingaged without any Collegue with the Enemy, and gave him a very notable Defeat.

79. Andronicus awakened with this his Succeſs, and ſenſible of his Errour, out of deſperation, ſeized upon a Caſtle ſituate about Iconium called Cabala, and conſidered how to revolt. His Enemy now inceſſantly plied the Emperour with complaints againſt him, urging his Treachery and Deſigned rebellion, upbraided him for not having ſecured him before he eſcaped his Hands, and importuning him at leaſt to obviate, and leſſen this growing Miſchief. Overcome with his Suggeſtions, he ſent againſt Andronicus, Iberitzas Gregoras, the Domeſtick of the Schools, and one allied to him, with a ſtrong Army, which he underſtanding, and how Nicholas the Patriarch, his principal Friend was caſt out of the Church, he fled with all he had to the Saracens, and was kindly received by the Amermumnes. This much diſturbed Leo, when he conſidered both what a Subject he had loſt, and an Enemy he had created to himſelf, and if poſſible he reſolved to get him back. He wrote Letters to him, wherein he promiſed both oblivion of what was paſt, reſtitution to his former Dignity and Eſtate, and much more Incouragement, and more kindneſs than he had ever yet received. But the Meſſenger, a Captive Saracen, was perſwaded by Samonas not to deliver the Letters to Andronicus, but diſcover the Contents of them to the Amermumnes, who thereupon caſt Andronicus and his Followers into Priſon, where they endured much and long miſery; and of them ſome abjured their Religion to be rid of their Chains, he himſelf periſhed without Redemption. But his Son Conſtantine, with divers of the other Priſoners made his eſcape, and though purſued ſometimes by fighting, and otherwhiles by caſting Gold in the way, and thereby diverting the greedy Souldiers, got ſafe to Conſtantinople, where the Emperour conferred great Gifts upon him, and feaſted him in the Golden Room. It's ſaid, that as he was departing out at the Gate, Leo called him back again, and adviſed him, that by reaſon of his Name he ſhould never take the Confidence to aim at the Sovereignty, for he was very well aſſured by ſuch as could foretell things of this Nature, that Conſtantine his young Son was deſtined of God to the Empire. But if not content with his former Condition, he ſhould make any Attempt that way, his Head for certain ſhould be cut off, and brought thorough that Gate in its Gore, which the Event confirmed.

Upon which the other revolt to the Saracens.

Where he dies miſerably.

80. Much about this time, out of ſome jealouſie he had conceived Leo put Euſtathius the Magiſter, and Drungarius Biglæ out of his Place, whereupon he retired and died by poiſon, being much regretted by the Souldiers, both by Sea and Land. For he was an extraordinary Man, who brought the ſirname of Argyrus or Silverd to his Family, either by reaſon of the Purity of his Life, the beauty of his Body, or the luſtre of his valiant Actions, wherein he ſo far exceeded all others of his time, and during the Reign of Michael, that with Slaves and Dependants alone, he kept in awe the Manichees of Tephrica, and the Saracens of Melitena. Leo was not ſo ſevere to him, as indulgent in the other extreme to Samonas the Saracen, whoſe Father together with one Abelbaces, ſent from Melitena and Tarſus, he entertained in the Palace of Magnaura, with all Magnificence imaginable. And what was thought not ſuitable to Men of their Religion, ſhewed them all the Treaſure and Furniture of the great Church. The old Man was ſo much taken with the ſplendid condition of his Son, that he would have ſtaid at Conſtantinople, and been partaker of his good Fortune; but Samonas would not permit it, deſiring him to go into his own Countrey, and perſevere in his own Religion, aſſuring him that he would follow him with the firſt opportunity. Now on Whitſunday, Leo cauſed his Son Conſtantine to be Crowned by the Hands of Euthymius the Patriarch. And the Confidence of Samonas was by his immoderate Favour grown to that height, as being jealous of a new Favourite named Conſtantine a Paphlagonian by birth, which he himſelf had given to the Empreſs, he both accuſed her as being too familiar with him, and made a ſcurrilous Libel againſt the Emperour, who upon Inquiſition finding him to be Authour of it, cauſed him to be ſhaven for a Monk, and made Conſtantine whom at his Suggeſtions being ſhaven, he had retaken out of the Monaſtery, Chamberlain in his ſtead. About this time the Saracens ſent out three Hundred Ships under conduct of one Damianus a Tyrian, and Leo of Tripolis, which committing the uſual Hoſtilities, Himerius the Admiral was ſent againſt them, and ingaged with them at Samus, but was beaten, put to flight, and hardly eſcaped to Metilena. The Emperour not long after was ſeized with the Colick, and brought ſo low with it, that he could not make his uſual Speech in the time of Lent, but calling together the Senate recommended to their gratitude and care his Wife and Son, telling them he ſhould hardly hold out ſo long as Eaſter. Yet he lived till the Eleventh of May, and then dying left the Empire to his Brother Alexander, whom with all Earneſtneſs, he deſired carefully to educate his Son Conſtantine, to uſe him as became his Quality, and to leave him his Succeſſour. He reigned two and twenty Years, three Months and four Days.

The Saracens infeſt the Sea Coaſts and beat the Emperour's Admiral.

Leo dies.

81. We have brought Leo to his end, yet have not done with him, as neither with Baſilius his Father, and that upon account of a remarkable Alteration made by them in the Laws of the Empire, of which we muſt neceſſarily give the Reader an Account. He is then to know, that the Civil Law with ſo great Care and Induſtry modelled a-new by Juſtinian was in great danger, not long to ſurvive the Authour. For beſides that came not into Italy, and the Weſtern European Nations for the ſpace of five Hundred years after his death; being ſuppreſſed or kept out by the particular Laws and Cuſtoms of the Barbarous Nations which had lately poſſeſſed theſe Parts, as the Goths, Lombards, Vandals, Franks, and others, in the City and Empire of Conſtantinople it ſelf, either through the neglect or envy of the Emperours, ſcarcely for forty years did it continue in any conſiderable Authority. Indeed through the Reigns of Juſtin, Tiberius and Mauricius, his Books were received both in the Schools and Courts of Juſtice, and in Latin as they were written, and in the ſame Language was Juſtice adminiſtred, the Decrees of Magiſtrates and the Reſolutions of Judges publiſhed, ſuch honour and reſpect being as yet given to the Tongue of the Romans, to the Valour and Conduct of whom ſo great Dominion was to be aſcribed. But Mauricius being murthered, Phocas and his Succeſſours had little care either for Preſervation of the Language or the Laws, and though the Empire was ſtill called the Roman Empire, and their Writers are very carefull to give the Name of Romans all along to the Emperour's Subjects, even ſo far that if they and the Italians be mentioned together, yet by Romans they ever mean ſuch as were ſubject to the Conſtantinopolitan Empire whereever they lived, yet however, Latin grew out of uſe, the Greek Tongue being native to the Place (though exceedingly mixed with Latin words) drove the practice of it out by Degrees; Generally in other Countries the Emperours were known by the Name of Greek Emperours; and ſome of them vaunted themſelves, as the Succeſſours of Alexander the Great.

Vide Fabrot. in Edit. Baſilic. Baldvin. in proleg. ad Inſtit.
Duckium de uſu & authorit. Juris Civilis. Lib. 1. cap. 5.

82. By theſe means the Books of Juſtinian, written firſt in Latin, becauſe little regarded, yet of ſome uſe they were for two hundred years, till the time of Baſilius Macedo, the Father of Leo. For they had been either in the lifetime of Juſtinian himſelf, or ſhortly after tranſlated into Greek, as the Code and the Pandects by Thalelæus an Anteceſſour, and the Inſtitutions by Theophilus, and beſides theſe, many other Books of the Ancient Lawyers, out of which the Pandects had been Compoſed. Out of theſe Tranſlations then and the Conſtitutions of ſuch Emperours as ſucceeded Juſtinian, was Juſtice adminiſtred, ſo as it was, till the time of Baſilius, though the knowledge and practice of the Law were both very ſmall, for the Reaſons now mentioned, and the continual Irruptions and Deſolations made by the Saracens, during which like diſturbances, Laws are wont to make but little noiſe. But Baſilius being a Man of Spirit far above his Birth and Breeding, and having good ſucceſs againſt the Infidels, as our Hiſtorians write, ſet upon the work of making and reforming Laws. He was moved by this reaſon, as they tell us, becauſe he perceived the Civil Laws to be very confuſed and obſcure; therefore he reſolved to purge them by abrogating the unprofitable ones, by making ſhorter ſuch as were tedious, and otherwiſe, of which Deſign Death preventing the accompliſhment, it was perfected by Leo his Son. Later writers aſcribe Baſilius and Leo new model the Civil Law.

Ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς πολιτικοὺς νόμους, πολλὴν ἀσάφειαν, καὶ σύγχυσιν ἔχοντας ἰδὼν, καὶ τούτους κατὰ τὸ προσῆκον προσφόρως ἐπανασώσασθαι ἔσπευσε, &c.
Cedrenus in Baſilio.

Ciron. obſervat. Jur. Canonic. C c. 4. 5.

aſcribe to his envy at the glory of Juſtinian, what the other attribute to a kind of neceſſity, and they impute it to his deſire, that his Name with his Books ſhould be obliterated and quite forgotten.' Out of what principle ſoever it was, he with his Sons, Conſtantine and Leo, firſt publiſhed an Epitome of Juſtinian's Code, which he called Procheiron, and afterward ſixty Books called Baſilica, compoſed out of the Books of the ſaid Emperour, his thirteen Edicts after the publication of his Novels, with the Novel Conſtitutions of Juſtin and the following Emperours. Theſe alone had the Force of Laws ſo long as the Eaſtern Empire it ſelf laſted, and Juſtinian his Books were quite laid aſide, both in the Schools and the Courts of Juſtice.

Πρόχειρον τῶν νόμων Βασιλικὰ, quia Principum leges continebant, idem opus ἑξηκοντάβιβλον quia ex 60. libris conſtabat.

83. Now theſe Books of the Baſilia, (a) ſome attribute to Leo, and others (b) to Baſilius himſelf, to whom Leo alſo aſcribes them, and indeed this controverſie may eaſily be decided by what we have lately ſaid from the Greek Hiſtorians, that Baſilius began, and Leo perfected the work; ſo that both Father and Son had an hand in them, and twenty years after their publication, the Grandchild, not another Son, as one of our Lawyers miſtakes, * Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus purged and amended them. But Leo after the Baſilia, publiſhed an hundred and thirteen Novel Conſtitutions which ſtill are extant, and at preſent ſince the Recovery of Juſtinian's Law, in the Weſt are made uſe of onely in matters wherein Juſtinian's Books are ſilent. Nay, in the Age of Leo himſelf, they ſeem to have had no greater Authority, and that from the teſtimony of Greek Lawyers themſelves, who cited them onely when nothing had formerly been Conſtituted concerning ſuch or ſuch a Point, or for explication of the Old Law. Of theſe ſeveral works the Greeks ſeem moſt to have eſteemed the Epitome or Synopſis; and chiefly to have been delighted with Breviaries. For from that of Baſilius firſt publiſhed, and the Conſtitutions of Emperours as far as Emanuel Comnenus did Conſtantinus Harmenopulus, a Judge of Theſſalonica, frame an Epitome of univerſal Law: And before him Michael Attaliates by command of Michael Ducas, the laſt Emperour mentioned in this work publiſhed a ſhorter Synopſis, which he called the Compendium of a Compendium. Michael Pſellus, at the ſame time Compoſed another Synopſis; and long after John Leunclavius publiſhed an Epitome of the Baſilica, out of the Library of Sambucus, afterward Chancellour of Poland, who found it at Tarentum in Calabria, which part of Italy, as we ſee, was longeſt ſubject to the Emperours of the Eaſt. The Baſilica themſelves lay hid a long time, till Gentiacius Hervetus firſt publiſhed ſeven Books of the ſixty; afterwards Cujacius three more, though he had the whole Number by him, as appears in his admirable works, eſpecially his obſervations, and at length they were all ſet forth out of the French Kings Library, together with the Scholia and Gloſſes of the Greek Commentatours, by the care and induſtry of Fabrottus, that excellent Lawyer, who by this means has procured much aſſiſtence for explication of ſuch matters as are obſcure in Juſtinian's Laws. Yet are not the Gloſſes of theſe Greek Lawyers comparable for Number to thoſe made by the Weſtern Europeans, upon the Books of Juſtinian. Thoſe now extant are onely thoſe of Stephanus, Nicæus, Thaddæus, Eudoxus, Iſidorus, Baſilius, and ſome others, which as the Gloſſes of Accurſius, are ſet in the Margent of the Baſilica. But thus much concerning theſe new Models of Baſilius and Leo, which with ſmall alteration contained the onely Law in uſe and practice till the diſſolution of the Empire. Hereby we may perceive that in the Reigns of theſe two laſt Princes, Learning and Ingenuity were much revived, by the convenience whereof, and his own Induſtry, Leo arrived to ſo high a Pitch as to obtain the Sirname of Philoſophus and Sapiens. For his meriting theſe Titles, there is more produced than his indeavours about the Law. In the Vatican Library are ſtill extant, many Orations of his, as well about ſacred as other matters, ſome precepts of Morality, with a Treatiſe concerning the Military Art; and a Catalogue of many of them, the Reader if he think it fit may ſee in Baronius his Annals.

(a) Harmenopul. Lib. 1. Tit. 1. Cujac. obſervat. l. 17. alii.

(b) Gothofred. ad Novel. Leonis. alii.

* Conſtantinus hic fuit Conſtantinus Leonis filius cognomento Porphyrogeneta qui libros Βασιλικῶν repurgavit fuitq; Author ἀνακαθάρσεως id eſt Baſilicῶn repetitæ prælectionis. Non Baſilii filius qui ante patrem diem ſuum obierat ut ex Hiſtoria noſtra conſtat utq; Gothofredus ad Leonis Novellas notat; lapſus itaq; eſt in hac parte Duckius noſtras.

Cujac. 17. Obſerv. 31. Gothofred. ubi ſuprá.

Ad An. 911. num. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

From the Death of Leo the Philoſopher, to the Death of Conſtantine Ducas, the twelfth of that Name. A. D. MCXVII.

The ſpace of One Hundred and Fifty Six Years.

Alexander Emperour.

I. LEO being dead, his Brother Alexander ſucceeded him in the ſecond year of Anaſtaſius the Second Biſhop of Rome, the fourteenth Indiction. A. D. DCCCCXI. About his Age when he came to the Empire, our Greek Hiſtorians are ſtrangely overſeen, writing that he was now a young man, about twenty years old, whereas they themſelves had formerly told us, that in the third year of his Reign, Baſilius made his third Son Alexander Cæſar, ſo that by this time he muſt have paſt above forty years, from his very promotion to this Title; and if Leo Reigned above twenty five, how could Alexander be but twenty at his Death, and be his Brother, the Father being dead above five and twenty years before? He had Conſtantine his Brother's Son his Partner in the Empire, yet within a little time purpoſed to deprive him of all hopes of Succeſſion, by gelding him, and leave the Dignity to one Baſilitzas, an obſcure fellow, but his Companion in his libidinous and extravagant courſes. For to ſuch alone he addicted himſelf; neither thinking nor acting any thing becoming the place he bore, and as hitherto he had lived, ſo ſtill did he onely intend, a voluptuous life and matters of intemperance, putting ſmall value upon any but ſuch as could accompany and aſſiſt him in ſuch like practices. From putting in practice what he intended againſt his Nephew, he was diverted merely by ſuch as bore good will to the Child for his Father's ſake, who ſtill alledged he was young and ſickly, and ſo perſwaded him, not thinking of his own Death, that he had time enough farther to conſider and reſolve. Deſirous to be aſcertained of his long life, he conſulted with ſuch cheaters as pretended skill in thoſe matters, who anſwered that his Reign ſhould be long, if to a Boar of Braſs which ſtood in the Cirque, he would add Genitals and Teeth which were wanting to it; for that Boar was his Element, as the Greeks phraſed it, that is, by it he himſelf was magically ſignified in oppoſition to his Brother Leo. He giving heed to them, who for his manners compared him to that creature, added thoſe Members to the Boar, as ſecuring his life thereby for a long ſeaſon. Now elevated by this and other hopes, he baniſhes Himerius the Logotheta, as one who had practiſed ſomething againſt him in the days of his Brother. The Ambaſſadours of Simeon Prince of the Bulgarians, who were come about the renewing of the League and Friendſhip formerly made with his Predeceſſours, he uncivily treated and diſmiſſed, whereupon that Prince to be beforehand with him, and prevent the effects of his Threats, broke the Peace, and made War upon the Romans. But following on his courſe of intemperance, after a great fit of gormandizing and drunkenneſs, too violently exerciſing himſelf at Tennis, he broke ſome Veſſels, and died of Bleeding the day following, having ſo much time and conſcience (now in extremity) as to declare Conſtantine his Succeſſour, after a Reign of one year and about a month.

His Character.

The Bulgarians make War upon the Romans.

Alexander Dies.

Ex Curopalata Cedrenus oſcitans errorem hauſit inquiens, Ἀλέξανδρος δὲ ὁ τοῦ Λέοντος ἀδελφὸς ἤδη νεανίας ὤν, καὶ τὸ εἰκοστὸν τῆς ἡλικίας αὐτοῦ παραμείβων ἔτος, &c.

Zonaras ſic. σὸν γὰρ, ἔλεγον, οὗτος, στοιχεῖον ἐστιν, ἀντίος ἱστάμενος Λέοντι τῷ σῷ ἀδελφῷ. Cedrenus verò, στοιχεῖον γὰρ αὐτοῦ τοῦτον εἶναι προφανῶς. Λέοντι γὰρ ἀντιμάχεσθαι, τῷ αὐτοῦ (φασὶν) ἀδελφῷ. Hic στοιχεῖον, ſeu elementum vocant rem quæ magicarum artium vi alicujus hominis fortunam gubernet. Qualis (verbi gratia) in Romano Lacapeno, Simeoni Bulgaro Statua in Xerolopho fuit, qua truncata is periit; vide alia exempla apud Xylandrum in Annot. ad hunc locum Cedreni. Hinc autem magi στοιχειωματικοὶ dicti, qui in res certis notis & Incantationibus vim quandam ad aliquid præſtandum putabantur conciliare, & στοιχειοῦσθαι verbum magicis artibus aliquid moliri.

Conſtantine's Nephew, a Youth, ſucceeds.

Τὸν μάγιστρον Στέφανον. Ἰωάννην τὸν ῥαίκτωρα.

2. To Conſtantine who was ſcarcely ſeven years old, he aſſigned for Governours, Nicholas the Patriarch, Stephen and John Eladas being Magiſtri, John a Rector and two others whom from the Dunghill, in a manner, he had raiſed to Senatorian and Patritian Dignity, being his Companions in his lewd Courſes, viz. Baſilitzas we e'er now mentioned, and one Gabrielopolus. At this time Conſtantinus Ducas, Son of Andronicus, the General or Maſter of the Schools was abſent from the City, who notwithſtanding the warning formerly ſaid to be given him by the Emperour Leo, nouriſhed hopes of arriving one day at that Dignity, and his Power was ſo great, and his Dependents and Fewds ſo numerous and Potent, that therein his hopes ſeemed not at all to flatter him. His Friends were carefull to give him timely notice of Alexander's deceaſe, telling him, that the Empire now wanted an Head, and was in extreme danger of being ruined, if he, the onely man alive that was fit to govern it, would not take care of it in its neceſſity, which to doe he would not want incouragement, both the Senate and People being at his Devotion; and it was reported, that the Patriarch himſelf was in the Conſpiracy, not knowing that he was deſigned one of the Governours, the Teſtament of Alexander not being yet opened. Conſtantine having received the Letters, haſtes to the City with a ſelect Company of Men, and late at Night getting in at the Gate next the Caſtle, went and ſtaid that Night with Gregoras Iberitzas his Father-in-Law, whither, upon notice of his Arrival, came to him Nicetas the Secretary with Conſtantine a Patritian, the Eladican Monk. They before it was light, with Torches and a great Multitude, came to the Gate of the Cirque, and there with lucky Acclamations ſaluted him Emperour. But here they found ſtout reſiſtence from within, and as an ill Omen the Protoſtrator of Conſtantine, as he earneſtly laboured to get open the Gate, was through ſome hole in it killed with a Lance. Here then repulſed, they went into the Cirque, and by the Brazen Gate paſſed as far as the Court of Guard, or the place where ordinarily the Watch was kept. In the mean time John Eladas one of the Governours had got together ſome Seamen and others as he could, and ſent them to meet and oppoſe Ducas, with whom they fought, and many falling on both ſides, Gregoras the Son of Ducas was ſlain together with one Michael his Kinſman, and Curticius an Armenian. He much diſordered at their death, put Spurs to his Horſe and galloped toward the foremoſt of his men to incourage them; but his Horſe fell upon the Pavement, and it happening that his own men either running away, or not taking notice of it, one of the other Party fell upon him as he lay at that diſadvantage from off his Horſe, and cutting off his Head carried it to the Emperour. By this his end was the Conſpiracy and Tumult quaſhed, after which Gregoras his Father-in-Law and Leo Chœroſphacta a Patritian took Sanctuary in the Church of St. Sophia, but were thence by the Governours taken, ſhaven, and thruſt into a Monaſtery. In the like ſort was ſerved Conſtantinus Eladicus, but not till after he was ſoundly beaten and led as in Triumph through the City. Some were baniſhed, having their Eyes put out, and others were beheaded in the Cirque by Philotheus the Prefect of the City; ſome were faſtened to Poſts: But Nicetas and Conſtantinus Africus, though much ſought for could not be found. The Governours had proceeded and deſtroyed many other perſons of Senatorian Rank though Innocent, if one of the Judges had not taken courage and asked them how they durſt doe things of ſo high a nature in the Minority of their Prince. Yet they farther cauſed the Wife of Ducas to be ſhaven and ſent home into Paphlagonia. And his Son Stephen to be deprived of his Genitals.

A Conſpiracy againſt him.

Νικήτας δὲ ἀσηκρῆτις τὴν ἔλευσιν, &c. Vide quomodo Latinæ voces in Græcum ſermonem irrepſerunt. Latinè à Secretis & Græcè ἀσηκρῆτις.

Ἔφθασεν ἄχρι τῶν ἐξκουβίτων.

But puniſhed.

3. While theſe Diſorders were within the City, no leſs a danger threatned the Government from without. Simeon the Bulgarian diſobliged, as we ſaid, by Alexander, had with a great Army invaded the Roman Territories, and was come even as far as Conſtantinople it ſelf, before which he incamped himſelf from Blachernæ, as far as the Golden Gate, with no ſmall hope of becoming Maſter of it in a ſhort time. But ſuch was the good fortune of the Inhabitants, that though thus ſurprized, by their ſtout oppoſition and the ſtrength of the Walls, by degrees they defeated his hopes, and he retired to Hebdomus, where he ſignified he would accept of a Treaty. This Overture was moſt gladly entertained by the Governours, and Hoſtages being given and received, Simeon was admitted to dine with the Emperour in the Palace of Blachernæ, and received the Patriarch's Bleſſing, after which he departed home richly preſented, though as Zonaras writes, without any Peace concluded, the Conditions whereof he would not accept, which yet Cedrenus ſignifies to have been accorded. But, the Governours giving no content, by reaſon of their extravagant Actions and Diſagreement, were ſoon after ſuffered to take their eaſe. The young Emperour making great lamentation for the miſs of his Mother, whom Alexander had put from Court, they were forced; though againſt their wills, to recall her, and ſhe being returned, quickly got the power into her hands. By the advice and aſſiſtence of Conſtantine one of the Bedchamber, Anaſtaſius, and Conſtantine Gongglii Brothers, and John Eladan, ſhe put out of the Court the Favourites of Alexander, viz. John the Rector, Gabrielopolus, Baſilitzes, and others; and at the motion of Dominicus, whom ſhe preferred to the Command of the Aſſociates, ſhe alſo removed the Patriarch from the Palace. As for the Magiſter John Eladus he departed of his own accord out of the Palace by reaſon of ſickneſs, whereof he died. All the Governours of the young Emperour being thus put out of Office, Conſtantine the Bedchamber man, that he might govern alone accuſed Dominicus, lately mentioned, to the Empreſs, as indeavouring to compaſs the Empire for his Brother, which ſhe believing, created him a Patritian; and when, according to the Cuſtome, he went down to pray, commanded him to ſtay at home, and put into his place one John Garidas. And ſhe made one Damianus an Eunuch the Drungarius Biglæ. Such chopping and changing there was, outing and being outed, as is uſual to thoſe, whoſe narrow Souls (how big ſoever they look) are taken up with the Vanities and Uncertainties of Courts.

Simeon the Bulgarian incamps near Conſtantinople.

But accepting a Treaty returns home.

Zoe the Emperour's Mother recalled outs all his Governours.

Simeon. lays ſiege to Adrianople.

The Ameras of Tyre infeſts the Maritime Coaſts.

A Peace concluded with the Saracens.

Turning the whole force of the Empire againſt the Bulgarians.

4. But Simeon now again haraſſed Thrace without any mention made of breaking the Peace; ſo that he muſt rather believe Zonaras, who writes, that at his late Entertainment at Conſtantinople nothing had been concluded. Zoe conſidering with her Council how to reſtrain his Depredations, one John Bogas ingaged that if ſhe would promote him to the Dignity of a Patritian, he would procure the Patzinacæ, a neighbouring People to fall into his Territories and divert him, and accordingly he went and obtained a Promiſe from them, confirmed by the delivery of Hoſtages. But for the preſent Simeon beſieged Adrianople, which after ſome time was betrayed to him by one Pancratucas an Armenian whom he had corrupted with Gold, by which Metal the Empreſs again ſhortly after recovered it, ſending Baſilius a Patritian, the Commander of the Canicleus, and Nicetas Eladicus ſufficiently furniſhed for that purpoſe. Much about the ſame time did Damianus the Ameras of Tyre, with a Fleet exceedingly well manned, infeſt the Maritime Parts, and made a violent Attempt upon Strofelus, which he had carried, but that he was ſnatched away by death to the good fortune of the Town, from which his Forces preſently aroſe and departed. Zoe being thus attacked on ſeveral Quarters, by advice of the Senate, with which ſhe conſulted, reſolved to make Peace with the Saracens, and employ the whole force of the Empire againſt the Bulgarians, for reſtraining the Incurſions of Simeon, and if poſſible, the abſolute deſtruction or Conqueſt of that Nation. To this purpoſe John Radenus a Patritian, and Michael Toxaras were ſent into the Eaſt, and compounded all matters with the Saracens, from whom now being diſtinangled ſhe gave order to Leo Phocas the Magiſter and Domeſtick of the Schools to lead the Army againſt the Bulgarians, having firſt made amongſt the Souldiers the uſual diſtribution of Money called Rogæ. A general Muſter was made at Diabaſis, a place ſo called from the Paſſage, being a ſpacious Plain fit for ſuch a purpoſe, and thither came the chief Prieſt or Chaplain of the Palace, whom they termed Protopapa, and with the uſual Ceremonies made them all kneel down and ſwear they would fight it out to the laſt, which Oath taken they were led againſt the Enemy.

The Officers of the Roman Army.

Ingaging with them are overthrown.

5. The Army was good, and as well commanded. The Cohort of the Watchers or Excubitores, as they were called, was led by John Grapſon, a Man whoſe Valour and Conduct had appeared in many Battels. The Regiment of thoſe, called Hicanati, was commanded by Olbianus Marula, a very eminent Man alſo; the reſt by Romanus and Leo, the Sons of Argyrus and Bardas Phocas. Beſides theſe, was preſent at the Expedition Melias the Magiſter with his Armenians, and many of the other Provincial Officers: And Conſtantinus Africanus the Patritian was joyned as Councellour with Leo the General or Domeſtick of the Schools. On the ſixth day of Auguſt was a fierce Battel fought at the Caſtle Achelous with the Bulgarians, who were beaten, and after great loſs put to flight. But the General of the Romans in a great Sweat and fainting by the extraordinary pains he had taken, lighting at a Fountain to refreſh himſelf ſo neglected his Horſe, that ſenſible he had no Rider he broke looſe and ran amongſt the Army, where being known by the Souldiers, they concluded that Leo was kill'd, and thereupon all left the Purſuit; and ſome betook them to their Heels. This was quickly perceived by Simeon, who did not make his Retreat in a looſe or confuſed manner, but ſo as he could eaſily face about and purſue the Purſuers, which he did with ſuch execution, the Romans hindering one another, that not onely a great Slaughter was made of the ordinary Souldiers, but very many of the Officers themſelves were loſt, amongſt whom Conſtantinus Africus and John Grapſon, e'er now mentioned. All this while Romanus Lacapenus the Drungarius of Naval Affairs, according to order hovered about the Sea Coaſts with the Fleet to relieve Leo if need were, and give paſſage to the Patzinacæ, whom Bogas had brought to the aſſiſtence of the Empire. But he and Bogas fell into a difference and thereupon they departed home. As for Leo he hardly eſcaped to Meſembria.

6. Theſe are the ordinary Reaſons given for this overthrow, though another Report was very current, as that when Leo was hot in the Purſuit of the Enemy, News was brought him that Romanus the Admiral was returned back to Conſtantinople with a deſign to make himſelf Emperour while all the great Ones were abſent, which ſo affected him, who had himſelf the ſame ambitious purpoſe, that he retired into the Camp to know the truth, at which his men were diſcouraged, as imagining it was out of fear, and ſo changed the courſe of the Battel. However it happened, a great loſs was received, and after the return of the remainders of the Army to Conſtantinople, the buſineſs betwixt Romanus and Bogas was ſcanned, the iſſue of which was, that the former was ſentenc'd by the Judges to looſe his Eyes, for not having according to his duty paſſed over the Patzinacæ, and received ſuch as fled from the Battel, which ſome attributed to careleſneſs, but others to Malice and Deſign; and the Sentence had been executed but that Stephen the Magiſter, one of the Emperours Tutours, and Conſtantinus Gongyles a Patritian, men very powerfull with the Empreſs had not prevailed for the remiſſion of it. Now was Simeon the Bulgarian ſo puffed up with his late ſucceſs, that again he reſolved to attack Conſtantinople, and was on his way, when Leo the Domeſtick, John the Commander of the Aſſociates, and Nicholas the Son of Conſtantinus Ducas were ſent out againſt him. In a place called Cataſyrtes they light upon a Party that was foraging, and defeated it with little trouble. Then a freſh one came on which put the men now wearied and wounded much to it, but they were ſo reſolved and courageous that after a ſharp Conflict they had the ſame ſucceſs, though not without loſs of ſeveral worthy men, amongſt whom none more eminent than Nicholas now mentioned, to whoſe Valour eſpecially the ſucceſs of the day was aſcribed.

Simeon proceeds towards Conſtantinople.

But two of his Parties are met and worſted.

Leo deſigns to aſſume the Purple.

So doth Romanus.

Who ſeizes upon the Emperour.

7. So went matters in the Field, and againſt the Enemy, at home they carried a ſadder Aſpect, whilſt in the Minority of the Emperour ſeveral of the Nobility wanted but opportunity and power to diveſt him of his Dignity, and to reign themſelves. Of all others Leo Phocas with moſt confidence hatched and carried on his deſign, truſting much to the power and intereſt of Conſtantine the Chamberlain, his Wives Brother, for his private Reputation at Court was very great, beſides that Eunuchs in general at this time were much reſpected. He made himſelf ſo ſure of his projected greatneſs, that he would not ſtick openly to own it, and affirm that the Severeignty of right belonged to him by deſcent. This Theodius the Emperour's School-maſter taking ſtrict notice of it leſt any miſchief ſhould thence happen to his Scholar, perſwaded him to take Romanus Lacapenus, the Drungarius of the Fleet to be his Keeper, and if need were his Protectour, who had been a dutifull Servant to his Father, an no leſs faithfull to him. But Romanus often, and with ſome pertinacy refuſed to accept of the Charge, till at length ſeeing the Emperour's Letters written with his own hand and ſigned, as the manner was, with Purple Letters, he conſented, and promiſed to fruſtrate as much as in him lay the Deſigns of the Chamberlain and his Allies. This could not be ſo much concealed but that it took air, and began to be talked of openly in the Streets, and all places of Reſort, but yet Conſtantine was therewith little moved, contemning all Reports out of a vain confidence, that no man durſt attempt any thing againſt him, till going to the Fleet to diſtribute the Rogæ, or pay the Seamen, he was by Romanus, who at their firſt meeting diſguiſed his Purpoſe, till he got him into the Snare, ſeized and ſecured. Great noiſe hereof being made in the City, and no leſs than a Revolt expected, Zoe called together the Patriarch and ſome Senatours, and by their Advice ſent to Romanus to know his meaning, and to require that the Chamberlain ſhould be diſmiſſed; but the Meſſengers were hindered from delivering their Meſſage by a number of Mariners, who threw Stones and denied them Acceſs. Early in the Morning ſhe went and inquired of her Son and thoſe about him, what their Intentions were, to which, when none elſe would anſwer, Theodore affirmed this change to have happened by reaſon of his ill management of the Army, and Conſtantine's ill adminiſtration of matters relating to the Court.

Leo

Zoe the Empreſs forced to quit her Government.

8. Now did the Emperour take the power from his Mother upon himſelf, and preſently ſent for to Court the Patriarch and Stephen the Maſter, and thence commanded the day following his Mother to be removed; but ſhe weeping and wailing and clinging cloſe to him, wrought ſo upon his good nature as to permit her to ſtay. Then fearing Leo Phocas, he removed him from his Office, and made John the Magiſter Domeſtick of the Schools. Yet did Phocas prevail, as a way of recompence, to have his Son Simeon and Theodorus his Wives Brother made Commanders of the Aſſociates, and then taking an Oath of Fidelity to the Emperour retired to his Houſe. But ſhortly after hearing that his Kindred were again diſmiſſed from Court, he reſolved to ſee how he could work upon Romanus, to whom poſting, he laid open his condition, and bewailed the ſtraits to which he was reduced. Romanus fearing, it ſeems, his great Intereſt and Alliance, was ſo wrought upon, as ſecretly to contract Friendſhip and an Union with him, which was confirmed by Oath, and the deſigned Inter-Marriage of their Children. After this Romanus went to Court to purge himſelf to the Councillours of any Conſpiracy againſt the Government, affirming his Deſign, merely to protect the Emperour from any ambitious attempts of Phocas, for which purpoſe his Reſolution was to come to Court, with a ſufficient Guard. This the Patriarch would not believe, nor accept his Purgation, whereupon Theodore the Schoolmaſter importuned him to come up with his Fleet into the Dock of Bucoleon near to the Palace, which he earneſtly refuſed to doe, till vehemently urged by thoſe privy to the Deſign, who prevailed with him in an Hoſtile manner to ſail up to the place, which happened upon the Feaſt of the Annunciation. Preſently hereupon Stephen the Magiſter departed from Court, and Nicetas the Patritian, a great Intimate of Romanus went in and thence removed the Patriarch, which done, after an Oath taken from Romanus, with moſt bitter and heavy Curſes that he would never entertain any thought againſt the Emperour's Dignity or Perſon, he received him into the Palace, and going along with him to Prayers to the Church in Pharus, after Faith given and received on both ſides, made him Great Commander of the Aſſociates. Shortly after to ſweeten and take off Phocas, Letters were written to him, to bid him be of good courage, and continue in his Allegiance, for he ſhould ſpeedily be conſidered. To this purpoſe alſo Conſtantine the Chamberlain was commanded to write to him. And upon receipt of theſe Letters he kept himſelf quiet for ſome time at his own home in Cappadocia.

Leo and Romanus combine together.

Conſtantine Marries the Daughter of Romanus. Styling him Father of the Emperour.

Upon which he Rebells.

9. But in the fifth Week of Lent the Emperour Married Helena the Daughter of Romanus Lacapenus, and cauſed her to be Crowned together with himſelf by Nicholas the Patriarch. To Romanus himſelf he gave the Title and Dignity of his Father, with which no Man ever had been honoured before, as Glycas obſerves, and conferred his former Office upon his Son Chriſtopher. Theſe things quite turned the Stomach of Leo Phocas, who had almoſt digeſted former Misfortunes in dayly expectation of what was promiſed him. Now by the advice of his Friends, aſwell as his own Inclinations, he reſolved to riſe, and for that purpoſe got to him Conſtantine the Chamberlain, the two Brothers, Gongylii, and others, endeavouring to perſwade all that he took Arms in behalf of the Emperour Conſtantine. But Romanus ſo beſtirred himſelf, that by Letters conveyed to the Camp ſigned by the Emperour and ſealed with his Seal, he convinced many of his Souldiers of their miſtake, of whom ſeveral great Officers preſently revolted from him. And herewith incouraged, he ſent Simeon the Overſeer of the Canicleus, to the Army, who by reading to them another Declaration, whereby he owned Romanus for his Father, and declared Leo to be a Traytour to him and his Family, wholly brought them all off, and Leo ſhifted for himſelf by flight to a certain Caſtle Atcas, whence he removed to another, which bore the Name of Goleon, as much as to ſay the Lamentation of Leo, which was eſteemed an ill Omen; for here he was taken. Upon notice thereof were ſent to fetch him up to the City John Tubaces and Leo Pagtelæs, who in the paſſage pulled out his Eyes by private order from Romanus, or of their own Accord without his knowledge, as he affirmed, pretending to take the matter much to heart. Thus was ſuppreſſed the Inſurrection made by Leo, but all danger not thereby removed from the Head of Romanus, againſt whom Conſpired one Conſtantinus Crematenus, David Cumulianus, and Michael the Curator Manganorum, (that is, Overſeer of the Engines) who armed certain young men to kill him as he went out to hunt. But the Plot was timely diſcovered, and the Conſpiratours having their Eyes put out were in an ignominious manner led about the

But is taken and puniſhed.

Μιχαὴλ κȣράτωρος τῶν Μαγγάνων. Curator Manganorum id eſt baliſtarum & aliorum id genus tormentorum.

Zoe the Empreſs ſhaven.

the Forum, and among them Leo Phocas upon a Mule. Zoe alſo the Empreſs accuſed of a deſign againſt his life was ſhaven and thruſt into a Monaſtery. Moreover for attempting ſomething againſt him were baniſhed the City Theophylact, the Patritian, and even he who had been the Authour of his preferment Theodore the Schoolmaſter, with his Brother Simeon, he perceiving, it ſeems, and repenting that he had gone too far. They were confined to a place called Opſicium, and thither conveyed by the diligence of Curcuas the Drungarius Biglæ, who ſeizing ſuddenly on them conveyed them by Boats into the oppoſite Continent.

Romanus Crowned Emperour by the allowance of Conſtantine.

Chriſtopher Emperour.

Puniſhes ſeveral Conſpiratours againſt himſelf.

Inſults over Conſtantine.

10. Now the way being fully cleared by removal of all Competition, on the four and twentieth day of September, and the eighth year of the Emperour's Reign, the Title of Cæſar was conferred on Romanus; and in December following he was by allowance of Conſtantine Crowned Emperour by the Hands of Nicholas the Patriarch. Thus poſſeſſed of the Imperial Dignity on Candlemas day following he cauſed to be Crowned his Wife Theodora, and in May on Whitſunday his Son Chriſtopher, Conſtantine openly yielding his conſent and approving, but inwardly repining and deploring the condition into which he was brought. Romanus for the ſecurity of his Eſtate baniſhed ſeveral Perſons upon ſuſpicion; but could not thereby hinder the effects of envy which his high and ſudden Advancement had procured. For another Conſpiracy was hatched againſt him by Arſenius a Patritian, and one Paulus Manglabyra, which yet was diſcovered, and they loſt both their Eſtates and Eyes. To obviate theſe Practices and ſtrengthen himſelf by Alliance he Married his Daughter Agatha to Leo the Son of Argyrus, a man very Noble and of excellent Qualifications both of Body and Mind. But by this time ſeveral began to commiſerate the condition of Conſtantine, who was thus overpowered by the Upſtart, and one Anaſtaſius, called Sacellarius, framed new Deſigns to take him off. But this Plot was alſo diſcovered, and Anaſtaſius for his pains was ſhaven and made a Monk. Now did Romanus publickly command, that he himſelf having the firſt, Conſtantine ſhould be onely called and eſteemed Emperour in the ſecond place, and under this pretence that this was the onely means to prevent Conſpiracies; thus for uncertain things and a fading Empire, making himſelf perjured and an Enemy to Almighty God, as our Writers obſerve. About this time it happening that Adraleſtus the Domeſtick of the Schools dying, he conferred his place, as a farther means to ſtrengthen his Alliance on Pothus Argyrus.

The Bulgarians renew their Incurſions againſt the Romans.

11. Now were the Bulgarians again very troubleſome, making their Inrodes as far as Cataſyrtes; and Pothus, as his place required, led out an Army againſt them, with little effect on either ſide, ſave that Michael one of his Officers being out to ſcout, did ſome little hurt to a Party of the Enemy, and received a wound of which he died ſhortly after. But Simeon ſent more Forces commanded by Chaganus one of his Noblemen, and Minicius the Maſter of his Horſe, with Orders to march to Conſtantinople it ſelf without any ſtop. Romanus hearing of it leſt they ſhould burn and waſte the Suburbs and adjoyning Palaces, diſpatched away the two Argyri, Leo and Pothus, John Rector, and others to meet and oppoſe them, who accordingly gave them Battel in the Plain of Pegæ, but John the Rector aſfrighted at their noiſe and ſudden Onſet ran away and gave occaſion to a Defeat, wherein many were ſlain. He hardly eſcaping got to a Pinnace, which Alexius the Drungarius of the Navy endeavouring to doe, fell down from the ſide of the Veſſel, and was drowned, together with his Protomandator. Leo and Pothus recovered a Caſtle in their flight; the reſt of the Multitude was either drowned as they indeavoured to eſcape, were ſlain by the Enemies hand, or taken Priſoners: And the Bulgarians without any oppoſition burnt the Palace of Pegæ, and waſted all the Countrey. The year following being the eleventh of Conſtantine, in the Tenth Indiction, died on the twentieth of February, Theodora the Wife of Romanus, and after her deceaſe Sophia the Wife of Chriſtopher bore the Title of Auguſta or Empreſs. Now made the Bulgarians another Inrode as far as the Palace of Theodora, which they burnt without any reſiſtence. Romanus ſtanding now in need of his Officers, made them a great Feaſt, and by good words, aſwell as the Entertainment, made them ingage to doe their utmoſt indeavour in defence of their Countrey, ſo much diſgraced aſwell as haraſſed by the ſo frequent Invaſions of that People.

12. The day following, Sactitius the Leader of the Excubitores to make good his word, as ſoon as it was light ſet upon the Enemy's Camp, and killed all he found therein, the reſt being employed abroad in pillaging the Countrey. But underſtanding by ſome that had eſcaped of his Enterprize, they returned thither, and overpowered the Romans already wearied by the former Fight; Sactitius having with his few made oppoſition a conſiderable time, and killed many, put ſpurs to his Horſe and fled, but being laid faſt in paſſing of a Ditch, was wounded mortally by thoſe that purſued him; and though by the Aſſiſtence of his Attendants he was got out of the Ditch, and came to Blachernæ, yet he died there the night following in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, to the great affliction of the Emperour, the Army, and all the People.

A Rebellion in Chaldia, but ſuppreſſed.

At this time a Rebellion happened in Chaldia (a Region of Syria, near to Iberia) againſt the Emperour, which was happily ſuppreſſed by the diligence of Curcuas, Domeſtick of the Schools, then lying at Cæſarea, who on a ſudden and unexpectedly fell upon the Conſpiratours.

Simeon lays Siege to Adrianople.

In the mean while Simeon the Bulgarian laid Siege to Adrianople, about which he drew a line, and with violence attacqued it. The Governour at this time was Leo a Patritian, whom for his too unadviſed haſte and vehemence againſt the Enemy, they called Moroleon, or Leo the Fool. But he defended the City very Gallantly, both by oppoſition made from the Walls, and ſeveral ſucceſfull Sallies, till the Inhabitants, pinched with Famine, gave up themſelves, Governour and Town into Simeon's Hands, who remembring of how many Bulgarians Leo had been the Deſtruction, baſely cauſed him to be tortured to Death. Then left he a Garriſon in Adrianople, which upon its being ſeized by ſome Roman Forces, delivered it up again into their Hands.

The Saracens invade the Sea Coaſts, but are ſoundly beaten.

At the ſame time, Leo of Tripolis with a great Fleet of Saracens invaded the Sea Coaſts and Iſlands. Him John Radenus the Patritian and Drungarius of the Navy, as he lay at Lemnus, ſuddenly Attacqued with ſuch Execution, that ſcarcely any but himſelf eſcaped alive from the place.

Simeon undertakes another Expedition, pitchig his Tent near Blachernæ.

13. In the Month of September, and the ſecond Indiction, being the ſeventeenth year from the beginning of the Reign of Conſtantine, Simeon the Bulgarian Prince, with all the Force he could make, undertook another Expedition againſt Conſtantinople; having with Fire and Sword waſted Macedonia and Thrace, he pitcht his Camp near to Blachernæ. Hence he ſent to require that the Patriarch and ſome of the Nobility might be brought to him to Treat, who accordingly, upon the Reception of Hoſtages, were diſpatched to him; but when they were about to Treat, he diſmiſſed them, ſignifying his deſire to come to an Interview with the Emperour himſelf, whom he knew both to be a Man of Prudence and Veracity.

Whence an Interview and Peace enſued.

Romanus was well enough pleaſed with the offer, and commanded a place to be prepared not far from the Walls, upon the Sea ſhore, whither he might conveniently come with his Gally; when in the mean time, Simeon not able or willing to reſtrain his Hoſtility, ſent a Party to burn the Church of our Lady of the Fountain, built by Juſtinian, and all things thereabout, giving thereby vehement occaſion to ſuſpect that he was no-way inclining to Peace. But on the ninth day of December, all things being prepared, they met on the place; firſt came the Emperour, and expected the other, who made all the ſhew of Bravery he could by his ſeveral Ranks, diſtinguiſhed by their Gilded and Brazen Targets and Spurs. Romanus expoſtulated with him, that "Being a Chriſtian, he ſhould be ſo Bloudy, and rejoyce in the "ſlaughter of thoſe that Profeſſed the ſame Religion; and putting him in mind "that he muſt dye, and according to that Faith, give an Account of all his "Cruelties to an Higher Judge; offered him what Wealth he would aſk, if it "was that he ſought after, by which and other motives he ſo wrought upon him, "that he promiſed to conclude the Peace, and ſo departed richly preſented by "the Emperour.

Stephen and Conſtantine, Sons of Romanus Crowned Emperours.

14. On Chriſtmas Day following, Romanus cauſed his two Sons, Stephen and Conſtantine to be Crowned in the Great Church, reſerving the other, Theophylact by Name, for the Patriarchal Dignity. John Myſticus his prime Miniſter he honoured with Patritian and Proconſular Dignity, who ſhortly after was convicted of aiming at the Imperial Power, and for that was ſhaven a Monk; his fellow Conſpiratour, Coſmas the Patritian and Logotheta Dromi being ſoundly beaten, and turned out of his Place, who had had a Deſign of Marrying his Daughter to Myſticus. About the ſame time moſt horrible Earthquakes happened in Thrace, by which many Churches, Houſes and Men were ſwallowed up: Simeon the Bulgarian making an Expedition againſt the Chrobati, was in the ſtraits of the Mountains overthrown by them in Battel, and loſt all his Army. Now the Story goes, that one John an Aſtronomer came to the Emperour, and deſired him to ſend ſome to cut off the Head of a Pillar which ſtood over the Arch of Xerolophus, toward the Weſt; for by that means Simeon ſhould periſh inſtantly, that Pillar being fatal to * him, or Magically ſignifying Him; which being done, they

* Αὐτῷ γὰρ ἐστοιχειῶσθαι τὴν τοιαύτην στήλην. Hanc ejus eſſe elementum, ei vi quadam magica eſſe fatalem.

Simeon the Bulgarian Dies.

Peter ſucceeds him.

they give out, that in the ſame inſtant Romanus found that he Died in Bulgaria, of a Diſeaſe which ſeized upon his † Heart, or Stomach. His Succeſſour was Peter his Son by his ſecond Wife, the Siſter of George Suſurbulus (whom dying, he left Guardian to his Children) for Michael his Son, by a former Wife, he had ſhaven and made a Monk. Now, together with the Death of their Prince, ſeveral calamities fell upon the Bulgarians. For the Neighbouring Nations, and the Chrobati, Servi, Turks and others hearing of Simeon's Death, prepared to make War againſt them, and they laboured under a great Famine, their Corn being conſumed by Locuſts. But they feared eſpecially the Romans, and therefore to divert them from their own doors, reſolved to begin firſt, and fright them from any ſuch Reſolutions by an Invaſion.

† Cedren. Νόσω κατακαρδίω. Zonar. καρδιογμῶ.

Who invading Macedonia, is met by the Forces of the Empire.

15. Peter then makes an Inrode into Macedonia, but underſtanding that the Emperour was coming againſt him, by advice of George his Uncle, ſent a Monk with Letters to him, wherein he offered to make a Peace, and a League alſo with the Romans, for farther ſtrengthening whereof, if he thought fit by a Marriage, he would enter into a ſtricter Alliance with them. Romanus was no whit diſpleaſed with the Meſſage, but ſent ſpeedily away one Theodoſius a Monk, and Conſtantinus Rhodius a Clerk of the Court to Treat with them in Meſembria. The Treaty ſo well ſucceeded, that there returned with the Commiſſioners to Conſtantinople one Stephen, a Man of great eſteem in Bulgaria, and after them followed George Suſurbulus, with others the moſt eminent of that Countrey. Coming to Court, they liked exceedingly a Daughter of Chriſtopher the Emperour's Son, called Mary, a very Beautifull Lady; and ratifying the Treaty of Peace, ſent away for Peter himſelf, whom Nicetas a Magiſter and Father-in-Law to Chriſtopher met on the way, and Conducted him to Blachernæ, where Romanus himſelf received him very honourably. The Peace and Articles of Marriage were quickly confirmed, and on the fifth day of October the Nuptials ſolemnized in the Church of our Lady, at the Fountain, by Stephen the Patriarch. It happened, that at the third Feaſt after the Wedding, that Romanus entertained Peter the Bridegroom, Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus the Emperour, and once his Maſter, of whom we have heard nothing a long time, and his Son Chriſtopher. Now by the Arts of Romanus, the Bulgarians there preſent being wrought upon, as is probable, made a Diſturbance, and exclaimed againſt it, that Conſtantine ſhould take Place and be preferred before Chriſtopher the Father-in-Law of their Prince. To gratifie them you muſt know, the Emperour cauſed his Son to precede Conſtantine; and all the Ceremony being now over, the new Married Couple departed into Bulgaria, being brought on their way as far as Hebdomus by the Parents of the Bride, and Theophanes the Protoveſtiarius, which Theophanes had managed the whole Affair.

Βασιλικὸν κληρικόν.

Whence a League and Alliance.

Chriſtopher preferred before Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus.

The Saracens of Syria beaten by the Romans.

16. In the mean time, the Maſter John Curcuas, Domeſtick of the Schools, did ſuch Execution on the Saracens of Syria, and took ſo many of their Towns and ſtrong Holds, laying Siege to Melitena it ſelf, that Apochapſus the Ameras of this place, and Aposblathus who Commanded the Souldiers of the Garriſon came out to him to Treat, and were ſent on that Errand to the Emperour. They gave ſuch ſatisfaction, that they were received as Friends and Allies of the Romans, and ingaged to Fight in their aid againſt their own Countreymen. But not long after they both died, and with them the Peace ceaſed to be any longer, whereupon the Domeſtick, aſſiſted by Melias a Magiſter who Commanded the Armenians, beſieged Melitena; after ſome time took it, and brought all the Countrey adjoining into the Obedience of the Emperour, who reduced it into the form of a Province or Curatourſhip, as they term it, and by that means much increaſed the publick Revenue. Much about this time, Nicetas Father-in-Law to Chriſtopher was accuſed to have moved him to depoſe his Father, for which he was Baniſhed the City, and made a Monk. The Winter following, happened ſo great a Froſt in December, as continued for an hundred and twenty days, and this was followed by ſo great a Plague, as if we ſhould believe our Authours, no ſuch ever happened before, the Living ſcarcely ſufficing to Bury the Dead. However, herein they may Hyperbolize, yet this we have found in our Age, that the greateſt Plague which hath happened in this City, was uſhered in by an hard Winter, whereby the Pores of Mens Bodies were ſhut, and Perſpiration hindred, the greateſt means of Health, by reaſon of the avoydance of thoſe vapours, and ſpending thoſe humours, which ſhut in, muſt needs cauſe great diſturbance and fermentations in the Bodies of thoſe that are accuſtomed to a milder air; for as for ſuch as conſtantly live in extremity of cold, nature ſome other way Melitena and the Countrey adjoyning reduced into the Form of a Province.

Τὴν μὲν οὖν Μελιτηνὴν εἰς κουρατωρείαν καταστήσας ὁ Βασιλεύς.

A great Froſt and Plague.

Rebellions in Bulgaria.

Christopher the Emperour Dies.

may diſcharge her ſelf. About this time, John the Brother of Peter the Bulgarian Prince, with others Conſpired againſt him, and being diſcovered, his Complices were put to Death, and he beaten and caſt into Priſon. Romanus the Emperour underſtanding hereof, ſent one who, under colour of renewing the League, got him out of Priſon, and brought him to Conſtantinople. After this, Michael the other Brother of Peter Rebelled, and endeavouring to ſet up for himſelf, ſeized on a Caſtle, and got many to joyn with him. But he preſently after died, and then they out of deſperation invaded the Roman Territories and waſting all before them,proceeded as far as Macedonia, Strymone and Greece, as far as Nicopolis, on which they ſeized, and were not removed out of the Countrey but by much labour and endeavour in after-times. Now fell down a great ſtone from an Arch in the Forum, called the Arch of the World, and killed ſixty Men. A terrible Fire alſo happened near the Forum of the Bleſſed Virgin. And Chriſtopher the Emperour Died on the fourteenth day of Auguſt.

A Rebellion, but ſuppreſſed and puniſhed.

The Turks invade the Roman Pale.

The Roſſi, a People of Poland infeſt the Coaſts of the Empire.

Σκευαστῷ πυρὶ, Cedr. Τῷ ὑγρῷ πυρὶ Zonar. Wild Fire Angl.

But are at length deſtroyed.

Lib. 5.

17. Some time after this, one Baſilius a Macedonian feigned himſelf to be Conſtantine Ducas, and perſwading many to believe him, had done much miſchief, but that he was apprehended by a Captain in the Army, and brought to the Emperour, who cauſed one of his Hands to be cut off, and ſo let him goe. But as theſe Cheats if neglected have ever made greater Diſturbances, he got a brazen Hand inſtead of that cut off, and began to tell his tale over again, by which he got together a multitude of credulous People, and ſeizing on a Caſtle, thence made Depredations into all the adjoyning Countrey; but a Party was ſent which eaſily maſtered him, and being taken again, when upon Examination it could not be found that any of the Nobility had been Acceſſory to his Crime, he was Burnt alive. Romanus rid of this Danger, Married his Son Stephen to Ann the Daughter of Gabalas, and upon her Marriage beſtowed on her an Imperial Diademe. In April following, the Turks made an Invaſion, and waſted all Weſtward as far as the City; to whom Theophanes the Patritian and Protoveſtiarius was ſent and bought them off, Romanus ſparing no coſt to redeem the Captives; as to give him his due, he omitted nothing during the great Froſt and Plague to relieve the Poor, and leſſen the publick Calamity. But thinking to eſtabliſh his Family in the ſucceſſion to perpetuity, he married his third Son Conſtantine to one Helena the Daughter of Adrian a Patritian, an Armenian originally, and, ſhe dying not long after, to Theophano, who derived her Pedigree from Mamas. Not long after, on the fourteenth of June, a Fleet of the Roſſi (a People by others called Roxolani, and by Tacitus Baſtarnæ, of the European Sarmatia; their Countrey being now Ruthenia and Ruſſen, in the Kingdom of Poland, Weſt of Podolia, their chief City Leopolis or Leunpurg.) conſiſting of ten thouſand, or as ſome ſay, of fifteen thouſand Veſſels came againſt the City. Againſt them was ſent with the Navy Theophanes, the Protoveſtiarius, the great Man now in Command and Favour, who watching his opportunity, put them to flight, and burnt many of their Ships with that which Cedrenus calls Artificial Fire. They that eſcaped went toward the Eaſt, but in their paſſage Bardas the Son of Phocas killed a number of them which landed for Proviſions, and Curcuas the Domeſtick of the Schools coming ſuddenly upon many more, made great ſlaughter of them. This Barbarous People, called Roſſi or Ruſſi, coming out of that Countrey, which ſtill bears their Name, had before their Defeat done things which (to uſe the Expreſſion of Greek Writers) exceeded a Tragedy. For of thoſe Chriſtians they took, ſome they nailed to Croſſes,ſome they faſtned to the Ground, and others they placed as Marks to Shoot at. But ſuch Prieſts as they found, they drove nails into their Heads; and they burnt many Churches. Being thus worſted, they kept themſelves in their ſhips, and becauſe the Roman Fleet attended their motions, thought to ſlip away; but Theophanes was ſo vigilant, that he fell upon them, and taking or ſinking moſt of their Veſſels, very few returned home with the News. Of this Ruſſian Fleet Luitprandus makes mention, beſides the Greek Hiſtorians, and ſays, that the Name of their King or Captain was Inger. He calls them Northmans; and ſo it ſeems were called all ſorts of People Inhabiting the Neighbouring Parts of this Frozen Zone.

18. Theophanes for his good ſervice was made Chamberlain; but Curcuas upon jealouſie was hurried out of his Place, which he had held two and twenty years, and ſeven months; a Man exceeding Valiant and Wiſe, who in a manner had Conquered all Syria; and for a complete knowledge of whoſe Actions, Cedrenus refers us to one Manuel, a Protoſpatharian, and a Judge, who had deſcribed them in a Volume conſiſting of Eight Books. And no leſs proſperous was Theophilus philus his Brother, Grandfather to that John who afterward was Emperour, the Governour of Meſopotamia, overpowering the Saracens whereever he came. The Turks after this made another Invaſion, but were the ſecond time bought off by Theophanes. To complete theſe Felicities by a more honourable Alliance, Romanus ſends Paſchalius, a Protoſpatharian and Governour of Lombardy, to Hugh the King of France (of Italy our Greek Writers mean) to deſire his Daughter in Marriage, for Romanus his Nephew the Son of Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus, which was granted, and the Lady Berta by Name, his Daughter by a Concubine, being ſent with great Pomp lived with Romanus five years, and then died. But theſe ſerene and proſperous Days were ſucceeded by tempeſtuous weather, both in the natural and civil Senſe. A Violent wind in December did much miſchief, and the State and Dignity of Romanus was ſhortly after not ſhaken onely, but quite overturned. Conſcious, as our Authours believe, of his Wickedneſs and Perjury, in that he ſwore to be a Protectour onely to Conſtantine, and never to affect the Sovereignty (though he not onely did this, but placed himſelf and Sons before the Right owner) he endeavoured to expiate this Guilt by certain good Actions, and to appeaſe Almighty God. Beſides other charitable Deeds, he paid the Debts of ſuch as owed money, to the Value of nineteen Centenaries, and cauſed the Bonds to be burnt in the middle of the Forum: Moreover he paid the Rents of ſuch as hired Houſes in the City. “And truly, ſaith Zonaras, herein he gratified ſuch as were in Debt, but thereby he himſelf received little or no benefit. For what he gave was not his own, it being publick money, and belonging to the Sovereign Power, of which he had ſeized by force, and defrauded the Right owner. Injoying all the Imperial wealth and ſubſtance, out of it he ſpared a ſmall Pittance, juſt as if a man having killed his Neighbour's Ox, gives the Feet onely to the Poor, and he himſelf devours the whole Body; or as if one that lies with another Man's Wife, gives ſome of her Husband's money to thoſe that are in want, to purchaſe excuſe for his Crime.

Romanus endeavours to expiate his unjuſt Uſurpation and Dealings with Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus.

19. But as Providence (ſo he farther obſerves) is uſually ſlow in Revenge to give time and ſpace for Repentance, ſo is it ſure at laſt to take vengeance of thoſe that will not amend their ways. Romanus was now paſſing the twenty ſixth year of his Uſurpation, wherein he had made no reckoning of Conſtantine the true Heir of the Empire, who all this while had concealed his Indignation aſwell as he could, but notwithſtanding was ſo carefull as to watch a fit opportunity to caſt off the Uſurper, and recover his former Place and Dignity, having ſo much Spirit as to be ſenſible, that nothing was left him but the Name and Habit. He found at length, that the onely means to doe his work was to ſet the Father and Sons at variance. Chriſtopher was already dead, Conſtantine was a Man too ſolid and wiſe for him to deal withall; but Stephen being of the quite contrary diſpoſition was moſt fit for his purpoſe, and he got one Baſilius Volucer, a very crafty man to inveigle him, and bring about his Deſign. Baſilius having wound himſelf into his Acquaintance by Degrees inſtilled into him ſuch thoughts as theſe: that he was imprudent, a Man of his Age, Strength and Underſtanding, to ſuffer all to hang by a rotten Thread, as he termed the old Man's Life, and not rather take the Government upon himſelf being ſo admirably qualified for it, for which he might be aſſured of the aſſiſtence of Conſtantine his Siſters Husband, who could not take it well to be ſo leſſened, and eclipſed as he was by Romanus. With theſe and the like Flatteries he was ſo tickled, that he reſolved to depoſe his Father, and having felt a little the Pulſe of his Brother Conſtantine, and found him averſe to any ſuch Attempt, to go through it, with the Help of Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus and Marianus the Monk, the Son of Leo Argyrus, who gladly joined in the Enterprize, though he was very much beloved by Romanus. Taking then his opportunity he ſeized on his Father, on the ſixteenth of December, and conveying him into the Iſland Prota, forced him to be ſhaven and made a Monk; which done, he with his Brother and Brother-in-Law managed all things. But long could they not live without ſuſpicions and jealouſies, and eſpecially Stephen feared the Intereſt and claim of Porphyrogenitus, and therefore reſolved to depoſe him. This Conſtantine was aware of, and having the ſame Deſign upon him was more quick, and that through the inſtigation of his Wife eſpecially. Having communicated his purpoſe to Baſilius, we now mentioned, Marianus and others whom he made his own, as the two Brothers dined with him; on the twenty ſeventh of January he cauſed them to be ſecured and conveyed away, viz. Stephen into the Iſland Panormus, and Conſtantine into Terebinthus, where they were ſhaven and made Clerks, Stephen was afterwards removed into Proconneſus, thence thence to Rhodes, and at laſt to Mitylene; and Conſtantine into Samothracia. Stephen bore his Fortune courageouſly, and lived many years in Leſbus; but Conſtantine grew ſullen and impatient, and having often endeavoured to eſcape, in the ſecond year after his depoſing killed one of his Keepers, at which the reſt were ſo inraged, that they ſlew him. As for Romanus their Father he outlived the diſgrace ſome three years.

Who ſets the Father and Sons at variance.

Thereby depoſing Romanus.

And ſhaving Stephen and Conſtantine.

Becomes ſole Emperour.

His management of Affairs.

A Conſpiracy againſt him, but diſcovered and puniſhed.

20. Thus Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus, having in his thirty third year recovered his former Eſtate, in his Government anſwered not the expectation and hope, that had been conceived of him. For he gave himſelf up to Wine and Sloth, leaving the management of affairs to others, and yet took no care whom he intruſted, promiſcuouſly and without any conſideration conferring Offices both military and Civil. He would puniſh Offenders without any Mercy, though he looked not at home where Helena his Wife, and Baſilius made merchandize of all Preferments, by which means baſe and unworthy Perſons got into the greateſt Places of Truſt and Revenue. Yet is he much commended for reſtoring the Sciences and Advancement of Learning, which now had lain much neglected. He incouraged alſo Artificers, and very much increaſed Trade. Moreover he was very gratefull to ſuch as had aſſiſted him in the Recovery of his Power. On Bardas Phocas he conferred the Dignity of Magiſter, and the Office of Domeſtick of the Schools of the Eaſt; and his Sons he preferred to good Commands in the Eaſt, Cappadocia and Seleucia. To Baſilius Volucer he gave the Command of the Aſſociates, made Marianus Argyrus his Comes Stabuli, and one Manuel Curtices the Drungarius Biglæ. But to eſtabliſh his Power which he had now recovered, in the firſt Place on Eaſter-Day he gave a Diademe to his Son Romanus: then cauſed he to be gelded Romanus the Son of Stephen, as alſo Baſilius begotten by Romanus the Elder on a Slave, and Michael the Son of Chriſtopher to enter into Orders. Now he ſeemed to himſelf ſo fixed as nothing could ſhake him, all Dangers being removed and prevented, when more ways than one he was in peril to looſe all again. For Theophanes the Chamberlain, was plotting how to reduce Romanus out of the Iſland Prota, and to reſtore him, many joyning with him in the Deſign: and at the ſame time ſeveral others of great Quality and Intereſt conſulted how they might fetch back Stephen, and re-eſtabliſh him in the Government. The Plots were timely diſcovered by ſome of the Parties, and Theophanes with his Companions were baniſhed. Thoſe that were for Stephen were ignominiouſly beaten, and looſing both their Eſtates and Noſes were then driven into exile.

He marries his Son Romanus.

The Saracens make an Invaſion into the Empire.

21. The Daughter of Hugh dying as we ſaid after five years, having ſome time conſulted to whom he ſhould marry his Son Romanus, at length he beſtowed on him a Maid of very ſordid Parentage, her Parents it's ſaid keeping a Victualling-Houſe, but of admirable beauty and a miracle of Nature, and her Name being Anaſtaſia, he changed it into Theophano. As for matters of War, Bardas Phocas was as we ſaid made Domeſtick of the Schools, but did nothing worthy of his Title himſelf, but managed all by his Deputies, incurring ſuch hatred of the Souldiers by his extreme covetouſneſs, that in an Ingagement he was deſerted by them, and had been taken or killed but for the pertinacious Valour of his own Attendants, who brought him off alive, but with a great and deep wound he received in his Forehead. But his two Sons Nicephorus and Leo behaved themſelves to Admiration, both in reſpect of their Valour and Conduct againſt the Enemy, and the Kindneſs and Providence for thoſe that were under their Charge. Leo took in Battel one Apolaſaems a very eminent Man, and Kinſman of Chabdanus the Ameras of Chalepus, who with a great multitude had invaded the Roman Pale, and after a great ſlaughter of his Men ſent him up Priſoner to Conſtantinople, where the Emperour led him in Triumph, and trode upon his Neck. But Conſtantine, the third Son of Phocas, Chabdanus took, and carried him away to Chalepe, where he eſſayed by all means to make him abjure his Religion, and when all would not doe poiſoned him, which ſo inraged his Father, that all the Kinſmen he took of Chabdanus he put to death. This ſo irritated Chabdanus on the other ſide, that Paul a Magiſter ſirnamed Monomachus, being ſent to treat of Peace could doe no good with him; and he with a great Force invaded the Empire, leading with him Nicetas Chalentzas a Patritian, and ſeveral other Perſons he had taken Priſoners. But Nicetas betrayed all his Councils to Phocas, who laid an Ambuſh for him in a very ſtrait place he was to paſs, and cut off moſt of his Men, he himſelf with a very few eſcaping. Before his flight, he killed thoſe Priſoners he had in Cuſtody. But Nicetas had corrupted his Keepers, and was got away with all ſuch as belonged to him.

The Territories of the Saracens invaded but with ill Succeſs.

Conſtantine like to be Poiſoned.

A Little after dies.

22. Bardas to prevent any more Inrodes invaded the Territories of the Saracens, where he waſted all in his way, took many ſtrong Holds, and amongſt other Places Adapa that Noble City as they term it. The Emperour's Succeſs was no way ſuitable to his undertaking, who, as became him, did conſtantly regret the great Loſſes his Subjects ever and anon ſuſtained from thoſe Agarens that inhabited Crete, to ſtrike therefore a Terrour into them, he prepared a ſtrong Army, and rigged a very conſiderable Fleet to tranſport it. And had his choice of a Perſon to conduct them been as good as his Deſign was laudable, it could not have miſcarried. But General of this whole expedition he made one Conſtantine Gongylas a Patritian one of his Bedchamber, a mere Courtier, an effeminate Man not fit at all for a Camp, of which he never had any Experience. He paſſed over into Crete, but there did nothing worthy of the Place he bore; neither took care for fortifying himſelf by any Works, nor ſending out any Scouts to give him notice of the motion of the Enemy. The Saracens then perceiving what a careleſs and ſilly Enemy they had to deal with, took their opportunity, and falling upon the Romans eaſily defeated them; ſome they took, others they killed, and made themſelves Maſters of the Camp, and the worthy General himſelf had ran the ſame Fortune as he deſerved, had not his Domeſticks notably defended him, and conveyed him into the Admiral Gally. Yet was it not out of diſdain for this miſcarriage or for his miſgovernment, that Romanus the Son of the Emperour now plotted againſt his Father's Life. But ſo it was, that impatient to dominiere himſelf he could not ſtay his time, but conſpiring with his Wife the Victualler's Daughter, they perſwaded Nicetas, one of the Attendants at his Table, to give him Poiſon, inſtead of a purging Potion he was to take. It either happened by chance or was deſigned, that as he was about to drink it he ſtumbled, and ſpilt the greater part of it, ſo that what remained did not work the effect they wiſhed, though he fell very ſick and hardly eſcaped. In the Month of September, he would needs travell to the Mountain Olympus, as was pretended to beg the Prayers of the Monks, for a ſucceſfull expedition he purpoſed to undertake into Syria, but as was thought to confer with Theodorus Biſhop of Cyzicus, how he might out Polyeuctus of the Office of Patriarch, which he had obtained after the Death of Theophylact Son of Romanus the late Emperour. There, either by the farther practice of his Son upon his Body, or otherwiſe he fell ſick, and being brought back to Conſtantinople in his Litter, died on the ninth of November, having lived fifty four years and two Months, whereof thirteen he reigned with his Father, Uncle and Mother, and twenty five more (he ſhould have reigned) with Romanus Lacapenus, and fifteen after that by himſelf. Zonaras gives him Commendation for his Piety to God, and his Love to Learning which he ſhewed by many good Deeds, his Writings and Epiſtles, compoſed though not according to exact Rules of Oratory, yet ſo as they wanted not ſtrains of Rhetorick. And there in Baronius, * a Fragment ſtill remaining of an Advice to his Son not to marry with any of the Barbarous Northern Nations, a great Reaſon of which is fetcht from a Precept left by Conſtantine the Great. He adds that he was much addicted to all ſorts of Verſes as was to be ſeen in theſe Writings, wherein he deplored the Death of his Wife, and he ſubjoins what's ſuitable to what we ſaid before concerning his reviving of Philoſophy, and the Liberal Arts. But the moſt memorable thing of theſe things is, the Collection which he cauſed to be made out of all Hiſtorians.

* Ad An. 96.

Romanus The Boy ſucceeds.

Why ſo termed.

23. Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus being dead, Romanus the Boy (ſo he was called, not that he was a Boy as to years, but to diſtinguiſh him from the Elder Romanus his Grandfather) ſucceeds him in the third Indiction, A. D. DCCCCLX. And as to his manners and carriage he might well enough be termed a Boy. For neglecting wholly matters of Government, which he left to the Management of one Joſeph Bring, as the chief of his Chamber, he himſelf attended no other weighty Affairs but thoſe of Mirth and Filthineſs, his chief Companions being either Whores, or thoſe of the other Sex that could pimp for him and gratifie him in ſuch naſty Delights, or tickle his Ears with Ribaldry. One John a Clerk, and an Eunuch, whom for his many Villanies Conſtantine had thruſt into a Monaſtery, now he received amongſt thoſe of his Bedchamber, the monaſtical Habit being thrown off, and notwithſtanding the earneſt Complaints of Polyeuctus the Patriarch, yet he excuſed the matter, and kept him with him as long as he lived; indeed after the Emperour's Death he returned to his Monaſtery, and changed again his Habit though not his Mind. Yet that it ſhould not be ſaid, but that Romanus was carefull to keep the Succeſſion in his own Family, on Eaſter Day he cauſed an

He crowns his Son Baſilius.

The Iſland of Crete ſubdued.

The Saracens on all ſides beaten by the Romans.

Imperial Crown to be ſet on the Head of his young Son Baſilius, and ſhortly after he had another Son born whom he called Conſtantine after his Grandfather, by which Iſſue he ſeemed now ſo confirmed in what at preſent he enjoyed, that he needed to take no farther care, eſpecially having ſo good a Commander as Nicephorus Phocas to manage his Wars, whom the late Emperour for his great ſervices, had preferred to be Domeſtick of the Schools of the Eaſt. This Nicephorus indeed had done things very extraordinary againſt the Saracens, having at ſeveral times ingaged and beaten the ſeveral Ameras of Tarſus, Chalepus and Tripolis, by which having ſo much teſtified his Abilities, Romanus now made choice of him to go againſt thoſe of Crete. Arriving at the Iſland with the Fleet, he put ſuch of them to flight as would have hindred his Landing, and then having ſtrongly incamped himſelf, and his Ships riding ſafely in Harbour he fell upon the ſeveral Towns, and in the ſpace of ſeven Months took many of them. On the ſeventh of March, he took Chandace the moſt fortified of all others, after which Curupes the Ameras of the Iſle, and Arcemas who was his Lieutenant, or next to him in Power fell into his Hands. He had now in a manner brought all Crete into obedience, for the ſettlement whereof when ſome time required, he was ſuddenly recalled at the Suggeſtions of Joſeph becauſe of an old ſaying, That he that conquered that Iſland, ſhould become Maſter of the whole Roman Empire. While he yet ſtaid in Crete, his Brother Leo Phocas was ſent into the Eaſt to reſtrain the Saracens, from making Inrodes, which at this time they might be prone to doe, on purpoſe to divert the Romans from Crete. He ingaged with Chabdanus at a Place called Andraſſus, and gave him ſuch an Overthrow, that an innumerable Multitude of the Agarens being ſlain, the reſt were brought away Priſoners to Conſtantinople in ſuch Droves, that all the Houſes both in City and Countrey were filled with Slaves. Chabdanus with a very few hardly eſcaped. Leo was graced with a Triumph, and otherwiſe honoured and rewarded as were all the reſt, that had well deſerved in the Expedition.

A Conſpiracy againſt him, but diſcovered and puniſhed.

A great Murrain among Cattel.

Ὁ Κράβα κατονομάζεται. Qui Craba nominatur.

24. But Romanus had not paſſed the ſecond year of his Reign, when a grievous Conſpiracy was hatched againſt him by the Principal of the Nobility. The Head of them was Baſilius Volucer, with whom joyned Paſchalius and Bardas the Son of Libis both Patritians, and Nicholas Chalcutzas, who reſolved to kill the Emperour on the Day appointed to the Horſe-races, as he ſhould come down to ſee the Sport, and proclaim Baſilius his Succeſſour. E'er the Day came, one Joanicius a Saracen and Conſpiratour diſcovered the Plot, and they were apprehended by Joſeph, who put them all to Torture except Baſilius, and on the Day of the Solemnity were led up and down in Deriſion, then baniſhed and ſhaven for Monks, yet the Emperour was ſo mercifull, that after ſome ſmall time he recalled them, but Baſilius fell diſtracted and died in Proconneſus, ſo paying for his ſeveral Treaſons. Romanus Saronita, who was Son-in-Law of Romanus the Elder, was ſo frighted with what had happened to him, and the reſt, that leſt his Eminent Condition ſhould bring him into danger, he diſtributed his Eſtate to his Children, and giving largely to the Poor went into a Monaſtery, where he lived a Monk many years in great eſteem with the ſucceeding Emperours. At this time raged a great Murrain of Cattel, which having begun in the Days of Romanus Senior, continued a long time after. The Emperour at the Inſtigation of his Wife, now reſolved to remove his Mother and Siſter from Court, to the Palace of Antiochus. The Mother underſtanding of it, ſo wrought upon her Son with her Complaints and Curſes, that ſhe was permitted to continue; but the Siſters were taken away and made Nunns, though afterwards when there was none left to awe them, they threw off the Habit and fell to Fleſh again. But ſhe took their removal ſo ill, that ſhe ſhortly after ſickned and died on the twentieth of September, and was royally interred by her Father.

* Glycæ Apochanda.

Berrhœa taken from the Saracens.

Romanus the Emperour dies.

25. We ſaid e'er while, that Nicephorus Phocas was called out of Crete, to which we muſt now add, that it was without any Permiſſion to return to Conſtantinople; for he received Orders to paſs with all his Forces into the Eaſt, where * Chabdanus after his defeat had recruited himſelf, and having now got together a conſiderable Army was expected every day by the Subjects of the Empire, to renew his wonted Hoſtilities. Nicephorus e'er he could doe any harm, got up to him as he came into Syria, overthrew him in Battel, and drove him farther up into the Countrey, which done he took Berrhœa all but the Caſtle, therein much Wealth, many Priſoners, and ſet at Liberty many Chriſtian Captives. This was good News to thoſe of Conſtantinople, though Romanus the Emperour ſcarcely lived to receive it, dying on the fifteenth Day of March, after he had lived twenty four years,

and

Baſilius Conſtantine and their Mother Theophano ſucceed. Nicephorus Phocas Triumphed at Conſtantinople.

and thereof Reigned thirteen years four Months and five days, as writes Curopalates and from him Cedrenus,(that is with his Father and by himſelf, for he Reigned about three alone) ſome thought he died of Poiſon, and others through his intemperance as to Wine and Women. He was large of ſtature though leſs than his Father, very good natur'd and eaſily reconciled; and is thought to have been able and fit enough for Government, had not thoſe about him intangled him in pleaſures and laſcivious courſes, that they managing his affairs, might have the better opportunity to enrich themſelves. The Empire by his death was devolved upon his two young Sons Baſilius and Conſtantine, and their Mother Theophano, who two days before was brought to Bed of a Daughter they called Anne. By the command of the Empreſs now Regent, though ſorely againſt the mind of Joſeph, Nicephorus Phocas came to Conſtantinople in April, and there Triumphed in the Cirque, ſhewing the Rich ſpoils taken both in Crete and Berrhœa, Joſeph very jealous that he affected the imperial Dignity, of which he being aware and knowing how much it concerned him to avoid the ſuſpicion of him, who at preſent was chief Miniſter, came to his Houſe privately, and deſiring to ſpeak with him alone, profeſſed he had had for a long time a deſire and purpoſe to retire out of the vanities of the World, to a Monaſtical Life, but had been hindred from his purpoſe by the kindneſs of his Princes, who had forced employment upon him: and he ſhewed him a Shirt of hair he had next his Skin. Joſeph ſurprized at his carriage, and at the ſight of the Shirt, fell down at his Feet, and begged his pardon, profeſſing he would give no Credit to ſuch as accuſed him for the time to come. And ſo he was permitted to depart to his own Houſe.

The League with the Bulgarians renewed.

26. They were alſo jealous of Stephen the Son of Romanus the Elder, who ſtill lived in confinement, and after much endeavour by ſtricter Cuſtody, he was made ſure of by Poiſon, at the procurement of Theophano. At the ſame time, Peter Prince of the Bulgarians, his Wife being dead, renewed the League with the Empire, and giving up his two Sons Borices and Romanus, ſhortly after died. Upon report hereof they were ſent home to poſſeſs themſelves of their Father's power, after which the four Sons of a potent Count of that Countrey, gaped and made a great faction amongſt the People. But in the mean time Joſeph ſorely repented that he had let Nicephorus Phocas eſcape out of his Hands, and reſolved to recover the prey if poſſible. He wrote Letters to Tzimiſches, and Curcuas Commanders in the Eaſt, and Men of great intereſt and abilites, promiſing to procure to the one the Office of Domeſtick of the Schools of the Eaſt, and the other that of the Weſt, if they would either get him ſhaven and made a Monk, or by any other means remove him out of the way. They when they had received the Letters out of their good will to Phocas gave him notice of it, and adviſed him to take good Courage, and put thoſe at Conſtantinople out of all doubt by a ſudden taking upon him the Dignity of Emperour, and when he excuſed himſelf, and either heartily or cunningly ſhewed himſelf averſe, they drew their Swords and threatened him with death upon refuſal. To ſave then his Life, as ſome gave out, he conſented, and on the ſecond day of July, by procurement of Tzimiſches, the Towns of the Eaſt ſaluted him Emperour. Others more probably reported that he had for a good while been ambitious this way, but not ſo much out of love to the Empire as to the Empreſs Theophano, with whom he was exceedingly in love, having ſent his truſty Servant ſeveral times to her on Meſſages, had private conference with her himſelf, and, as ſome gave out, Communication of cloſer importance. This Joſeph Bringas it's thought had ſmelt out, and thereupon increaſed his jealouſie of him.

Nicephorus ſaluted Emperour by the Army.

27. And when the report of his Deſignment came to Conſtantinople, he was then at his Wits end, the Citizens bearing him no good will, he had born himſelf ſo highly, and been difficult for Acceſs. But when he underſtood that with the Shouts and Acclamations of the Army, he was brought to Chryſopolis, he then conſidered what other he might ſet up for Emperour, and avoid the Indignation of the Souldiers. Upon the report of Phocas his promotion, his Father Bardas had taken Sanctuary in the great Church, but his Brother Leo, though narrowly watched yet eſcaped, and got to him ſafe. This farther perplexed Joſeph, who was not of an humour to ingratiate himſelf with the People, but if he went about it was wont the more to diſpleaſe and provoke them. And now he could not reſtrain his Inclination, but as he ſaw them all flock to the Church, and to be tickled with the Change they apprehended, with haughty and ſevere words he rebuked them, and threatened to raiſe Corn to an high rate, than which he could not doe nor ſay any thing more to inrage the multitude. This was on Sunday the ninth of Auguſt, when

A Tumult at Conſtantinople.

when on the Evening of the ſame Day, Baſilius the Favourite of Conſtantine the Emperour bearing mortal hate to him, got a Company of his Acquaintance and Servants together, and ſet them on Work to pull down the Houſes of thoſe of his party in ſeveral quarters of the City. They levell'd Joſeph's Houſe with the Ground, and not onely his, and divers others of the Nobility, but under this pretence, if any of the Company bore a grudge to another Man, down went his Houſe as well as the reſt, and not a few were killed in the Tumult. In the mean time all the Streets rebounded with the Noiſe of Nicephorus Callinicus or the brave Conquerour, and Bardas was now ſo incouraged as to leave the Shelter he had taken up in the Church, and Joſeph very prudently took his place. Baſilius took with him the Emperours Pinnace, and with the reſt of the Fleet, ſailed down to Chryſopolis, whence he brought up Nicephorus to the Hebdomus. Hence all the People of the City accompanying him in a ſolemn Pomp, with Shouts and Muſick, he entred the City at the Golden Gate, and going to the great Church was there Crowned on a Scaffold by Polieuctus the Patriarch, it being the Lord's day, and the ſixteenth of Auguſt.

Nicephorus Crowned there.

Marries Theophano the Empreſs.

28. Nicephorus Phocas thus became Emperour in the ſixth Indiction, A. D. 963. The firſt thing he did, was to remove the Empreſs Theophano from Court into another Palace. Then did he baniſh Joſeph into Paphlagonia, who after two years ended his Life in a Monaſtery. He gave to his Father Bardas the Title of Cæſar, and on the twentieth of September throwing off the Vizard, he married Theophano, and now fell to Fleſh again, of which he had not eaten ſince the death of his Son, who was killed by his Couſin German Peluſa, as they were riding and ſporting together. The Marriage being ſolemnized in the new Chapel of the Palace, as they were to paſs into the Chancel, Polieuctus having him by the Hand, and being entred himſelf ſtopt him at the Door, and refuſed to admit him, till he had made ſatisfaction for Marrying the ſecond time. At the ſame time a report flew about the Church, and made no little diſturbance, which was, you muſt know, that Nicephorus had been Godfather to one of Theophano's Children, by which ſpiritual Alliance being her Brother could not Marry her, and therefore the Patriarch required him either to quit his Wife, or he muſt ſtand Excommunicated, Nicephorus choſe the latter of the two, and propounded the matter to be debated by ſuch Biſhops of the Countrey as were in Town, and certain ſelect Senatours, who gave ſentence that the conſtitution which preſſed him, was made by Copronymus, that it did not bind him, and they all ſubſcribed an Inſtrument of his Abſolution. But the Patriarch for all this perſiſted in his former opinion, and refuſed to communicate with him, though Cæſar affirmed that the Emperour was not Godfather, as was alledged: and Stilianus chief of the Court Chaplains, whom they termed Protopapa, who was reported firſt to have raiſed the Story, before the Council and Senate, ſwore that he never either ſaw or ſaid any ſuch thing. Hereupon though Polieuctus knew he forſwore himſelf, yet he relinquiſhed the objection of Compaternity, and quiting alſo his obſtinacy as to the Crime of ſecond Marriage, after all this ſtir recovered to Communion Nicephorus. But he was ſenſible of, and never pardoned the affront as long as he lived.

He makes War upon the Saracens of Sicily.

29. In the firſt year of his Reign, Nicephorus undertook a War againſt the Saracens of Sicily, becauſe he judged it an Ignominious thing to pay Tribute to the People, which how it came firſt to be granted, we muſt diſcover by fetching matters a little higher. That People having in the Reign of Baſilius Macedo Conquered Sicily, all but Panormus, and thence Invaded Italy, and all the Iſlands of the Mediterranean as far, as Peloponneſus, were then repelled and beaten into quiet by Nicephorus Phocas, then Domeſtick of the Schools, and Grandfather to this Emperour, who thereby got exceeding much Honour. From that time Italy continued in repoſe till the Reign of Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus and his Mother, when theſe Barbarians taking advantage, fell upon the Countrey, and the Governours finding themſelves unable to grapple with both the Weſtern and Eaſtern Infidels, eſpecially now that the Bulgarians had violated the League, thought fit to conclude a Peace with them of Sicily, and the accord was made by Euſtathius, then Governour of Calabria, one of the Emperour's Chamber, that a yearly Penſion or Tribute, of two and twenty Thouſand Aurei ſhould be paid to the Saracens. The Peace concluded, John Muzalo a Patrician was preferred to the Government of Calabria, a Man ſo imperious that he was killed by the People, who gave up themſelves to Dandulphus King of Lombardy, (here probably is meant Radulphus King of Burgundi and Italy againſt Berengarius) much about the time that Romanus the Elder ſeized on the Government. Romanus reſolved if need were, to ſend a Fleet to recover if poſſible, theſe Weſtern Provinces of the Empire, but yet thought fit to ſend before Coſmas of Theſſalonica, a Patritian well known to Dandulphus, who by many Arguments at length perſwaded him to quit the Countrey, and embrace amity with the Emperour, and our Authours add that beſides him, he perſwaded thoſe that commanded other revolted Provinces, to return to obedience and acknowledge their ſubjection to the Empire. In the mean time Simeon the Bulgarian, elevated by his many victories and gaping after the Empire it ſelf, ſends to Phatlumus the Prince of the Saracens in Africk, propounding Terms of an Alliance with him, and for ſharing the Booty of the Conquered Romans. But the Meſſengers in their return with others from Phatlumus, fell into the hands of ſome Calabrians, who ſent them to Romanus. He apprehending well the danger that hung over his Head, committed the Bulgarians to Cuſtody, but the Saracens he nobly treated, and ſent them well preſented loaden with gifts to their Prince, with this meſſage, that Thus the Roman Emperours were wont to requite their Enemies.

30. This was ſo kindly taken by Phatlumus, that he remitted half of the Tribute, and the reſt was paid till this promotion of Nicephorus. When the Governours proved good, all things went well, and the Saracens were well enough content; but when otherwiſe, the Subjects would be Tumultuous, and then happened ruptures. Under Porphyrogenitus, one Crenites who commanded in Calabria, when the Saracens of Sicily and Africk had War made upon them by thoſe of Cirene, and thereupon were much ſtraitned for proviſions, ſold them corn at very dear rates, which he had forced the Subjects to let him have at Robin Hood's penyworths, and thereby much inriched himſelf, the Saracens being forc'd to condeſcend to what price he pleaſed to ſet. For this he was put out of command by Conſtantine, his Money was taken from him, and he lived afterward and died in diſgrace. During the ſame War, the Romans received and protected the Fugitives of the Carthaginians, who all this while durſt neither complain of that, nor make any demands of the Tribute, leſt they ſhould give them diſtaſte from whence they received their ſuſtenance how dearly ſoever they paid for it. But when the War was over, they both demanded, the one and the other, and when they received a denial ſet out a Fleet and Invaded Calabria. Now Conſtantine reſolved to take another courſe than Romanus had done, not by palliating the matter but by force of Arms, to clear the reckoning, and for that purpoſe raiſed a ſtrong Army which he committed to the Conduct of Malaconus, a Patritian, with orders to joyn himſelf with Paſchalius Governour of Calabria, and with him joyntly to manage the War, and one Maeroroannes, he appointed to command the Fleet. Theſe Men coming into the Province made it their buſineſs to Pill and Haraſs the People, no otherwiſe than if it had been an Enemies Countrey, which being known to Abulchares, Ameras of the Saracens (for Phatlumus e'er this was dead) he told his Men there was no fear to be had of ſuch Enemies, that handled their own Friends in ſo rough a manner: taking his Advantage, he fell upon them, gave them a notable defeat, and miſſed narrowly of taking the Commanders themſelves. After this Conſtantine ſent one John Pilate his Secretary to treat with them, who were no whit difficult to conclude a Truce for a certain time. But this time expir'd they again paſſed the Sea, and infeſted Calabria, as formerly, to divert them from which he ſent another Fleet and Army, the one commanded by Crambeas and Moroleon, the other by Romanus Argyrus a Patritian. They had ſcarcely put to Sea for Sicily, when the Saracens having News of vaſt Preparations (as fame is wont to make all greater than they are) in a Panick fear quitted their Camp and haſted away from Rhegium into Sicily, but coming near to Panormus, were by an horrid tempeſt all caſt away, upon this a Peace was again concluded and continued till the time of Nicephorus whereof we ſpake.

Πανικοῦ δείματι.

31. He accounting it a great diſgrace to pay them any Tribute ſent away a conſiderable Fleet, and as ſtrong an Army under command of Manuel a Patritian, the baſe Son of his Uncle Leo, who having the Title of Domeſtick of the Schools was deprived of his ſight by the Emperour Romanus. This Manuel was young and fitter to make a Souldier than a General, was very vitious and ſo conceited that he would not hearken to good advice, and ſo caſt both himſelf and his Army away, being ſhut up in the Craggy and unpaſſable parts of Sicily: and beſides this Nicetas the Eunuch a Patritian and Drungarius of the Fleet was taken and carried away Priſoner into Africk. Much about the ſame time John Tzimiſces being created Domeſtick of the Schools of the Eaſt, was ſent into Cilicia, where he defeated a great number of Agarens got together. About five Thouſand of them quitted their Horſes and betaking themſelves to a Craggy hill near at hand by the

But his Army is defeated by the unskilfulneſs of his Commanders.

the Advantage of the place ſtoutly defended themſelves. Tzimiſces ſeeing their reſolution, reſolved to attack them in their own way, and diſmounting, led his Foot on himſelf, and fell upon them, of whom not a man turned his Back, but fighting out to the laſt were all ſlain, and from their Bodies iſſued ſuch Streams of Bloud into the Plain, that the Hill got the Name of the Bloudy Hill upon this occaſion. The year following, and the ſecond of his Reign, in the Month of July, Nicephorus himſelf taking his Wife and Children along with him led a ſtrong Army, conſiſting partly of his own Subjects, and partly of the Aſſociates, Iberians, and Armenians, into Cilicia. Having left Theophano behind in a Caſtle called Drizium, he entred the Countrey, and took three Cities, Anabarza, Roſſus and Adana, beſides ſeveral Caſtles; but not daring to venture upon Tarſus or Mopſueſtia, the Seaſon of the Year being almoſt ſpent, he left a ſtrong Guard and went into Cappadocia to Winter. In Spring he returned and dividing his Forces into two parts, the one he committed to Leo, with orders to fall upon Tarſus, and he himſelf led the other againſt Mopſueſtia, which attacking with much violence he was therein aſſiſted by the Famine which raged among the Inhabitants, ſo that the River Sarus dividing the Town into two parts, of one of them he got poſſeſſion, though fired by the Saracens, and not long after the other with all that had made reſiſtence, fell into his hands. Thoſe of Tarſus, affrighted with this ſucceſs, ſent to him and ſurrendred their City, to the aſſiſtence of which, after three days, a Fleet came from Ægypt, but finding no incouragement to land, it was moſt of it loſt in its return, either by Tempeſts or taken by Roman Ships. Thus proſperous was Nicephorus whereſoever he bore his Arms. Beſides this, he recovered Cyprus to the Dominion of the Empire from the Saracens. He invaded Syria, made Tripolis, a City of Phœnicia, and Damaſcus Tributaries, and having Conquered all the reſt, both ſituate near the Mountain Libanus and upon the Sea, he removed to Antioch, which the Inhabitants ſtoutly defending, his Proviſions failing, and the place being very moiſt, he raiſed his Siege and returned to Conſtantinople. This we muſt ſay of him that he was the moſt victorious Warriour that of long time had worn the Purple, and inlarged the Dominions of the Empire far and wide.

He leads an Army into Cilicia.

Inlarging the Dominions of the Empire very much.

He is hated at home by his Subjects upon ſeveral accounts.

32. But he was not ſo much admired and feared abroad as hated by his Subjects at home, who rejoyced not in Conqueſts acquired by great expence of their bloud, and eſpecially their Treaſure, delighting not at all in ſuch grinning honour. The Story went that he could eaſily have taken Antioch, but forbore upon a Saying there was, That the Emperour that ſhould conquer that City ſhould not live very long after, and upon this account he gave charge to Peter and Burtzas whom he left in the Countrey to ſecure what he had already got, to make no Attempts upon it. But Burtzas lying near to the City could not forbear, but having corrupted one of the Townſmen to a Diſcovery, ſeized upon two Turrets of the Wall, and then ſending for Peter eaſily overpowered the Garriſon, and took the City, for which the Emperour inſtead of other reward, diſgraced him and turn'd him out of his Place. This procured him much ill will, but here lay not the hundred part of the burthen. At his very firſt Promotion when his Souldiers were very Inſolent and committed many outrageous Acts, he would give no ear to any complaint; nay, though they rifled the Houſes of Senatours and ſuch as had aſſiſted him in obtaining what he had, alledging, that in ſuch a Multitude it could not be but that ſome would carry themſelves uncivily. Then under pretence of his Wars he raiſed Taxes, and laid unſufferable burthens upon the People, not abſtaining from Rapine and violence. Part of what was uſually given to Senatours he ſtopped in the Treaſury, as alſo ſuch Penſions as by his Predeceſſours had been granted to Monaſteries, Churches, and other Pious uſes: And by a Law he forbade any more Lands to be given to the Church, a Crime more heinous than all others in the opinion of the Eccleſiaſticks. They farther laid to his Charge, that taking advantage of a difference betwixt the chief * Paſtor (ſo Zonaras calls the Patriarch) and the chief Prieſts concerning Juriſdiction (he denying that they could approve or Elect without him) he challenged to himſelf all the right of nominating Biſhops, by an Edict commanding that none ſhould be admitted to any Church without his leave. Accordingly when any Biſhop died he ſent an Officer ſparingly to defray Charges, and the reſt of the Revenue he took to himſelf. Nay, during his Government all Countries ſwarmed with Collectours and Informers, who ſqueezed, even out of the pooreſt of the People, all that ever they had; ſuch as had been in publick Service before, were raiſed to more chargeable Employment. As if formerly in the Navy, now they were conſtrained to ſerve on Land, and if before as Foot, now as Horſemen at their own Charge.

* Εἶτα τῶν τότε ἀρχιερέων καὶ τοῦ ἀρχιποίμενος πολυεύκτου διαφερομένων περὶ τῶν Ψήφων. Zonaras in Nicephoro Phocâ.

33. War was his onely Element, neither could he think or ſay any thing but what had relation to it. Therein he placed the Meaſures of good and evil, inſomuch, that he laboured to introduce a Law which ſhould give to them that loſt their Lives in Fight, equal Honours and Veneration with the Martyrs, and but for the vigorous oppoſition of the Patriarch and Biſhops he had publiſhed the Edict, they contending, that on the other hand the Canon of Baſil the Great did bar ſuch of the Communion as had killed, though but an Enemy in Battel, for three years. But what did more provoke the Multitude he debaſed the Coin, cauſing ſome of leſs intrinſick value to be made, which done, all Payments to himſelf he exacted in that of the greater, and cauſed all Iſſues out of the Treaſury to be made of the leſſer ſort. And whereas all Money ſtamped with the Images of Emperours, if of the ſame weight and goodneſs went at the ſame Rates, he inhanced the value of his own Coins above thoſe of his Predeceſſours. This cauſed extraordinary difficulty and damage in Commerce, which added to the dearneſs of all Commodities, made very great diſturbance. But that which inraged moſt, was the fortifying of the Court or Palace, becauſe it was told him, that in it he ſhould die. He pulled down very fair Houſes of private Perſons adjoyning to it, and cloſe to it erected a Cittadell, wherein were built Granaries, Store-houſes, Ovens, and Bakehouſes, filled with all ſorts of Proviſions. To theſe publick Grievances there were other particular Accidents, which being ill taken, however deſigned, farther increaſed the general hate againſt him. A great Tumult happening betwixt the Seamen and Armenians, wherein many were killed, and Siſinnius the Prefect of the City hardly eſcaped, he to be revenged on the Citizens, whom he concluded to have been Authours of the diſorder, was thought to have drawn them into a Snare in this manner. He appointed ſome Exerciſes on Horſeback, and either to let the People ſee the manner of fighting or to terrifie them, cauſed the Riders to draw their Swords and skirmiſh together, which caſt the Multitude into ſuch a fright, that all ran headlong down from the Theatre, over the Precipices and Ditches, and treading one upon another many were preſſed to Death, many more hurt, and greater had been the miſchief but that they obſerved him to ſit on his ſeat not at all concerned, which made them change their Opinion of him, and to ſtop their Flight. But the Relations of ſuch as were killed, not long after, as he returned into the City, reviled him, and caſt at him Dirt and Stones, and had not ſome of the more ſober ſort become his Guard, he had eaſily miſcarried.

34. In the fourth year of his Reign, the tenth Indiction, in June going to viſit the Cities of Thrace, when he came to Great Suda, he wrote to Peter Prince of Bulgaria, not to ſuffer the Turks, as they called them, to paſs the River Iſter. This he objected for ſeveral Reaſons that he could not doe, but eſpecially he inſiſted on this, that when that People had invaded his Dominions, then the Emperour had refuſed to give him any aſſiſtence: That therefore he was forced by neceſſity to make a Peace with them, which his Intereſt would not permit him now to break. To be revenged of him, for this repulſe he procured Sphendoſthlabus King of the Ruſſians the following year to invade Bulgaria, where committing all ſorts of Hoſtility, they deſtroyed many Towns, and returned with much Booty, acting the ſame part over again the next year after. In the mean time happened a terrible Earthquake in Paphlagonia, and elſewhere. And in May following the Corn was ſo blaſted by ſcorching Winds, that a great Famine followed, at which Nicephorus took advantage to fill his own Coffers, and made a Jeſt of the Calamity of his People, boaſting that he had ſold his Wheat at a double Rate. Both he and his Brother Rejoiced in the Miſeries of the Poor, or their Actions were ſuch, as they could not afford a better Interpretation, and drew ſome Expreſſions from the Oppreſſed, which taxed him with miſ-government to his Face. "On a time as he was Muſtering his "Souldiers, an ancient man with a gray head deſired to be liſted amongſt them, of "whom when he demanded why he that was now old and feeble, would deſire to "go to the Wars, he told him that he found he was much ſtronger than when he "was young; for now, ſince he was Emperour, he could carry Corn of that "value on his own Back, with which then he was wont to load two Aſſes. So much was he hated abroad, and at home, and in his own Houſe he was as little beloved. Theophano his Wife did now loath him, either becauſe he was no good Womans man, or ſhe was jealous that he deſigned to geld her Sons, and leave the Empire to his Brother. Glycas writes expreſly that it was becauſe he lived chaſtly, ly, abſtained from her Bed, and was wont to ſleep on the ground, being much delighted in taking his reſt in that manner. Following her intemperate humour ſhe had caſt her affections upon Zimiſces, whom as a ſuſpected Perſon, the Emperour had confined to his own Houſe.

He ingages the Ruſſians to invade Bulgaria.

In time of Famine he raiſes the price of Corn, which adds to his hatred and oppreſſion.

35. She procured him to be diſcharged of his Confinement, and when Nicephorus refuſed to let him come preſently to Conſtantinople, ſhe not onely got him ſecretly conveyed thither, but by Night to be drawn up into the Palace in a Basket, with five of his Friends, viz. Michael, Burtzas, the Patritian, whom Nicephorus had diſobliged, Leo Abalantius, an Officer in the Army, and one Atzypotheodorus (ſo named from the ſwarthineſs of his Complexion) more intimate with him than all others. Being got in, they went directly to ſeek the Emperour, and not finding him in his Chamber in the Bed wherein he ordinarily ſlept, they were going down the way they came, concluding that their Deſign was diſcovered. But by a Fellow that belonged to the Womens Apartment, they were brought where he lay aſleep on the ground in a Bears ſkin, as his Cuſtome was, which Skin he much valued becauſe given him by his Uncle Michael a Monk. Zimiſces firſt gave him a kick with his Foot and awakened him, then as he leaned on his Elbow indeavouring to riſe, Leo Abalantius with his drawn Sword mortally wounded him in the Head, the Skull being pierced. Then they dragged him before Zimiſces, who had placed himſelf in the Emperour's Seat, and uſed him with all ſorts of Indignities, while he onely ſaid, Lord have mercy upon me, and the Mother of God help me. By this time the Alarm was given to thoſe of the Guard that then watched, and they were haſting to his Relief, which the Conſpiratours perceiving, diſpatched him, and cutting off his Head ſhewed it to them out of the Window, which ſight quieted them; the Tragedy being already over and not to be prevented. Some reported that ten days before his death, by a Writing left in his Chamber, warning was given him to beware of Zimiſces: Nay, that by a certain Clerk that very Night the Conſpiracy was revealed the ſame way. But ſome reported, that he imagining the Paper to contain onely ſome Petition, never open'd it; others ſaid he did open and reade it, but made no reckoning of it, his Fate ſo vehemently preſſing upon him: And there wanted not who affirmed, that he both took notice of the thing, and committed the Inquiry thereof, and the Defence of his own Perſon to the Protoveſtiarius, and alſo wrote to his Brother Leo, then at his own Houſe, to come to him ſufficiently armed and accompanied with all ſpeed; but he being buſie at Cheſs, with which Game he was wonderfully delighted, neglected to open the Letter till it was too late, which perceiving, with his Son Nicephorus he took Sanctuary in the Great Church. However to ſuch an end came this Emperour, who by his Example abundantly ſhewed the truth of that old Saying, That Magiſtracy, eſpecially in Sovereign Power, diſcovers the Diſpoſition of a man. Formerly he had taxed that Vice in his own Father, to which he himſelf, when he had moſt ample opportunity of getting Wealth, was inſlaved. In how ſad and uncertain a condition thoſe that wore the Diadem in thoſe days perpetually were, and how much of that liberty which the old Roman Legions took of diſpoſing of the Empire according to their own Luſt and Ambition, was ſtill uſurped, the Reader from more than this one Inſtance cannot but take notice. Nicephorus lived fifty ſeven years, and thereof Reigned ſix, with as many Months.

A Conſpiracy againſt him which takes effect to his Deſtruction.

Zimiſces ſeizes on the Empire, making Baſilius and Conſtantine his Collegues.

969.

36. The Murther committed, John Zimiſces ſeized on the Empire in the twelfth Indiction, A. D. DCCCCLXIX. Baſilius and Conſtantine, the Sons of Romanus, he made his Collegues, he being in the ſeventh and this in the fifth year of his Age, as Cedrenus writes, which could not be, conſidering how long it was ſince the death of their Father; ſo that herein greater credit is to be given to Panvinius, who reckons Baſilius to have been fourteen, and Conſtantine about twelve, at this Alteration. For his prime Miniſter he made choice of Baſilius of the Bedchamber, to whom Nicephorus, having been advanced in a great meaſure by his indeavours, had given a new Title of Preſident, being a man of great experience, which he gained under Romanus his Father, and his Brother-in-Law Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus, by his Wars againſt the Saracens, and other Negotiations of greateſt Concernment. He as ſoon as intruſted, to diſcharge his Duty, firſt removed all ſuch as he knew to have been addicted to Nicephorus, from all Commands both Military and Civil, and ſubſtituted others in their Rooms, whom he knew to be faithfull to him in preſent power. Such as Nicephorus had baniſhed, he recalled, and eſpecially the Eccleſiaſticks, whom for oppoſing him in Matters relating to the Church, he had driven from their places. Theſe things premiſed for the eſtabliſhing of his Power, Zimiſces thought he might take the Enſigns of the Dignity, and to the great Church he went to receive the Diadem from the hands of the Patriarch. But here he was ſtopped at the Door, Polyeuctus affirming that it was not lawfull for him to enter that Place, whoſe hands ſtill ſmoaked with the Bloud they had ſo lately ſhed, for which he muſt make ſatisfaction before he could be admitted. He received the Reprehenſion in good part, promiſing to perform all things that could be reaſonably injoyned him; but alledged he had laid no violent hands on the late Emperour, who was ſlain by Abalantius and Atzypotheodrus by Command of the Empreſs. The Patriarch then required that ſhe ſhould be baniſhed from Court into ſome Iſland, as alſo the Murtherers of Nicephorus, and that the Edict made by him concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs ſhould be reſcinded. The Murtherers by Zimiſces his command were preſently removed, and Theophano Baniſhed into Proconneſus, whence afterward eſcaping and betaking her ſelf to the great Church, ſhe was thruſt out by Baſilius, and carried into the Province of Armenia, and there cloſe ſhut up in a Monaſtery, after many bitter and reproachfull Speeches uttered againſt the preſent Emperour and againſt Baſilius, to whom ſhe had given a Cuff on the Ear, and loaded him with the Names of Scythian and Barbarian. Her Mother alſo was removed from the City, and the Edict of Nicephorus againſt the Privileges of Church-men openly produced and torn in pieces.

Baniſhes Theophano the Empreſs.

Zimiſces Crowned at Conſtantinople

37. Theſe things performed, and the Emperour having promiſed for expiation of his Crime, to give all the Eſtate he had been Maſter of when a Private Man to the uſe of the Poor, he was admitted by Polyeuctus into the Church, and on Chriſtmas day was there Crowned by his hands. While there was this changing and ſhifting at Court, Affairs of the Empire both in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Parts, were but in a ticklish condition. For the Cities taken from the Saracens in Cilicia, Phœnicia and Cœloſyria, were inclining to revolt. And Nicephorus his procuring of the Ruſſians to invade Bulgaria, as it happened, had brought the Territories of the Romans into much greater danger. Zimiſces thought he ſhould provide in ſome meaſure for the ſecurity of the Eaſt, by preferring to the Biſhoprick of Antioch upon the River Orontes, or that near Daphne, one Theodorus a Monk, a man of very good Deſert, who always told him that he ſhould come to be Emperour, but always adviſed him not to be haſty in his Attempts that way. He had alſo perſwaded him that as ſoon as he ſhould get the opportunity by his preferment to remove the Manichees out of the Eaſt, which he performed afterward, cauſing them to be tranſported to Philippopolis. All this while the Saracens intermitted no thoughts nor means for recovery of their Cities, eſpecially of Antioch, in which their Reputation was moſt concerned. By the Agitation of thoſe moſt principally concerned, a ſtrict League and Alliance was entred into, not onely by that People in what parts ſoever they lived, but by all other Nations, profeſſing their Religion, particularly, as Cedrenus reckons them, the Ægyptians, Perſians, Elamites, both the ſorts of Arabians, (inhabiting the Deſart and Happy Arabia) and Sabæans, vaſt Forces they gathered together, the Command of which was given to thoſe of Carthage, as the moſt experienc'd in War both by Sea and Land, who transferred it upon Zochares a man very fit for the place of General. They laid Siege to that Antioch near to Daphne, as our Authours call it, to diſtinguiſh it from all others of that Name, and omitted nothing proper to take it, but the ſtrength of the place and the Courage of the Beſieged held them to it till ſuch time as the Emperour had ſent orders to the Governour of Meſopotamia, to raiſe what power he could and relieve them, and diſpatched away Nicholas an Eunuch moſt intimate with him to be General of the Expedition. He muſtering all the Forces he could poſſibly get together, though not once to be named with their Multitudes, ſet upon them, gave them Battel, raiſed the Siege, forced them to diſperſe, and betake themſelves to their own Countries, ſuch of them as eſcaped the Slaughter; and confirmed the Cities of theſe Quarters in their Obedience.

The Saracens, &c. in the Eaſt indeavour to revolt.

Syriæ Metropolis Antiochia ἐπὶ Δάφνῃ vulgo vocata. Daphne erat ſuburbium ob arbores umbriferas & aquarum copias amœniſſimum. Quod enim in Italia Baiæ, ad Alexandriam Canopus, id erat in Syria Suburbium, Antiochiæ Daphne.

But are reduced to obedience.

38. Thus matters in the Eaſt very well ſucceeded; but in Bulgaria, which the Roſſi had overrun, things went not according to expectation; for this People having made themſelves Maſters of the Countrey, and got into their hands Boriſes and Romanus the two Sons of Peter, finding it much more pleaſant and fertile than their own, reſolved to fix in it, and brake the Covenants they had made with Nicephorus. In this their Reſolution they were confirmed by one Calocyrus, who ingaged that if by their means he could come to be Emperour of the Romans, he would freely quit to them Bulgaria, make a perpetual League with them, and double double the Tribute or Penſion, which had been promiſed them. Puffed up with theſe his Offers, but eſpecially with preſent poſſeſſion, they challenged Bulgaria as their own acquired by War, and the Ambaſſadours of the Emperour, who offered to confirm and make good whatever Nicephorus had granted, they rejected with ſcornfull Language and Deportment. Zimiſces then finding himſelf obliged by force of Arms to obtain what by good words he could not compaſs, ſent Orders for all his Forces to march Weſtward, over which he made General, one Bardas ſirnamed Sclerus or Hard his Wives Brother, reſolving in the Spring in Perſon, to be at the Head of the Army. The Ruſſians hearing of theſe preparations, to prevent him, raiſed to themſelves as many of the lately conquered Bulgarians as they thought convenient, and drawing into their Aſſiſtence the Patzinacæ, and thoſe our Writers call Turks, inhabiting the Weſtern Parts of Pannonia (the Hunnes or Hungarians) made up an Army of three Hundred and eight thouſand Men, with which paſſing Æmus, they laid waſte all Thrace, and ſate down before the Walls of Adrianople. Bardas could ſcarcely muſter above twelve thouſand Men, and therefore ſo very much over-matched in Numbers, reſolved to try if he could be ſuperiour in skill and ſtrategeme. He contained himſelf within the Walls of that City, and however challenged and provoked by the Enemy would not fight, making a ſhew of great fear and diffidence. This made them ſecure, ſo as they kept no order, obſerved no rules, were negligent in their watches, as not doubting but with convenience enough to ſeize upon the Prey.

He orders his Forces to march Weſtward.

Who ingageing with the Barbarians rout them.

39. He watcht his opportunities, and when he ſaw his time ſent out John Alacaſenſis a Patritian, with a Party to skirmiſh with the Enemy, and by little and little retreating to bring them into an Ambuſh he had conveniently placed for them. The Barbarians were divided into three Bodies, whereof the Ruſſians and Bulgarians compoſed one, the other two conſiſted ſingly of the ſeveral Nations of Patzinacæ and Turks. It happened, that John light upon the Patzinacæ, with whom skirmiſhing and gently retiring till he came to the Place of the Ambuſh, he then fled as faſt as his Horſe could carry him, and they breaking all Order, and purſuing fell into the Army of Bardas, which compaſſing them in, cut them all off, or very few eſcaped. This incouraged him to complete his Victory by falling upon the reſt, who though diſcouraged by what had happened to their Friends, yet made ſtout reſiſtence, and the ſucceſs continued doubtfull a long time, till a Scythian taller and bolder than the reſt ſingled out Bardas, as he rode up and down incouraging his Men. He gave him a blow on the Head, but his Helmet was of ſuch tried Metal, that his Sword could not enter, though that of Bardas was ſo much better temper'd, that with one ſtroke he both clave his Head-piece and Head in ſunder. And Conſtantine a Patritian, the Brother of Bardas, coming in to his Relief had as good Succeſs. For they write, that grapling with another Scythian who aſſiſted his Countreyman, and fetching a ſtroke at his Head as he declined the blow, he cut off the Head of his Horſe, and then cut the Throat of the Maſter as he lay grovling on the Ground. Theſe Atchievements of the Roman General, and his Brother ſo diſcouraged the Barbarians, that they would no more abide it, but ſhifted for themſelves aſwell as they could, but had not Night prevented farther purſuit, none had eſcaped, moſt being killed, and the reſt in a manner all taken Priſoners, of whom there were very few to be ſeen, that were not wounded. Yet if we may believe ſome Writers, of the Romans were killed but five and twenty Men. But none eſcaped without having received the marks of their Valour upon their Skins.

Bardas Phocas uſurps ſeizing on Cæſarea.

40. Scarcely was this Scythian War brought to an end, when one Inteſtine which threatned more danger if not to the Empire, yet to the Emperour, recalled Bardas to Conſtantinople. Bardas Phocas who had been baniſhed into Amaſia had fled from thence, and having held ſecret Intelligence with his Kindred and Acquaintance, was up in Arms, having ſeized on Cæſarea the City of Cappadocia, where he had got together conſiderable Forces, and ſeveral Eminent men being come to him had aſſumed the Imperial Title and Ornaments. Leo Curopalates his Father had drawn in many, ſome by Gifts, and others by large Promiſes, by the means of the Biſhop of Abydus eſpecially, and had purpoſed with his Son Nicephorus, to ſteal out of the Iſland Lesbus, whither he had been confined, into Thrace. But the Biſhop being apprehended and examined revealed all the Plot, and both the Father and Son were condemned to death. This Sentence of the Judges, was by the Emperour mitigated to the looſing of their Eyes. Yet was he ſo farther mercifull, as it's ſaid, he gave order to the Executioners to make ſhew onely of blinding them, and to ſpare their ſight, and give out that it was not by his Command, but proceeded merely from their pity towards them. In the mean time Bardas the General was come into Aſia, as far as Dorylaus, having given him in charge from Zimiſces to ſhed no more bloud than was neceſſary. By large Offers therefore he firſt endeavoured to draw Phocas and his Complices from what they had undertaken. But finding them ſo confident, that with ſcorn and heat they rejected his Propoſals, he marched to Cæſarea, where he was ſcarcely arrived, when theſe Promoters and Followers of the New-made Emperour, upon farther conſideration, and weighing of what had been offered, with what their utmoſt hopes might amount to, found their beſt Game would be to undoe what they had done,and accordingly one Diogenes Adraleſtus and Ampelas,with Theodorus and Nicephorus the Sons of Theodulus, who had been the Authours of the Revolt firſt came over, whom all the reſt followed, ſo that Phocas was left attended onely by his own Servants.

Dorylaus, quæ etiam Dorylæus, Magnæ Phrygiæ Civitas, juxta quam oritur Hermus amnis.

But is deſerted by thoſe that ſet him up.

41. Much diſcontented at the Falſeneſs of thoſe, wo had perſwaded him to theſe ambitious Courſes, and, as they ſay, farther diſcouraged by a Dream, he fled toward a Caſtle called Tyropæum. The General ſent a Party if poſſible to overtake him, and it reached him as he came to the Foot of the Hill, on which the Caſtle ſtood. There one Conſtantinus Charon, bolder and more forward than any of the reſt came ſooneſt up with him, and giving him other contumelious Language called him Coward, bidding him ſtay if he durſt, and receive the Reward of his Treaſons from his Hands. Phocas perceiving who it was, ſtopped his Horſe, and turning towards him, put him in mind how idle a thing it was without conſideration of the Inſtability of Humane Affairs, to inſult over a man that was merely oppreſſed by the Inconſtancy of Fortune, and that he ought rather to commiſerate the Condition of one, whoſe Father was Curopalates, Grandfather Cæſar, and Uncle an Emperour himſelf. Charon to this returned more outrageous words, calling him Villain, and telling him that he ſhould ſooth up Boys with ſuch idle Stories, and not think therewith to delude him; and very fiercely made up to cloſe him. But Phocas being aware of him up with a Club,or Poll-axe, which hung concealed, and his Helmet not being ſtrong enough to keep off the blow knocked him on the Head, whom thus having diſpatcht, he put Spurs to his Horſe again, and recovered the Caſtle, the Purſuers when they came where Charon lay dead, were ſo aſtoniſhed at the ſight, that they followed him no farther. But not long it was e'er Bardas came up, and by Meſſages urged him to yield, profeſſing his kindneſs to him as an Allie (for to Sophia the Siſter of Phocas, was married his Brother Conſtantine) and undertook to procure his Pardon from the Emperour. Phocas then receiving from him an Oath, that he ſhould not be rigorouſly proceeded againſt, yielded himſelf. And the Emperour made good what Bardas had ingaged, being ſatisfied with his entring into Orders, and Confinement to the Iſland Chius. This danger thus happily over, Bardas received Command to return into the Weſt. To which our Writers of the Byzantine Hiſtory mean Conſtantinople; and thoſe Parts of Europe ſtill ſubject to it, as by the Eaſt the Provinces of Aſia.

Flying to the Caſtle Tyropæum, capitulates.

Is ſhaven and confined to the Iſland Chius.

Zimiſces marries Theodora Siſter to his Collegue.

Undertakes an expedition into Bulgaria.

42. Theſe things happened at the beginning of the Reign of Zimiſces, who much about the ſame time his former Wife being lately dead, married Theodora the Siſter of Romanus the Third, and Daughter of Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus, as our Greek Hiſtorians write, though Panvinius whomſoever he follows, makes her the Daughter of Romanus by Theophano, and the Siſter of Baſilius and Conſtantine, the Collegues of the preſent Emperour. In the ſecond year of his Reign, reſolving in Perſon to make War againſt the Roſſians, he uſed all endeavours poſſible to make his Deſigns effectual. By his bounty he made his Souldiers chearfull and courageous. He ſet over them prudent and valiant Officers, took care that no Ammunition or Proviſions ſhould be wanting; and not onely ſet all things in good order at Land, but provided as well for the Sea, ſetting forth a very conſiderable Fleet under the Command of Leo, the Drungarius thereof at preſent, but afterward preferred to be Protoveſtarius. Having finiſhed his Devotions for good Succeſs, and ſetled all matters at home, in the beginning of Spring he ſet forward, and in his Journey at Rædeſtus met with two Perſons, who under ſhew of an Embaſſie were ſent from the Enemy to ſpy how matters ſtood with him, making great complaints of great Injuries offered to the Nation of the Scythians. He knowing well enough on what errand they were ſent, cauſed them to take a view of all his Forces, and therewith bid them be gone, and tell their Maſters with how great and well diſciplin'd an Army he was coming againſt them. With five thouſand Foot, and four thouſand Horſe fit for expedition, he marched away ordering dering the reſt to follow under Conduct of Baſilius the Preſident, and paſſing over Hæmus, laid ſiege to Perſthlaba the principal City of Bulgaria. This ſtruck a great terrour into the People, and Calocyrus being in the Town without any oppoſition made, ſecretly withdrew himſelf into the Camp of the Roſſians, who upon ſight of him, and hearing the Emperour himſelf was in the Field, were not a little diſmaid. But Sphendoſthlabus their General comforted them, aſwell as he could by words fit for the preſent exigence, and cauſed them to remove nearer the City, where they incamped. A Party of Eight thouſand, exerciſing themſelves near the City-Walls Zimiſces fell upon and did great Execution, whom others iſſuing out to ſuccour in confuſion ran the ſame Fortune, the ways being intercepted at their Retreat, ſo that multitudes were ſlain and as many taken, amongſt whom Sphagellus, the next in Authority to their General. Animated with this Succeſs the Romans fell upon the City, and were forced off more by the Darkneſs of Night, than the Valour of the Defendants.

Laying ſiege to Perſthlaba.

Which he takes by ſtorm with Boriſes their King.

43. Early in the Morning appeared Baſilius, with the reſt of the Army to the great Joy of the Emperour, and ſhewed himſelf upon an Hill to ſtrike greater Terrour into thoſe that kept the Town. Now did Zimiſces endeavour to perſwade them to ſave themſelves by yielding, to which finding them averſe, he gave order for the Forces jointly to begirt and attacque the Place. So violent an Onſet the Romans made, by their ſhowres of Arrows driving the Defendants from the Walls, and then ſcaling them with their Ladders, incouraged by one of their Fellows who firſt mounted, and was more pertinacious than the reſt, that a ſufficient Number got in and opened the Gates, and then the Army entring filled all Places with ſlaughters. The Women and Children were made Priſoners, and Boriſes King of the Bulgarians was taken with his Wife and Children, who in his Royal Robes was brought to the Emperour. He uſed him very courteouſly, gave him the Title of King, and ſet at liberty all the Bulgarians, profeſſing himſelf their Friend, and an Enemy onely of the Roſſi. But all this while, when he thought his work was done as to Perſthlaba, Eight thouſand of the ſtouteſt Scythians had ſeized upon the Caſtle, and were firſt diſcovered by the Miſchief they did, making ſeveral Sallies and Slaughter of many they ſurprized. He cauſed his men to attacque the Place, but they were very faint in the Service, not ſo much for the Valour of the Defendants, as the natural ſtrength of its Situation, which he perceiving armed himſelf, and with Sword in his Hand led them on, which ſight wrought ſo much ſhame upon them, that ſtriving who ſhould put himſelf forwardeſt betwixt his Prince and Danger, they broke through all oppoſition by Fire and Sword, and Maſter'd the hold; thoſe that reſiſted, being either killed or driven headlong down the Rocks and Precipices, or intercepted by the Fire and burnt. Thus was this City fully conquered, in the ſpace but of two Days. The Emperour took order for repairing of it, and called it after his own Name Joannopolis. He left a ſtrong Garriſon in it, and furniſhed it with all ſorts of Proviſions. Having therein attended the Devotions of Eaſter-Day, the Day following he departed for Doroſtolus, which alſo had the Name of Diſtra.

Changing the Name to Joannopolis.

44. All this while Sphendoſthlabus, was incamped in expectation of the coming of the Romans, till ſurpriz'd with the News of the taking of the City. He concealed his grief and exhorted his Men to ſhew themſelves the more courageous, the more oppoſition they met with, and no longer to expect but to march and find out the Enemy. The Emperour in the mean time ranged about, and took and waſted many Towns and Caſtles, the plunder whereof he gave to the Souldiers for their Incouragement. But having notice of the approach of ſome Roſſians, he ordered one Theodorus of Miſtheia, with a ſelect Party of three hundred to go before to view them, and give him an account of their Condition, and if occaſion were to skirmiſh with them till he ſhould come up to the main Body. It proved onely a Party of ſome ſeven thouſand men, ſent out as it ſeems upon the ſame errand with which yet he ingaged, and they imagining becauſe of his ſmall Number ſome Strategeme to be in the caſe, fled amain to the adjoining Woods and Mountains, and ſo took their way for Diſtra, not far from which, all but ſuch as fell in the ingagement and perſuit, joyned themſelves with Sphendoſthlabus, and his Army. There it was now reſolved, that twelve Miles from that Town they ſhould incamp, and ſtay for the coming of the Emperour; being in all three Hundred and thirty thouſand Men, and thoſe unanimous, for three Hundred Bulgarians, whom they had ſuſpected, they had put to death. The Romans animated to a great height by their Victories were preſently with them, and then both Armies prepared for a Battel, at the beginning whereof, though the late Victours

Then meeting the Army of the Roſſians, in Battel defeats them.

Flying to Doroſtolus.

did great Execution, yet the Numbers of their Enemies were equivalent to their Alacrity, and thereby incouraged, they made ſuch reſiſtences, that the ſucceſs was very doubtfull. Twelve times Fortune ſeemed to change her Face the diſtreſſed ſide ſtill reinforcing it ſelf, till at length Night now coming on, the left Wing of the Roſſians gave more ground, which as they endeavoured to recruit the Emperour in perſon led on a Reſerve,and with Spear in Hand ſo beſtirred himſelf, that his Example put new life into all his Souldiers, whereby he carried the day. The Roſſians fled to Doroſtolus, very much leſſened in their Numbers, and thither followed the Emperour after he had done his Devoirs to St. George, on whoſe Day this Victory was obtained.

Which upon the arrival of his Fleet Zimiſces begirts.

After ſeveral ſkirmiſhes.

45. He ſate down before the Town, but would make no attempt upon it, till his Fleet arrived, becauſe the Defendants might eaſily eſcape by the River. In the mean time Sphendoſthlabus commits to ſafe Cuſtody in Fetters no fewer than twenty thouſand Bulgarians, leſt they ſhould revolt or make any diſturbance in the Garriſon, and prepared for a Siege. The Fleet being arrived the Emperour buckled himſelf to his buſineſs, and the Enemy making ſeveral Sallies, he ſtill repelled with good Succeſs. Now the Roſſians horſed ſeveral Companies contrary to their former Cuſtome, and in an Evening when the Roman Soldiers were diſperſed, at their Supper, made a very briſk Sally out of two ſeveral Gates, the one toward the Eaſt, where Peter the chief Commander of the Camp lay with the Thracians and Macedonians, and the other to the Weſt, which Poſt was aſſigned to Bardas Sclerus, with the Eaſtern Forces. A very ſharp Conflict there was, and the Succeſs for ſome time inclined to neither ſide, but the Romans had the better at laſt, and killing many, forced the reſt back into the City without ſo much as one of their own Men either killed or hurt as our Authours affirm; onely three Horſes periſhed in the Ingagement. The Barbarians much diſcouraged at this repulſe, with great Howlings and hideous Cries, bewailed the Death of their Fellows lately ſlain, and for the greater ſecurity of the place, ſent for all their Countreymen that lay in the Garriſons round about. Zimiſces hereupon drew out his Army into the adjoining plain, and offered them Battel, which they refuſing he had time to give Audience to Meſſengers that came from Conſtantia, and other Forts beyond the River Iſter, to beg pardon and yield themſelves, whom he gratiouſly received and ſent Garriſons into the Places ſo given up. But the beſieged, though they refuſed a pitcht Battel, yet their Number being increaſed iſſued out in the Night at all their Gates at once, and furiouſly aſſailed the Beſiegers when they little expected it. And at the firſt, as was to be expected, they had the better, till Sphagellus was ſlain, which ſo diſcouraged them, that they remitted much of their former Alacrity. Yet they kept the Field all the Night, and till Noon the next Day, when perceiving that a Party was ſent to get betwixt them and home, they then began to ſhift for themſelves, and finding the ways leading to the Town beſet, they ſtragled through the Countrey, and many of them were ſlain. The Night following Sphendoſthlabus, began to draw a Trench about the Walls, with which having more ſtrongly fortifyed the Place, he reſolved to hold out till the laſt.

He reſolves to ſtarve them out.

Another Rebellion at home.

But ſuppreſſed and puniſhed.

46. But Proviſions failing, and all ways by Land being blocked up, he took along with him two thouſand Men, and in a dark and rainy Night paſſed down the River in Boats, and fetched in Corn and other Neceſſaries, without the leaſt apprehenſion of the Beſiegers, till at his Return he killed many of their Foragers, and the reſt eſcaped with the News, which arrived not till he was got out of danger. At this the Emperour was very much diſturb'd, and threatned the Officers of the Fleet with death,if any ſuch thing happened for the time to come; for having ſpent now forty Days to no purpoſe in Hoſtility, he was reſolved to ſtarve them out, and having taken care for ſtopping up of all Avenues, took his eaſe and expected the Event. In the mean time while he ſought after new Conqueſts, what he had formerly poſſeſſed was in great danger, for Leo Curopalates, and his Son Nicephorus no-way obliged by his Clemency, who had cauſed their Eyes to be ſpared, when they had been ſentenced for their former Treaſons to looſe their ſight, again broke out into Rebellion, and having corrupted many Officers in ſeveral Places, left the Iſland, to which they were confined, and by Night came to Conſtantinople, where they imagined they could doe great matters, in the Abſence of the Emperour. But Leo the Drungarius of the Fleet, to whom with Baſilius the Rectour, the care of the Palace and City was committed, timely before they could get their Complices together, ſent a Party of Souldiers to ſecure them, of which having notice they betook themſelves to the great Church; but were thence drawn out and ſent into the Iſland Prota, where the former Judgement was now executed with effect upon them. To return to the Siege, the Defendants were both ſorely pinched with Famine, and diſtreſſed by Engines of the Enemy, with which among ſo many ſtout and young Warriors, ſome would ever be trying their skill, and attempting ſomething. One John a Magiſter the Son of Romanus Curcuas with a Machine he had, did them moſt miſchief, ſo that they reſolved to make a Sally by ſome of their ſtouteſt men, to break or diſable it. Curcuas to reſcue his Engine ruſhed in amongſt them, was knocked down from his Horſe and ſlain, but his Souldiers though they could not ſave his Life yet preſerved the Ram, and drove back the Roſſians into the Town.

The beſieged make an univerſal Sally.

But retreat with great Loſs.

After which they conſult.

47. On the twentieth day of July, they reſolved to make an univerſal Sally, by the Advice of one Jernor, a man who for his deſert was the ſecond in Repute amongſt them. A fierce conteſt there happened, till Anemas one of the Emperour's Guard ſingled out Jernor and ſlew him, at which ſight in Confuſion they retired, and many by reaſon of the ſtraitneſs of the Ways, were either killed by the Purſuers, or trampled down by their own Fellows, Sphendoſthlabus himſelf with difficulty eſcaping. When the Romans came to ſtrip the ſlain, they found many Women in Mens Clothes had accompanied their Husbands, and fought ſtoutly. And courageous enough they were of both Sexes and all Conditions, but what proſpect of any hope there was to ſucceed, the moſt prudent amongſt them could not ſee. For on all ſides, were they ſurrounded with inſuperable Difficulties. Of any relief there was no probability, their Friends and Countreymen being ſo far off. The Neighbouring Nations refuſed to meddle, being awed by the Power of the Emperour; who by his Fleet and Army being now Maſter both at Land and Sea, barred them of all Acceſs, while he and his Souldiers abounded, not onely with all things neceſſary but delightfull, and was recruited with perpetual Supplies of Men. Great deliberation being had about their matters, ſome were for flying away by Night, others moved that they ſhould yield, others propounded other ways and Methods, but all concluded that a Period was to be put to this War. But Sphendoſthlabus affirmed, this was not to be done in any cowardly manner, leſt they ſhould be derided by all their Neighbours, and Eternal Infamy ſhould ſtick to their Nation, and therefore he perſwaded them once more to try it with the Beſiegers, and prefer a glorious Death before an ignominious Life.

Reſolving to leave the City and try it out by Battel.

48. Unanimouſly the next day they quit the City, and make faſt the Gates that no hope of retreating thither might any more remain. Such a Fight followed as is uſual with a reſolved and deſperate Enemy. The Romans leſs accuſtomed to hardſhip were moſt diſtreſſed by the heat of the Weather, whom their Emperour carefully relieved by bottles of Wine and Water mixed, and then cauſed them thus refreſhed to renew the Fight. The narrowneſs alſo of the ways was a great hinderance to them, of which he being ſenſible, commanded that his Officers ſhould by degrees retire, and when they were come into the open plain, then to fall on again with their former violence. The Roſſians imagining they fled, made after them with great earneſtneſs, till the Romans being arrived at the appointed place, furiouſly charged them a-freſh. Now the ſervice being hot on both ſides, Theodorus of Miſtheia his Horſe was killed under him, and a ſharp contention followed, while the Enemy endeavoured to kill, and his Friends laboured as hard to preſerve him. He clearing himſelf of his Horſe as well as he could, cought one of the Roſſians faſt by the Girdle, and beſtirring himſelf, thruſt the Man on this ſide and that ſide of him, where he ſaw the danger was, and uſed him as a Target to receive the Strokes or Darts that were deſigned aganſt him, and this he did till he was reſcued and brought off. But Zimiſces ſeeing the Enemy fight rather more courageouſly than ever, the ſucceſs doubtfull, and pitying the dangerous condition his Men were in, to prevent greater effuſion of bloud ſent to Sphendoſthlabus, and challenged him to deſide the quarrel by the ſingle Combat of them two. The Barbarian refuſed it, proudly anſwering that he underſtood himſelf better than did the Roman Emperour, who if he was weary of his Life, might find ways enough to be rid of it, while he ſhould mind what he had to doe. The Emperour reſolving with all his force and dexterity, to drive the Affair in that manner, which alone remained and by this one days action, to finiſh both this War, and Siege, ſent Bardas Silerus, with his Troops to hinder them all Acceſs to the Town, Romanus the Patritian, the Son of Conſtantine Cæſar, and Grandſon of Romanus the Elder, together with Peter, another great Commander in the Army, he ordered with their forces to give a freſh charge, which was ſo warmly both given and received, that ſtill the ſucceſs remained abſolutely uncertain: but Anemas lately mentioned, Son of the

In which Sphendoſthlabus is diſmounted and the Roſſians overthrown.

Ameras of Crete, with a blow given upon the ſide on the Head, beat Sphendoſthlabus from his Horſe, and while he indeavoured in vain to kill him, by reaſon of the ſtrength of his Armour, was himſelf cut in pieces. At length the faint and ſtarved Roſſians gave way to the ſtout and vigorous Romans, who put them to flight, and in the Purſuit through the Plains killed an innumerable Multitude of them, all the reſt being alſo ſaid to be wounded. The Victours not aſcribing the Victory all to themſelves, took notice that Heaven fought for them, by a Storm of Rain which blew ſo violently upon the Faces of their Enemies, that they could not with their wonted Alacrity and Conduct manage the Fight. And much was aſcribed to Theodorus the Martyr, on whoſe day the Battel happened, whom ſome ſaid they ſaw fighting at the Head of the Army. And the Emperour's Faith was herein ſo ſtrong and operative, that he repaired a Church dedicated to him, and the Name of the Town wherein it ſtood he changed from Euchaneia, to Theodoropolis.

Which obliges them to ſend to the Emperour.

Who accepts of their Terms.

And returns to Conſtantinople in Triumph.

49. " Now Sphendoſthlabus having herein ſatisfied himſelf, that he had done all things becoming a prudent Man, for the mainteriance of his cauſe and Countrey, and that nothing ſucceeded, betook himſelf to the laſt refuge, of ſending to the Emperour. But greater things he required, than one would judge to have been ſuitable to his condition; as that on the publick Faith he might be received as a Friend and Ally of the Empire, that ſafe Conduct ſhould be granted to him and his Countreymen, to their own Homes, and that free Commerce ſhould be eſtabliſhed betwixt the Nations. Theſe things he thought it prudence to ask, though not to ſtand by them, but govern himſelf according to the humour and anſwer of Zimiſces, who either weary of the War, or afraid farther to provoke a deſperate Enemy, of whoſe courage he had had ſufficient experience, granted what he ask'd, excuſing it with this old ſaying, that It was the Cuſtome of Romans, to overcome more by kindneſs than force of Arms. The Accord being made, he deſired to come to an interview and diſcourſe with the Emperour, which was alſo granted. It was covenanted that the Patzinacæ ſhould be comprized in the League, and for that purpoſe the Emperour ſhould ſend to them, to ſignifie that he would accept of them as Friends and Allies, and to deſire free paſſage for the Roſſi, through their Territories to their own Countrey. The Patzinacæ agreed to all except the free Paſſage, but the Roſſi in the caſe they were in, muſt needs put them to the Trial. After their departure Zimiſces fortified all the Towns and Caſtles upon the River, and then returned to Conſtantinople, where the Patriarch with his Clergy, the Senate and People received him with all expreſſions of Joy imaginable. They met him with Crowns, and a Chariot drawn with four Horſes ſplendidly furniſhed, in which they would have him enter in ſolemn Triumph. But he would not admit of any of this, but bore himſelf very modeſtly entring upon a white Horſe, and putting into the Chariot the Veſtments of the Bulgarian Princes, and over them the Image of our Lady, as the Protectreſs of the City, which he ordered ſhould go before him. Having in the Forum received the Acclamations of the Multitude, and finiſhed his Devotions, in the ſight of them all, he deveſted Boriſes of the Enſigns of Majeſty which were a Golden Crown, a Silken Veſtment and Purple Shoes, and then going to the Great Church offered the Crown, and there left it. Which done, he promoted Boriſes to the Dignity of a Magiſter, and ſo departed to the Palace. In the mean time Sphendoſthlabus, in his Return, paſſing through the Countrey of the Patzinacæ fell into the Ambuſhes, laid by them for him, and was cut off with all his men; they objecting it as a Crime, that he had entred into League with the Romans.

Where he releaces his Subjects from Hearth-money.

A dreadfull Comet appears.

50. But the Emperour farther to teſtifie his Gratitude for his late Succeſs, re-edified the Church which ſtood upon the Arch of Chalce, ſparing no Coſt in the Workmanſhip. He eaſed all his Subjects of the Smoke or Chimney-money, and gave order, that as well in the Golden Coins, as in the Obolus, the Image of our Saviour ſhould be ſtamped (which formerly had not been done) with this Inſcription, Jeſus Chriſt the King of Kings, and this was afterward obſerved by his Succeſſours. But to put him as well as other Mortals in mind, what Accidents and Inconſtancy threaten humane Life, in the Month of Auguſt, and the third Indiction appeared a Comet, which becauſe of its ſhape of a Beard, they were wont to call Pogonia, and it continued till the Eighth Month of the fourth Indiction, foreſhewing as was afterward believed, the Death of the Emperour, and thoſe Diſtempers never to be cured, wherein the State by reaſon of Civil Wars was thenceforth involved. After this, Zimiſces undertook an expedition

againſt

Zimiſces makes an expedition as far as Damaſcus.

againſt thoſe Cities which having been Conquered by Nicephorus, had afterward revolted, and Travelling as far as Damaſcus, ſome by fair words, others by rough deeds he recovered, and having ſetled all things according to his will, returned home. In his Journey as he paſſed by Anazarbahe, Podandus, and other places, ſeeing there moſt pleaſant and fruitfull grounds, he asked to whom they belonged. It was anſwered that they all belonged to Baſilius, the Preſident, who had obtained the poſſeſſion of them all, though part got by Nicephorus, other portions by this or that Domeſtick of the Schools, and ſome ſhare by the Arms of Zimiſces himſelf. Hereat he grew very ſad, and perceiving the publick had got little by the Acceſſion of thoſe Territories, broke out into this expreſſion; “My Companions, it's a very odd thing that the publick Treaſure muſt be waſted, and “the Roman Armies undergo ſuch difficulties, and yet whatſoever has been gained by ſo much labour and expence, muſt be ingroſſed by one Eunuch. This was not ſo well meant as ill taken by Baſilius, from whom conſidering his place, it could not be hid, and thenceforth he reſolved by ſome means or other to make away the Emperour. This e'erlong he effected by procuring his Cupbearer for ſome reward in preſent, and more in promiſe to give him Poiſon, not ſuch as ſhould ſpeedily kill, but by degrees in a Languiſhing manner diſpatch him, which carried him off yet e'er he reached Conſtantinople, with the Symtoms of Carbuncles upon his Shoulders, and avoidance of much Bloud by his Eyes, after he had Reigned ſix years ſix Months and ſomething more. An excellent Prince, who is onely guilty upon Record, for the Murther of his Predeceſſour (however the Patriarch abſolved him) although as we may ſee by frequent examples, ſuch ambitious ſeeking after Sovereignty and Dominion, was ſcarcely counted a Crime in thoſe days.

But in his return is Poiſoned by the procurement of Baſilius the Preſident.

Baſilius and Conſtantine 10. ſucceed.

51. Baſilius and Conſtantine the Sons of Romanus, according to his own Deſignment, ſucceeded him in the month of December, the fourth Indiction, A. D. DCCCCLXXVI. Now our Authours ſpeak more probably of their Age than formerly, that the one was about twenty, and the other three years younger. They bore the Name, but all the Power ſtill reſided in Baſilius the Preſident, who preſently to ingratiate himſelf with them and their Mother, ſent a Pinnace and fetcht her out of Baniſhment. To provide againſt the Uſurpations of others, he had greateſt cauſe to ſuſpect Bardas Solerus, who had already been guilty that way, and had narrowly eſcaped the loſing of his eyes, but at preſent Commanded all the Forces of the Eaſt, by which advantage he might eaſily perſwade the Souldiers to any thing he pleaſed. The Command of the Eaſt therefore he took from him, and gave him the Government of Meſopotamia, with orders to reſtrain the Incurſions of the Saracens. In like manner he dealt with Michael Burtzas for the ſame reaſon; and to draw him from the company and Neighbourhood of Bardas, made him Governour of Antioch upon Orontes; and the Command of all the Forces in the Eaſt was given to one Peter, formerly the Servant of Phocas, an Eunuch, but a Man of much valour and experience. Hereat Bardas was exceedingly inraged, ſo as he could not refrain himſelf, but fell into grievous invectives and reproachfull words againſt Baſilius, who for all that was not moved, but admoniſhed him to quiet himſelf, and ſettle to the buſineſs enjoined, or elſe expect to be deprived of all Command whatſoever, and confined to his Houſe. Hereupon he departed into his Province, and having broken his Deſign to ſome Officers of the Army, reſolved to break into Rebellion, knowing all the Souldiers to be at his Devotion. But his Son Romanus was at Conſtantinople, and therefore he durſt not attempt any thing till he had got him thence, which he effected by the Induſtry and Diſſimulation of one Anthes, who coming to the City, ſpake all bitter things againſt him, and ſo paſſing for his Enemy, had opportunity to ſteal away the Youth. Then did he openly aſſume the Title and Habit, and was ſaluted Emperour by his whole Army, the Armenians herein giving example to the reſt.

Bardas Solerus breaks out into Rebellion and uſurps.

52. For maintaining what he had now done, and going through with his Enterprize, he ſeized upon all Collectours of the publick Revenue he could, and conſtrained them to pay it to his Officers. Such as were rich he forced to contribute, and many there were who in hope of receiving it back with good Advantage, voluntarily ſent him in large ſums of Money, all which he laid up for a Reſerve in a certain Caſtle of Meſopotamia, called Charpote, where he placed as ſtrong a Garriſon as the concern required. With his Neighbours the Saracens he contracted Friendſhip, which was ſtrengthned by cloſer Alliances and Marriage, by virtue of which he received from the two Ameras of * Amida and and * Martyropolis much money, beſides three hundred Arabian Horſemen for a ſupply. Thus furniſhed in the beginning of Spring, and farther encouraged by a Dream of a certain Monk, he ſet forward for Conſtantinople, whither the Report flying diſturbed both the Emperours and all men that were not delighted with change, and loved to fiſh in troubled waters. Orders are diſpatched to Peter to have the Army in a readineſs, to Rendezvous at Cæſarea, and Stephen Syncellus the Biſhop of Nicomedia is ſent to Bardas, by his Eloquenee, if poſſible, to perſwade him to deſiſt. But all he could ſay not in the leaſt ſhaked the Determination of the Uſurper, who to make a ſhort Anſwer to his long Oration, thruſt out his right Foot, and ſhewing him his Purple ſhoe, told him, that “He that had once worn that colour abroad, and in the ſight of People, “ could not be eaſily induced to put it off, and bid him tell thoſe that “ ſent him, that if they would not freely admit him for Emperour, he would en“deavour to eſtabliſh himſelf as ſuch whether they would or no. This Anſwer returned, command was ſent to Peter, that he ſhould not begin the War, but watch and obſerve Bardas, ſecure the Paſſages, and make reſiſtence if Attacqued. Accordingly he ſtopped up the ways, and after ſome bickerings of ſmall Parties, they came to Encamp one againſt the other. Bardas now ſhewed himſelf backward to Fight, till ſome convinced him that he injured himſelf by delays, which would moſt certainly bring him into contempt, and cauſe his Friends to fall off from him.

Joyning with the Saracens proceeds towards Conſtantinople.

* Saracenis Emet.

* Miepherkin.

Meeting the Emperour's Army by Stratageme he overcomes them.

Upon which Leo as Dictator is appointed to ſuppreſs him.

53. Convinced by this Reaſon he diſlodged, and in the ſpace of three days marched into Lapara, called afterwards Lycandus, a Part of Cappadocia; and Peter, leſt he ſhould be prevented, followed after, night and day, and thither came up cloſe to him. Yet neither of them had any mind to Fight, but endeavoured by wiles to circumvent each other, in which craft, Bardas was ſuperiour after this manner. He cauſed meat to be prepared as if all the Army was to take Refreſhment, but yet commanded every Man to be ready to Fight. This perceived by the Enemies they alſo fell to Eating, as concluding that for that day they might take their eaſe, and there would not be any Ingagement. In this poſture he fell upon them, and though they flew to their Arms and made ſtout reſiſtence yet perceiving they ſhould be compaſſed about by his two Wings, and the Mercenaries he had ordered to fall on their Backs, they ran away, and with the firſt Burtzas the Governour of Antioch, whether for fear or out of deſign is uncertain. Many were killed, and Bardas took their Baggage wherein was much treaſure found. Thence he removed, and took in a City called Tſamandus, and by this ſucceſs got ſuch reputation that many came over to him, and took his part, as Burtzas we now mentioned, Andronicus a Patritian, Lydus an Officer in the Army, and the inhabitants of Attala laid hands on Michael Curticas, the Commander of the Emperour's Fleet, which they carried all to Bardas, and from him received orders under his command, to make War againſt the Cibyrræotæ. Theſe things being reported at Court, it was there reſolved, that ſome of the Emperour's Friends ſhould be inveſted with abſolute or imperial power to give, grant and act whatſoever he ſhould think convenient for the ſuppreſſion of this Uſurper. Againſt him then was created, Dictator (as we may Term him) Leo the Protoveſtiarius and one John a Patritian a very eloquent and eminent man was ſent with him as an aſſiſtent or Councillour. Joyning with Peter at Cotyacius a place of Phrygia he firſt eſſayed ſecretly by great promiſes to draw the moſt conſiderable Perſons from Bardas, but all his Art this way was ſo far from doing any good, that it confirmed them in an Opinion of his weakneſs and of his Inability to proceed any other way.

54. Finding this project to fail him, by the night time he gave Bardas the go-by, and held on his courſe toward the Eaſt, which marvellouſly perplexed thoſe about the Uſurper, both in that they feared their Treaſure, and alſo were ſolicitous for their Relations, left behind them in thoſe parts. And this conſideration ſo wrought with them, that many departed and fled to Leo; Bardas his affairs were brought into that poſture, that he had juſt cauſe to fear that all his Forces would ſpeedily fall away and diſperſe themſelves. There was no way therefore but one; to ſend Burtzas and Romanus Taronita a Patritian, two that he could truſt to ſtop the courſe of Leo, by continual Allarms, ſudden on-ſets and intercepting his Proviſions, yet ſo as to be ſure not to venture a ſet Battel. But they were forced to break their orders. For News was brought that betwixt the two Armies were ſhortly to paſs ſome Saracens who were carrying the Annual Tribute, due from the Eaſtern Berræa to Conſtantinople, which would fall as a certain Prize to thoſe that could compaſs it, and therefore the Souldiers were not to be reſtrained. It occaſion'd an Ingagement, wherein Burtzas was beaten, and many of his Men were ſlain, eſpecially the Armenians, to whom no Quarter would be given, becauſe they firſt revolted to Bardas. He having notice how matters went, haſted with the Body of his Army, and incamped, as conveniently as he could againſt Leo, expecting a fit opportunity to ingage. But Leo was wary and drew out the time in length, which he was incouraged to doe, finding that his ſtrength increaſed by the daily coming over of ſome or other to him. And the opinion of the Elder and Wiſer about him was, that by delay he ſhould ſtill manage his Matters; but thoſe of the younger and hotter ſort were all for fighting, and as we are apt to yield to the worſt, he ſuffered himſelf to be overruled, and to give Battel. Bardas divided his Forces into three Parts, whereof he himſelf led the middle Battel, to his Brother Conſtantine he aſſigned the right, and to Conſtantine the Son of Gabras the left Wing. They had not long ingaged when Leo's Souldiers, not able to ſuſtain the violence of his Horſe, placed at each Wing, gave ground and occaſion to a total Defeat, which immediately followed. John the Patritian was killed, and Peter the Maſter of the Camp, with many other perſons of great Quality. Leo, with ſeveral other men of Office and Dignity was taken Priſoner. He was committed to Cuſtody; but the Eyes of Theodorus and Nicetas Hagiozacharitæ, two Brothers, at the Head of the Army were digged out, becauſe they had broken their Oaths and fallen off to Leo.

But in a Battel is alſo overthrown.

55. This Victory ſo exceedingly advanced the Intereſt of Bardas, that the whole Empire ſeemed now at his Devotion. But Baſilius the Preſident, was all this while very intent upon his buſineſs, and though he neglected no means for increaſing the Land Forces, yet his eſpecial care was for ſetting out a ſtrong Fleet; for Michael Curtices the General of Bardas, had waſted almoſt all the Iſlands, and was ſhortly expected at Abydus in the Helleſpont, which muſt needs cauſe Conſtantinople it ſelf to tremble. Having made all preparations the time would give him leave, he ſent out the Navy under Command of Theodorus Carentenus, a Patritian, who finding out Curtices at Phocæa, fought with and defeated him, by which means the Seas were all cleared. Then Baſilius applying himſelf wholly to the War by Land, ſent away Manuel Eroticus to command the City of Nice, the Metropolis of Bithynia, againſt which in a ſhort time after Bardas ſhewed himſelf and fell upon it with all violence. But not able to Maſter it, ſo vigorous and ſucceſsfull was the reſiſtence which Manuel made, he reſolved to ſtarve him out, and from his hands forced him to betake himſelf to his Wits, ſo much were the Inhabitants preſſed with want. He cauſed the Granaries therefore of the City to be filled with Sand, and Corn to be ſtrowed ſo thick upon it, that the Sand could not be diſcovered by the Eye. Then did he ſhew to ſome Priſoners he had the ſaid Granaries, and bragged how able he was by that means to hold out; but withall ſignified, that if he and thoſe with him might have leave honourably to depart, he would quit the place. This was not unwelcome News to Bardas, who upon report of the full Granaries, granted them ſuch Conditions as they deſired, and ſo with Bag and Baggage they marched out, and went to Conſtantinople. Thus Bardas became Maſter of Nice, but in ſuch a way, and by ſuch means, as he was aſhamed to own. However, he put a ſtrong Garriſon into the Town, under Command of one Pegaſius, and then attended his other Affairs.

The Seas cleared of the Uſurper's force.

But by Land he obtains the City of Nice.

56. Baſilius the Preſident perceiving his matters now deſperate, Bardas being ſhortly expected at Conſtantinople, betook himſelf to his laſt refuge in making uſe of a Perſon to which Neceſſity alone could oblige him. This was Bardas Phocas whom for this purpoſe he ſpeedily recalled out of Exile, and judging him the onely Perſon he could oppoſe to his Nameſake, received of him an Oath of Fidelity to the Emperours, and conferring on him the Dignity of a Magiſter, made him Domeſtick of the Schools, and committed the War to his management. Phocas having received Power and Inſtructions, indeavoured to paſs over to Abydus; but finding Romanus the Son of Sclerus to command the Helleſpont, returned to Conſtantinople, and there light of a Veſſel which wafted him over to the oppoſite Shore, whence travelling by Night, he came to Cæſarea, and there joining himſelf with Euſtathius Maleinus and Michael Bartzas, who had again turned to the Emperour's ſide, and gathering what Forces he could together, went on to Amorium. Sclerus having notice of his Arrival, now concluded, that he was to deal with his Match, not with Eunuchs and Effeminate Perſons, and to Amorium he marched, where coming to an Ingagement, the Forces of Phocas being diſheartned by the Defeats they had lately received, failed of Courage and of Succeſs, and were driven out of the Field, yet ſo as the Retreat was very fair and leiſurely, Phocas himſelf bringing up the Rere and facing about and charging the Purſuers as he had advantage. He got away to the Caſtle of Charſianus, and there refreſhed his men, and received many that came to him upon the Emperour's Account, whom he promoted according to their Qualifications. Sclerus was not long behind him, but coming and incamping not far off provoked him to fight, who as readily conſenting, they joined Battel again, wherein Phocas had the worſt, not being able to make his men ſtand their ground, though with his Poll-axe in his Hand he rode about to the ſeveral Ranks, and killed many of the Enemies, diſcharging all Offices both of an expert Commander and valiant Souldier.

Which cauſes Bardas Phocas to be recalled and made General.

Who is twice worſted by Sclerus.

57. After this Defeat he went into Iberia, where he deſired and obtained a ſupply from David the Prince of that Countrey, with whom he had contracted a particular Friendſhip when formerly he commanded Chaldia. Joyning theſe Forces with the remainders of his own, which he had rallied, he marched to Pancalea, a large Plain lying upon the River Halys, to ſeek out his Enemy, who there lay incamped. Another bloudy Contention followed, wherein Phocas perceiving his men again to give ground reſolved to indure no longer the ignominy of being beaten, but eſpying Sclerus, ran violently at him with purpoſe to kill or be killed. But Sclerus was ſo aware of him that he fetch'd the firſt ſtroke, ſome ſay with his Poll-axe, and others with his Sword, which miſſing him, cut off one of the Ears of his Horſe, and his Bridle in ſunder. Phocas his hand was more ſteady, who gave the other ſuch a blow upon his Helmet as ſtruck him down upon the Neck of his Horſe, which done he galloped up to an Hill and reſtrained the flight of his Souldiers. Sclerus dazled with the ſtroke, and fainting, was by his Followers carried to a Fountain to have his wound cleanſed, who concluded that Phocas and his Cauſe were both now loſt, and therefore were the more careleſs. Not taking heed to their Maſter's Horſe when they had taken him off, he got looſe and with his Main all bloudy ran amongſt the Souldiers, who thereupon concluding that the Rider their General was ſlain, inſtead of purſuing, ran away themſelves, and that with ſuch fear and haſte, that ſome tumbled down Precipices, and others took the River and therein were drowned, while Phocas to his great amazement beholding what happened and looking upon it as an extraordinary mercy from Heaven, took the Advantage offered him of giving the Chace and obtaining an unexpected Victory. Sclerus with a few eſcaped and got to Martyropolis, whence he ſent his Brother Conſtantine to Choſroes the Prince of Babylon, to deſire his Friendſhip and Aſſiſtence. Choſroes making delay, and neither granting his Requeſt nor returning a denial, when his Brother came not back with any anſwer, he himſelf went thither with all his men. The Emperour Baſilius being informed by Phocas of his late ſucceſs, and how Sclerus was gone to Babylon, ſent an Ambaſſadour to Choſroes the Amermumnes, deſiring him to conſider, as he was a Prince, of what ill example and conſequence it might prove to harbour and protect Rebels, and Letters were written alſo to Sclerus and thoſe about him, offering them free pardon for what was paſt, if they would return to obedience, and every man to his own Home, which when Choſroes underſtood, not thinking himſelf fairly dealt with, he committed both the Ambaſſadour and Sclerus to Cuſtody. Such of his Party as did not accompany Sclerus to Babylon, ſeized upon one or two ſtrong Caſtles in the Province of Thrace, whence for ſome conſiderable time they made excurſions into the neighbouring Territories, and did much miſchief, till by Nicephorus Parſacutinus a Patritian, upon promiſe of Indemnity from the Emperour, they were perſwaded to deſiſt, and were brought in.

But in the third Ingagement obtains the Victory.

Sclerus flying to Babylon,

Is there committed into Cuſtody.

58. Such was the Iſſue hitherto of the Rebellion of Bardas Sclerus; how matters went in the mean time in the Weſtern Parts of the Empire, we muſt now diſcover. The Bulgarians, notwithſtanding all the pains of Zimiſces, in that Countrey continued no longer in obedience than he in life. Not long after his Death, reſolving to be governed by thoſe of their own bloud, they committed the ſupreme Power to four Brothers, David, Moſes, Aaron and Samuel, called commonly Cometopoli, becauſe they were the Sons of an eminent Count amongſt them. For of the ſtock of Peter none was left whom they could prefer. His two Sons Boriſes and Romanus, that were, as we ſaid, brought to Conſtantinople, had thence upon the death of Zimiſces made their eſcape back into Bulgaria. But Boriſes paſſing through a Wood in a Roman Habit, was killed by a certain Bulgarian, who took him for one of that Nation: Romanus indeed was alive, and returned ſome time after to Conſtantinople, but he was an Eunuch, having been gelt by Joſeph, that eminent Bedchamber man, formerly mentioned. Now of all theſe four Brothers David died preſently after. Moſes in the Siege of a place called Serræ was killed by a blow given with a Stone, and Aaron being ſuſpected to favour the Romans, was by Samuel murthered with all his Children, one Blackoſthlabus excepted, called alſo John, who was preſerved by Kadomer (otherwiſe alſo named Romanus) the Son of Samuel. This Samuel was a man of a reſtleſs diſpoſition, a very good Souldier, and while the Empire was ſufficiently intangled with the War againſt Sclerus, plagued all the Weſt with his Incurſions, not onely Thrace and Macedonia, with the Parts near to Theſſalonica, but Theſſaly alſo, Greece, and Peloponneſus, and took many ſtrong Holds, the chief whereof was Lariſſa, the Inhabitants of which with their whole Families he tranſported into Bulgaria, inrolled them amongſt his Souldiers, and uſed them againſt the Romans.

The Bulgarians invade the Weſtern parts of the Empire.

Upon which Baſilius the Emperour enters Bulgaria.

59. Matters thus ſtanding with the Bulgarians, the Emperour Baſilius, as ſoon as the buſineſs with Sclerus was over, began to reflect upon his own Power, and reſolved now he was of years ſufficient to undertake the War againſt them upon his own ſcore, to ſhew he was in a condition to be out of Pupillage. Without acquainting Phocas, though the Domeſtick of the Schools, or any other of the Captains of the Eaſt, he invaded Bulgaria, through the Countries, lying near Rhodoptes and the River Eurus, leaving Leo Meliſſenus behind him to ſecure the Straits, whilſt he coming about by the difficult Paſſages and Woods, lying near to Triaditza, or as it was in old time called Sardica, came into a place known by the Name of Stoponium, reſolving to lay Siege immediately to Sardica, being the more incouraged ſo to doe becauſe Samuel was reported, out of fear, to keep himſelf in the mountainous Parts of the Countrey, not daring to come down, but when he ſaw he had an Advantage by Strategeme or Ambuſh to effect ſomething conſiderable. But while he prepared for this Siege, Stephen the Domeſtick of the Schools of the Weſt, for the ſmallneſs of his Stature called Contoſtephanus, but a very great Enemy to Leo Meliſſenus, came to him by Night, and with moſt vehement words perſwaded him to ſet all other Conſiderations aſide, and return with ſpeed to Conſtantinople, becauſe Meliſſenus had a Deſign to Uſurp, and for that purpoſe was haſting toward the City. The Emperour eaſily frighted with ſuch a Story gave orders for the Army to march, and then Samuel ſeeing his time, fell upon them as a flying Enemy, and put them to flight indeed, taking all their Baggage, and therein the Emperour's Enſigns of Majeſty, who with much adoe got through the Straits, and eſcaped to Philippopolis. There he found Leo at his Station intending diligently what had been injoyn'd him, whereupon ſenſible how they had both been abuſed, he reviled Contoſtephanus as a Lyar and Authour of ſo great Infamy as this ridiculous Expedition muſt needs procure, and Stephen demeaning himſelf very arrogantly, and indeavouring to defend what he had done, he leap'd from his Seat, and catching faſt hold of him by his Locks and Beard pulled him down to the ground.

But in his return looſes his Baggage, &c.

A great Earthquake.

60. A great Earthquake happened after this in the Month of October, and the twelfth year of the Emperour Baſilius, and Conſtantine, of whom we hear little or nothing, being wholly given up to Idleneſs and Pleaſure, and willingly leaving all to the management of his Brother, who now caſting off his former Neglect, took matters into his own Hands, and ſeriouſly applied himſelf to buſineſs. By the Earthquake were not onely many Churches and private Buildings overturned, but alſo part of the Globe of the Great Church, which he magnificently repaired with ſo great expence, that the very Scaffolding ſtood him in ten Centenaries of Gold. But his late Expedition into Bulgaria had that operation upon ſeveral of the Nobility, eſpecially Bardas Phocas, that thinking themſelves exceedingly neglected in that he would not conſult with them, and thence taking a meaſure of what they muſt expect from him in time to come. Some two Months before the Earthquake in the Month of October, meeting at the Houſe of Euſtathius Malenius, who had been ignominiouſly diſmiſſed the Service, at Charſianum they proclaimed the ſaid Phocas Emperour, giving him a Diadem, and inveſting him with the other Imperial Ornaments. At the ſame time word was brought that Sclerus (whom Baronius ſtrangely makes the ſame with Phocas, writing that Sclerus Bardas, ſirnamed Phocas, was this year Proclaimed and Crowned Emperour) was coming out of Syria being delivered out of his Priſon at Babylon upon this occaſion.

Bardas Phocas ſaluted Emperuor.

Quod ad res pertinet Orientis, invaleſcente bello Civili, Sclerus Bardas Cognomento Phocas Tyrannus, Imperator acclamatur, ac coronatur. Baron. ad. A. D. 987. num. 4.

The Perſians endeavour to caſt off the Yoke of the Saracens.

The Nation of the Perſians being ſubdued and inſlaved by the Saracens, endured the Yoke with much Reluctancy and Repining, and the moſt Noble and Potent of them were watching but for a fit opportunity to ſhake it off. Of theſe one Inargus more concerned himſelf than all others, being of a great Family, very Eloquent, and a Complete Souldier, who obſerving Choſroes very imprudently and negligently to manage his Affairs, reſolved not to let ſlip ſuch an Advantage, but drew to revolt all the Achæmonidæ or Achæmenidæ, a Part of Perſia, and hired twenty thouſand of the Eaſtern Turks (ſo they term them, as the Hunni or Hungarians the Weſtern) and then openly makes War, killing all the Saracens whereſoever he could light on them. Choſroes often in Perſon, and as often by his Officers ingaged with him in Fight, but ſtill came off with loſs, which ſtruck ſuch terrour into his Souldiers, that they could not endure to hear a Perſian named. This made him think of his Romans now in durance, and to conſider, that were not Sclerus a man very conſiderable, aſwell for skill in War and Courage as other Matters, he could never have waged war with the Emperour, nor brought him to ſuch Straits as he did, nor would ſo many Noblemen have ſided with him, and given him the Title. Communicating his thoughts with his Council, he delivered him out of Priſon, and after much Careſſing of him, deſired that he would undertake the War againſt the Perſians.

Achæmenia pars Perſidis ab Achamene filio Ægei ſic dicta, ut ait Stephanus. Achamenes autem erat Rex Perſarum, nomen teſte Ammiano, Rex Regibus imperans ſonat.

61. Sclerus at firſt pretended an Averſeneſs, affirming that He and his Fellows being kept ſo long in Priſon, were thereby rendred unfit for Employment of that Nature. But Choſroes promiſing him ample recompence for the Injury that had been done him, with much Treaſure and great Force for carrying on the War, he undertook it, yet ſo as he would not meddle with the Arabians, Saracens or other Subjects of Choſroes, but deſired that the Priſons of Syria might be opened, and all Roman Captives ſet at Liberty, with whom and no other Army he would doe his work. By this means, getting together about three thouſand Men, he cauſed them by bathing and other ways to recover their former ſtrength, and new clothing and arming them, led them againſt the Perſians, whom by a manner of fighting unuſual to them, and eſpecially by the Violence and Courage of his Souldiers he totally defeated, ſo that ſcarcely remained any to carry away the News, and Inargus himſelf fell in the Croud. Now the Romans inriched with great booty, and many Horſes would by no means return to Choſroes, but taking the Rode that led into the Territories of the Empire, by great Journeys without the Knowledge of the Saracens, they eſcaped thither. Thus ſome reported. Others affirmed that they went back to Choſroes, were courteouſly received by him, and that dying not long after he gave Order to his Son to conduct them with Honour and Safety, into their own Countrey. And a third ſtory there was, they getting away without his Knowledge, he ſent after them a great Multitude to bring them back, with which they fought, and reducing them to a ſmaller Number than themſelves, ſuch ſlaughter they made, then without any oppoſition proſecuted their Journey.

Upon which Sclerus and the Romans in Syria are let out of Priſon.

Who ingage and defeat the Perſians.

And return into the Empire.

62. However it was, Sclerus with his Followers got ſafe into the Territories of the Empire, where underſtanding how Bardas Phocas had alſo aſſumed the Title, he found himſelf much at a Loſs what to doe. To make himſelf ſole Emperour, he was not ſufficiently provided, and to join himſelf either to Baſilius or the other he eſteemed a mean thing, and below him, and ſhould he take the Part of one and make the other his Enemy, it might prove a matter of great danger, therefore he reſolved to give words to both, and ſo ingratiate himſelf with the one, that he ſhould not diſoblige the other. To Phocas he ſent and offered to ſuppreſs Baſilius, and ſhare the Empire with him, but ſecretly at the ſame time he cauſed his Son Romanus to go to the Emperour at Conſtantinople, under pretence of running away and revolting, with this Deſign, that if Phocas got the better, the Father ſhould intercede for and bring off his Son, and if Baſilius overcame, his Son ſhould make the Father's Peace. Romanus was kindly received, preferred to the Dignity of a Magiſter, became a great Favourite and a Councillour to Baſilius in his Wars, who had now taken all matters out of the Hands of Baſilius the Preſident, and fearfull that for his ſo doing, he might as he had done to others practiſe ſomething againſt him, had removed him from Court to his own Houſe. There perceiving that he was very unſatisfied, and turbulent, and was hatching ſome Deſign for recovery of his Power, he baniſhed him, and ſeized upon moſt of his vaſt Eſtate both to inrich himſelf, and hinder him from attempting any new matters. The Monaſtery lately built by him, he rifled, and ſeized on all his Curioſities, which ſo afflicted the old Man, that he pin'd away and died.

Cajolling Phocas, and ſending his Son to Baſilius the Emperour.

Baſilius being rid of him, and wanting ſome to aſſiſt and adviſe him, the more welcomely received Romanus, knowing him to be both a prudent Man, and an excellent Souldier.

Sclerus and Phocas make an Agreement.

But when joyned Phocas trepans him and commits him to cuſtody putting in for the whole.

63. In the mean time an Agreement was made between Sclerus and Phocas, on theſe terms, that their Deſigns ſucceeding, Sclerus ſhould for his ſhare have Antioch, Phœnicia, Paleſtine, Cœloſyria, Meſopotamia and Egypt; and Phocas obtain Conſtantinople, with the reſt of the Provinces. This was confirmed by oath on both ſides, and Sclerus joined himſelf with Phocas in Cappadocia, for the better carrying on of the War. But Phocas watching his Advantage, ſpoiled him of the Imperial Enſigns,and then committed him to Cuſtody,which done he prevailed with his Souldiers to fight under him, and now ſeeming to himſelf to have ſufficiently provided for his Intereſt, ſent one Calocyrus Delphinus a Patritian, with part of his Army to Chryſopolis, over againſt Conſtantinople, on the ſhore of Aſia, and with the reſt of the Forces he himſelf removed to Abydus, by this means to block up Conſtantinople. Baſilius by this time had received ſome Succours from the Roſſians,to the Prince of whom, Blœdimere, he had married his Siſter Anne. With theſe Roſſians by Night having wafted over, he fell unexpectedly upon Delphinus, eaſily overpowred and took him Priſoner, whom he cauſed inſtantly to be nailed to a Poſt,and having animadverted as he thought fit upon the reſt, that he there took, then returned to Conſtantinople. In the mean while Phocas, with might and main endeavoured to get into Abydus, but the Inhabitants made ſtout reſiſtence, being incouraged by Cyriacus the Drungarius of the Fleet, who was ſent thither for that purpoſe. But preſently Conſtantine the Emperour paſſed over, and was ſoon followed by his Brother Baſilius, whom Phocas with part of his Forces ſpeedily encountred, leaving the reſt to continue the Siege of Abydus. Before the Armies joined doubtfull of the Event, and perceiving Baſilius to ride up and down, to view the Troops, give directions and animate his Men, he reſolved to ſingle him out and kill him, by which Act ſeeming not at all difficult, their years and experience conſidered, he ſhould put an end to the Quarrel, and ſecure the Empire to himſelf. Accordingly with all his Force he made towards him, but ſtopped in his Carreire, before he came near to the Emperour. Some reported his Horſe threw him: the Emperour Conſtantine gave out that he fell by his Hand, but the general and moſt received opinion was that making toward an Hill near at hand, finding himſelf ſurprized he laid him down and died of Poiſon, which by procurement of Baſilius, one Simeon a Servant whom he moſt truſted had given him, although it was alſo given out, that in his Paſſage from the Hand of ſome Enemy he received a mortal wound. At firſt it was onely imagined that he there reſted himſelf, but when he was found to be dead, and the Rumour was thereof ſpread into the Army, his Men then fled in diſorder, and the Emperour's giving the Chace obtained a Victory at a very eaſie rate. Amongſt the Priſoners were Leo, and Theognoſtus Meliſſeni, Theodoſius Meſanyctus and many others whom Baſilius led in Triumph, being ſet upon Aſſes. Onely Leo Meliſſenus he exempted from this Ignominy, becauſe when the Armies were preparing for Battel, he rebuked with Tears his Brother Theognoſtus for reviling the Emperours, and beat him when he would not ceaſe his contumelious Language.

But is poyſoned by Procurement of Baſilius.

Who in effect is ſole Emperour. Conſtantine Indulging himſelf in eaſe and pleaſure.

64. Baſilius finding himſelf now Emperour indeed, upon the removal of ſuch a Competitour, with his Fortune quite changed his Humour, ſcarcely thinking or doing what he had been accuſtomed to before. Conſidering what ſolicitude and pains his place required, he quitted all his former pleaſures, left off all his brave apparel, renounced his wonted Intemperance both as to Wine and Women, and applied his mind wholly to the Art and Practice of Government, wherein he left nothing to his Brother but the mere Name and Luſtre, aſſigning him a Guard, but that very ſmall, and not anſwering the Dignity, which he did not at all take in evil Part, contenting himſelf with his Freedom and Eaſe, and prizing his Hunting and Converſation with his Friends, above whatever Domination and troubleſome Command could afford. But Phocas being dead in the Month of April, the ſecond Indiction, and the fourteenth year of Baſilius and Conſtantine, Sclerus was thereupon ſet at Liberty, by ſuch as kept him in the Caſtle of Tyropæum, and continued in the ſame mind of aſſuming the Title as formerly. Baſilius laboured to take him off, expoſtulating with him for imbroyling the Empire, and being the cauſe of ſo much Bloud-ſhed contrary to his Chriſtian Profeſſion; and herewith he was ſo much moved, or rather by conſideration of his great Age, and the little means he had to compaſs his ends, that having received ſecurity for his Indemnity, and the Dignity of Curopalates, he made an Agreement, Sclerus is ſet at Liberty.

But by Agreement with Baſilius quits his pretenſions.

and was content to lay down his Pretenſions. When the Emperour ſaw him led to him by two that ſupported him, for by reaſon of his Age and Corpulency he could not walk, or as ſome gave out in his way to him he had loſt his ſight, he ſmiled to think in how great fear he had ſtood of ſuch a Man, and perceiving that he ſtill wore his Purple Shoes, which he had forgot to put off, having deveſted himſelf of all other marks of Majeſty, he refuſed to admit him to Diſcourſe. He then put off the Shoes before the Door and approaching the Emperour's Seat, Baſilius roſe up to him, and taking him by the Hand cauſed him to eat and drink with him. According to the Agreement he was made Curator of the Palace, and ſuch of his Followers as had under him enjoyed any Places or Eſtates, were permitted to enjoy their Eſtates and to keep their Places, or elſewhere preferred to others of like value.

And is kindly received.

Baſilius revenges himſelf for the Incurſions of his Neighbours during theſe Civil Wars.

65. Baſilius, being freed now from all Uſurpations and trouble of Civil Wars, conſulted how to be revenged on Samuel the Regulus of Bulgaria, and others who during thoſe Rebellions had taken the Advantage to infeſt the Borders of the Empire. He made a Progreſs into Thrace and Macedonia, and going to Theſſalonica, there left a ſtrong Party under Command of Gregorius Taronitas, to repreſs the Incurſions of Samuel, and returning to Conſtantinople ſhortly after took another Journey into Iberia. David the Curopalates or petty Prince of that Countrey being lately dead, had made him his Heir, he therefore took poſſeſſion of his Inheritance, and forcing George the Brother of David to be content with the Inner Iberia, received his Son for an Hoſtage, and then took his way for Phœnicia, where the ſeveral Ameras of Tripolis, Damaſcus, Tyre and Beritas, had, during the Uſurpation and Wars of Sclerus, made a League amongſt themſelves and ſet upon Antioch, the Governour of which Damianus a Patritian they had ſlain in fight. But he now frighted them into a Compliance, forced them to ſubmit themſelves, and having received Hoſtages for their dutifull demeanour for the time to come, returned back to Conſtantinople. As he paſſed through Cappadocia, the Magiſter, Euſtachius Melenius entertained him with his whole Army, with which kindneſs he pretended he was much pleaſed, but inwardly diſſatisfied that a Subject ſhould be poſſeſſed of ſuch an Eſtate, to the endangering of the Government, which was ſo often ſhaken, through the too great Wealth and Power of the Nobility; under ſhew of kindneſs he carried him with him to Conſtantinople, where he took care he ſhould live very plentifully, but never would permit him to return home; and after his death ſeized on all his Eſtate. To prevent the Miſchiefs thence ariſing by a Law, he ordained, that the Great men ſhould not increaſe their Poſſeſſions or Lands, which (ſaith Cedrenus) had been formerly enacted by his Grandfather Conſtantine, and Romanus (the Elder) his Father-in-Law.

Ἤδη γὰρ καὶ ὁ Κουροπαλάτης ἐτεθνήκει Δαβίδ. Hoc ex loco Cedreni apparet Regulos iſtos, ut bene innuit Xylander, ſeu Regionum Romanis Vicinarum Dominos vocari Curopalatas. Et ſuprà quoque facta eſt alicubi Iberiæ Curopalatæ mentio.

And by a Law decrees that Noblemen ſhould not increaſe their Poſſeſſions or Lands.

66. The Conſtitution of Romanus the Elder, here mentioned, is yet extant and publiſhed by Bonefidius, in the firſt Book of thoſe three, which he ſet forth concerning the Oriental Law, bearing the name of a Novel. "It "prohibits any of the conſpicuous Magiſtri, or Patritians, "any in command or power, any Honoured with principal Dignities, whether employed in Functions, Civil or "Military, Magiſtrates, choſen or ſubſtituted, any Metropolitans or Archbiſhops, Prefects or thoſe that had the "overſight of Religious Houſes, or any other preferred to "any ſecular Honour, by purchaſe gift or any other "means, to get into their Hands, or come to the poſſeſſion of any Territories or "Lands. If any ſuch ſhould preſume ſo to doe, after the publiſhing of this preſent Conſtitution, it ordains that without Reſtitution of their Money, they be "put out of Poſſeſſion, and looſe all their Labour and Charges, they had been "at both in getting and bettering what they had ſo obtained. Beſides this "they ſhall forfeit the value of the Lands to the Emperour if they be the more "eminent and Illuſtrious Perſons; and if meaner condition, they ſhall be forced "from them without any the leaſt ſatisfaction made, and farther puniſhed as "they ſhall deſerve. The reaſon of the making and Re-inforcing of this Law is, as we may very well obſerve from the courſe of this Hiſtory, to be fetched from thoſe frequent Uſurpations, of the great ones, to which they were inabled by their great Revenues and Poſſeſſions, which both afforded them Treaſure, and many Dependants out of their Tenants and Vaſſals. Hence do we reade of one Domeſtick of the Schools, able with his own Retainers to Wage War with ſeveral

Pag. 24.

Καὶ ἡ νεαρὰ τοῦ κυρίου Ῥωμανοῦ τοῦ Γέροντος, οὕτω φησὶ μηδένα μηκέτι τῶν περιβλέπτων Μαγίστρων, ἢ πατρικίων, &c.

Ἀγορᾷ ἢ δωρεᾷ ἢ ἄλλω τινὶ τρόπω εἰσέρχεσθαι εἰς χωρίων, ἢ ἀγρῶν κτήσεις.

The reaſon of that Law.

Χωρίων.

Ameras of the Saracens, and we Tranſlate the word Territories, as well as Lands or Grounds. For ſuch were intirely poſſeſſed by Baſilius the Bed-Chamber-man, or Preſident, as we have ſeen, that Zmiſces complained to the loſs of his Life. Hence it was that the imperial Purple was ſo dangerous to be worn, ſuch murthering of Princes, ſuch alterations in the Government. And we ſee Baſilius the Emperour was not onely directed by a care of his own preſervation, but much warranted by former Laws, in proceeding with Baſilius the Eunuch ſo as he did.

Samuel the Bulgarian takes Theſſalonica. Killing its Governour.

And waſting the Countrey adjacent.

But is found out by Uranus the Emperour's General and defeated.

67. But to return to our Story, Samuel the Bulgarian was now come againſt Theſſalonica, the Conqueſt of which he knew would much conduce to the Maſtering of the whole Countrey. He placed ſome of his Army in Ambuſh, and then ſent others to face the Town to the very Gates, to draw out the Gariſon into the Snare. And the device ſo far took that Gregory the Governour ſent out Aſotes his Son with a party to make a diſcovery of the Enemy, who fell into the Ambuſh while without any fear he purſued thoſe that fled from the Gates. Upon notice Gregory iſſued out to relieve him, but being alſo intrapped and overpowered, he himſelf was ſlain, and his Son taken Priſoner, which being known at Conſtantinople, Nicephorus Uranus; who had corrupted his Keepers and eſcaped out of Priſon at Babylon, the Commander of all the Weſt, was ſpeedily diſpatched thither. Coming to Theſſalonica he found that Samuel, grown inſolent upon the Death of Gregory, had paſſed Tempe, croſſed the River Peneus, and made an Inrode into Theſſaly, Bœotia, Attica, and through the Iſthmus of Corinth into the very Heart of Peloponneſus. He marched therefore with his Army by the foot of Olympus to Lariſſa, whereleaving his Baggage, by great Journeys he proceeded into Theſſaly, and paſſing the Pharſalian Plains, and the River Apidanus, incamped himſelf on the Bank of Spercheius oppoſite to Samuel, who lay on the other ſide of the River at this time ſo ſwollen with Rain Water that no paſſage could preſently be had to come to an Ingagement. Yet Uranus by much ſearching at length found a Ford, and by Night paſſing the River, fell upon the Bulgarians as they ſecurely ſlept, and made vaſt Slaughter of them; and Samuel with his Son Romanus were ſorely wounded, and had been taken but that they lurked amongſt the dead Bodies, and the following Night ſtole away into the Mountains of Ætolia, by the Tops of which they eſcaped to the Hil Pindus, and ſo into Bulgaria, here he was conſtrained to Marry his Daughter to Aſotes his Priſoner the Son of Gregory Taronitas, for being deſperately in love with him, ſhe had declared that if ſhe might not have him, ſhe would kill her ſelf.

Ζωστὴ à Veſte.

Baſilius invades Bulgaria by way of Philippopolis.

68. The Wedding being over, he ſent his New Son-in-Law with his Wife to Dyrrachium, making him Governour of that Countrey. They had not been long there, but he having eaſily perſwaded his Wife to Accompany him and taking the opportunity of the Emperour's Gallies which were then cruſing on the Coaſts, went to Conſtantinople where he was honoured with the Dignity of Magiſter, and ſhe with the Title of Zoſta or of the Robes. He brought Letters alſo to the Emperour from Chryſelius, one of the principal Officers in Dyrrachium, who thereby covenanted to deliver that City into his Hands on condition that the Dignity of Patritian might be conferred on himſelf and his two Sons; but this ſeems to have been prevented by the Death of Chryſelius, which the maimed Text of Cedrenus hints to us, though it be not clearly expreſſed; however the Emperour became Maſter of the place not long after, although by ſome other means. But about the ſame time Paulus Bobus Magiſter the chief Man in Theſſalonica, and Malaceinus a Perſon eminent for wiſedom and eloquence being accuſed of favouring the Bulgarians, were ſent away and confined, the one to Conſtantinople, and the other to Palias in Thrace, which report flying to Adrianople, ſome of the moſt eminent there that had alſo been ſuſpected out of fear betook themſelves to Samuel. The Emperour that he might obtain the Friendſhip of the Venetians to their Prince or Duke gave in Marriage the Daughter of Argyrus, and Siſter to him who afterward Reigned. He now invaded Bulgaria by the way of Philippopolis, which City he committed to the care of Theodorocranus a Patritian, and having taken many Caſtles or Forts in Triaditza, returned to Moſynopolis. Afterward he ſent a great Army againſt ſuch of the Bulgarian Gariſons as lay beyond the Mountain Hæmus, commanded by Theodorocranus, and Nicephorus Xiphias a Protoſpatharian, who took both the greater and the leſſer Perſthlaba, with Pliſcoba, and victoriouſly returned Home.

Another Invaſion by way of Theſſalonica.

69. The following year Baſilius in perſon made another Inrode into Bulgaria by the way of Theſſalonica, and received Berrhœa from the hands of Dobromerus the Governour, who for his good ſervice was rewarded with the Honour of Proconſul.

ſul. But one Nicolas for the ſmallneſs of his Stature nicknamed Nicolitzas, ſtoutly defended Servia againſt him which yet he took by force, and having therein placed a ſtrong Garriſon took Nicolitzas along with him to Conſtantinople, and conferred on him the Dignity of a Patritian; but there he did not long continue, making an eſcape back to Samuel with whom he came, and again beſieged that place. The Emperour upon Notice haſted thither and eaſily raiſing the Siege beat away Samuel and Nicolitzas, who was taken ſhortly after, and then committed to cloſe Priſon at Conſtantinople. Baſilius after this went into Theſſaly where he cauſed to be repaired thoſe Caſtles which Samuel had diſmantled, ſuch as ſtill were held by the Bulgarians he recovered, and removing them to a place called Bolerus re-inforced them with ſtrong Garriſons, and thence removed to Bodena a fort ſituate on a Craggy Rock through which Water paſſeth unſeen from the adjoyning Fenns and then preſently appears again. This he took by force, and removing the Defendants (ſuch mercy he uſed) to Bolarum, furniſhed it with all conveniences, and then went to Theſſalonica. The Governour, Drexanus by name, a very good Souldier, deſired leave of him to live at Theſſalonica, and there he Married a Wife the Daughter of the chief Pribatarius of the Church of St. Demetrius. After ſhe had born him two Children he endeavoured to run away, but was taken, and at the interceſſion of his Father-in-Law, pardoned. The ſecond time he committed the ſame fault, and found the ſame indulgence. But after the birth of two Children more relapſing into the ſame Crime the Emperour would extend no farther mercy to him, but being again ſurprized he was there faſtned alive to a Pole.

Τὴν θυγατέρα τοῦ πρώτου τῶν πριβαταρείων. Quid ſibi velit iſte Pribatarius nondum conſtat, ſimile aliquid nonnulli putant noſtri temporis Prebendariis.

The Arabians infeſting Cœloſyria and Africk are ſuppreſſed.

70. In the mean time the Numaritæ and the Ataphitæ Arabians grievouſly infeſted both Cœloſyria and Africk with their Depredations. To reſtrain them the Emperour made Nicephorus Uranus Governour of Antioch. One David Arianita a Patritian being ordered to ſucceed him in his command at Theſſalonica, as Nicephorus Xiphias ſucceeded Theodorocranus in the Government of Philippopolis, who reſigned it for Age: Uranus ſhortly after his arrival at Antioch in three Battels defeated Ciſtrinitas the Captain of the Arabians, and forcing him to live quietly, procured Peace and Reſt to thoſe parts. The year that followed being the fifteenth Indiction, the twenty ſeventh of the two Brothers, Baſilius laid Seige to Bidyna, which City he took by ſtorm after a Siege of eight Months, and then returning toward Conſtantinople, took or Demoliſhed many forts of the Bulgarians in his way. Being come as far as the City Scopiæ, he perceived that Samuel lay with his Army in great careleſneſs and diſorder beyond the River Axius, called afterward Bardarius, to the depth whereof lately increaſed by Rains he truſted. But the Emperour having diſcovered a Ford paſſed over, and falling upon him ſo unexpectedly, ſtruck ſuch Terrour into his Men that they all ran as faſt as their Legs could carry them, not one ſhewing his Face to the Enemy. His Camp and Pavilion was taken, and the City Scopiæ was delivered up to him by Romanus Simeon the Governour, the Son of Peter and Brother of Boriſes, who for a reward was made a Patritian and Governour of Abydus. Thence Baſilius proceeded to a place called Pernicus which one Cracras ſo ſtoutly defended, that finding it two ſtrong for him to Maſter at preſent, by Philippopolis he returned to Conſtantinople. “ Here he made “ a Law for the payment of Allalengyum, as it was called, which was this. When “ any by reaſon of their Poverty could not pay the uſual Tribute, the Sum was “ made up by their Neighbours that had wealth enough to doe it. This ſeems “ the ſame with the Epibole of which we formerly ſpoke in the life of Juſtinian; ſo that Baſilius rather renewed than made a Law for the Payment of this duty. As formerly * at other times this payment was oppoſed eſpecially by the Eccleſiaſticks, ſo now alſo the Patriarch Sergius, and many other Prelates and Religious Men laboured to diſſwade this Emperour from it. But in vain.

Bidyna taken by ſtorm.

Samuel's Army routed by Baſilius.

Who returns to Conſtantinople.

Ἀλληλέγγυον.

* Vide Alemannum in Procopii Arcanam Hiſtoriam in voce Ἐπιβολή.

71. For by this time grown inſolent upon ſo many Victories, he was become very lofty in his Converſation, and deſired rather to be feared than to be beloved by his Subjects. Neither was he more indulgent to the Souldiers, than others in Civil employment, contrary to the Cuſtome of his Predeceſſours, who eſteemed it their greateſt Intereſt to gain the affections of Military men. Of Learned men he made no Account, neither did he at all value Learning it ſelf, but accounted it a thing formal, vain and uſeleſs, as ignorant and effeminate Princes are wont to doe: for which reaſon he made no diſtinction of Men, but preferred to be Secretaries and other Employments, Perſons of no Education nor Ability, and he was ſerved accordingly, their Actions being as much derided and ſcorned as their Perſons. His Treaſury he kept full, but the Doors thereof faſt locked. Of Gold Coin Baſilius his management of affairs.

Zonaras.

And Character.

Coin alone he was reported to have two Hundred thouſand Talents in his Coffers; beſides of thoſe of other Metals, Summs not to be counted, and vaſt quantities of Pearls and Gemms, none of which he ever uſed or wore but when he gave Audience to Ambaſſadours, or on high Feſtivals. In the management of his Wars he was of various humour, as the ſeveral Diverſities of Accidents wrought upon him, in time of Peace and Reſt more earneſt, and vehement than ordinary. He endeavoured to conceal his Paſſion; but eaſie Provocation would diſcover it to the Coſt and Pain of Delinquents, againſt whom he was ſevere, reſolute, and inexorable after Sentence paſſed. This was his natural Temper and Diſpoſition throughout the Courſe of his Reign, which was both long and full of Action, as we ſhall farther ſee.

The Church of our Saviour's Sepulchre at Jeruſalem deſtroyed.

Glaber.

Guil. Tyrius.

A hard Winter and dreadfull Earthquake.

The Lombards revolt from the Romans.

Δυνάστης γὰρ τις τῶν ἐποίκων τοῦ Βαρέως τοὔνομα Μέλης, παραθήξας τὸν ἐν Λογγιβάρδᾳ λαὸν, ὅπλα κατὰ Ρωμαίων αἴρει. Cedrenus.

72. In the thirty fifth year thereof and the eighth Indiction, Azizius the Prince of Egypt for very ſlight Cauſes, and not worthy the mentioning as our Greek Writers relate, breaking the League betwixt the Romans and himſelf, deſtroyed the ſumptuous and beautifull Church of our Saviour's Sepulchre at Jeruſalem, together with the Monaſteries, the Monks whereof he cauſed to be driven away. Another Hiſtorian will have this done by the Prince of Babylon, induced thereto by the cunning and malitious Inſinuations of the Jews, who from Orleance in France, ſent Letters to him written in Hebrew Characters, whereby they perſwaded him that by reaſon of the vaſt Confluence of Chriſtians to Jeruſalem, he was in danger of looſing his Principality. Another calls this Prince Homer, Prince of the Saracens, and theſe Latine Hiſtorians fix this Action at the ſeventh Indiction, the preceding year, moreover adding what greater Maſſacres were made of the Jews, in all Places upon diſcovery of the Treachery, with other matters thereon depending more proper for to be related with Eccleſiaſtical matters. A very hard Winter followed, wherein all Waters were frozen up, the Sea aſwell as Rivers and Fenns, and in January happened a moſt dreadfull Earthquake (the ſtopping of the pores of the Earth, producing the ſame Effects of diſturbance in it, as the Retention of fuliginous Vapours doth in the Body of Man) which continued by Fits till the Ninth of March, on which Day it cauſed to tumble down the Cupoloes of the Church of the Forty Saints, and of the Church of All Saints at Conſtantinople, beſides much miſchief done both there and in the Provinces. This was thought to preſage thoſe motions which preſently followed in Italy, where by the perſwaſions of one Meles a powerfull man in thoſe Parts, the Lombards took Arms againſt the Romans. The Emperour ſent to reduce and quiet them, Baſilius Argyrus, and Contoleo, the one Governour of Samus, and the other of Ciphallenia; but Meles gave them a very notable defeat, killed many of their Men, and the reſt forced to an ignominious flight. Thus the Lombards revolted from the Romans, as our Authours word it, by which you muſt underſtand, as they ever do thoſe that had relation to New Rome, or rather thoſe that were Emperours and Subjects of that Roman Empire which ſtill remained unaltered, and unconquered in thoſe Parts, although Rome it ſelf the firſt Seat thereof, with moſt of the Provinces about it had run a quite contrary Fortune through ſeveral Hands; which quite altering the Property, our Greek Writers contend, that the Weſtern Empire fell with Auguſtulus, and what after happened could not make a ſufficient Title, neither for an Empire nor Emperour.

Another expedition into Bulgaria.

Obtaining a Victory.

73. Notwithſtanding theſe things Baſilius, every year made an Inrode into Bulgaria, waſting all the Countrey as he paſſed. Samuel had received ſo many Defeats, that he durſt not venture any more to fight; but indeavoured by Bulwarks and Trenches to intercept his way in the ſtraits of Cimba Longus and Cleidius, where he alſo placed a ſtrong Guard. And this Guard having the Advantage of the Ditch, and the height of the ground, ſo effectually made reſiſtence, that the Emperour deſpaired of breaking through, till Nicephorus Xiphias the Governour of Philippopolis, found out the means which in ſuch like caſes had ever ſucceeded. He adviſed him to remit none of his Intention and Earneſtneſs in his indeavour to force the Paſſage, while in the mean time he would with a convenient Party get over the Hill, that lay to the South called Balathiſta, and come upon the Back of the Enemy, whom he could thereby quickly conſtrain to quit his Poſt. This, with much difficulty having paſſed over ſo high and ſteep an Hill, he effected on the ninth Day of July in the twelfth Indiction, ſo that putting the Bulgarians to flight, Baſilius had eaſie entrance, and gave the Chace. Many were killed and many taken. Samuel himſelf hardly eſcaped by the great Valour and Conduct of his Son, who made as fair a Retreat as the Condition they were in would permit, and after many facings about and renewed skirmiſhes, horſed his Father and carried him off into the Caſtle of Prilapus. Of all the Priſoners to the Number, it's ſaid, of fifteen thouſand the Emperour cauſed the Eyes to be put out, and to every Hundred aſſigned a man that had one Eye left, under conduct of which Leaders he ſent them away to Samuel, who beholding ſuch a Spectacle coming to him in ſuch Rank and Order was not able to bear up againſt ſo great a Calamity, but inſtantly fell down in a ſwoon. Thoſe that were by with Spirits, and other things at hand, did what they could to recover him, and he came to himſelf again, and asked for ſome cold Water. Which having drunk, he fell into a Cardiogmus, or Pain and Faintneſs at his Stomach, and died of it two Days after.

Baſilius puts out the Eyes of 1500. ſending them to Samuel, who thereupon dies.

Gabriel ſucceeds him.

But is kill'd by John.

Baſilius purſues his Victory.

At length comes to Theſſalonica.

74. Gabriel who was alſo ſirnamed Romanus his Son, by a Captive Woman of Lariſſa, ſucceeded him, one ſuperiour to him in ſtrength of Body, but in that of mind far inferiour. When he had not reigned all-out a year, he was as he went out to hunt, killed by John Bladiſthlabus the Son of Aaron, whoſe Life he had once preſerved. But before this happened, one Neſtoritzas was ſent by Samuel, with a conſiderable Force into Theſſalonica, in the Government of which City, one Theophylact Botaniata had ſucceeded David Arianita. This Theophylact with his Son Michael, ſallied out againſt him, put him to flight, and having got much Plunder in his Camp, then went to the Emperour as he lay in the Straits. Having paſſed the Straits and followed the Chace after Samuel, as far as he thought convenient, Baſilius took in a Caſtle called Matzucius, and then paſſed on toward Strumpitza, from which place deſirous to have a way cleared to Theſſalonica, he put Theophylact upon that task, to clear the Hills of Fortreſſes, and open the ways through the Woods, and he undertook the work with all Alacrity, and proſecuted it with diligence, but was intrapped and compaſſed by the Enemy, in a place where there was neither means of eſcaping, nor good opportunity to fight, and cut off with moſt of his Men. The Emperour much troubled at the News durſt not proceed but retreated, and in his way had a very ſtrong Caſtle called Melenicus, through the powerfull Oratory of Sergius an Eunuch, whom he employed to the Garriſon Souldiers, delivered up into his Hands. Having kindly entertained thoſe that gave it up, and therein put a ſtrong Party of his own Men, he removed to Moſynopolis, where on the four and twentieth Day of October, he heard of Samuel's death. Thence marching to Theſſalonica, he moved into Pelagonia without doing any harm to the Countrey, ſave that he burnt Buteliana the Palace of Gabriel, and took in the Caſtles of Prilapus and Stypeius. Then paſſed he the River Tzerna, with Boats and Bladders as he could and came to Budena, whence on the Ninth day of January, he arrived at Theſſalonica.

Another invaſion into Bulgaria.

Taking ſeveral of the Noblemen of the Countrey.

Upon which they pretend to ſubmit to the Emperour.

75. At the beginning of Spring he again invaded Bulgaria, where having recovered the Caſtle of Budena which had revolted, he cauſed two Caſtles to be built in the middle of the Straits, one by the Name of Cardia, and another by that of St. Elias, and returned to Theſſalonica. As he here lay, one Romanus Cheirotmetus brought him Letters from Gabriel, wherein he promiſed to turn his Subject and Vaſſal; but he giving no credit to them, ſent Xiphias and Conſtantine Diogenes at preſent the Governour of Theſſalonica, with an Army into the Countrey of the Moglenians, which having waſted and laid Siege to the City, he himſelf came up with the reſt of the Forces, and by a Ditch cauſed the River to be drained from the Walls, the Foundations whereof when he had undermined the Inhabitants with Lamentations and Prayers, gave up what they could not keep. Therein were taken Domitianus Caucanus, the principal Councillour of Gabriel, with Elitzes the chief Man of the Countrey, beſides many other Noblemen, and a multitude of the inferiour ſort of Souldiers, of which ſuch as were fit for ſervice he tranſported to Aſpracania, and cauſed to be burnt a Neighbouring Caſtle called Natia. On the fifth day after came Cheirotmetus, bringing with him ſome of the Servants of John Bladiſthlabus, the Son of Aaron, with Letters to the Emperour, wherein he ſignified that he had taken away the Life of Gabriel, and that the Kingdom of Bulgaria, now was reverted to him who ſhould own himſelf his Subject and Vaſſal. Baſilius returned him an Anſwer in Golden Characters, after which within a little time Cheirotmetus returned and brought with him not onely Letters from John, but from the Bulgarians who owned themſelves the Emperour's Subjects. And to him came Caucanus, the Brother of Domitian Caucanus lately mentioned, and was honourably entertained.

76. But

Another Expedition into Bulgaria.

76. But for all this the Emperour being aſſured, that John dealt deceitfully with him, and was practiſing matters quite contrary to his Ingagements returned into Bulgaria, and waſting the Countrey of Oſtrobus, Goſens and Pelagonia, put out the Eyes of as many of the Inhabitants as he took. He proceeded to Achris, the Seat of the Bulgarian Princes, which having taken and ſetled all things there, he reſolved to go to Dyrrachium, where matters very much required his Preſence. So long as Trymalia, and the nearer Parts of Servia continued under the Government of Bladimere the Son-in-Law of Samuel, all things were there in repoſe, for he was a man very juſt, and a great lover of Peace and Vertue, but he being (through the Treachery of David the Archbiſhop) perſidiouſly murthered by his Command, after Gabriel's Death all were in great confuſion and diſorder, John ſometimes by his Officers, and otherwhiles in his own Perſon falling upon the City. The Emperour purpoſed to viſit them again, but for this time was prevented of his Journey upon this unpleaſing occaſion. He had left behind him a ſtrong Party to haraſs all the Parts of Pelagonia, all which the Bulgarians having drawn into an Ambuſh, cut them off with their Commanders, being headed by Ibatzes a man of great Nobility, and as great Valour amongſt them. Baſilius much concerned for this ignominious loſs, returns into Pelagonia in purſuit of this Ibatzes, and from Theſſalonica proceeds to Moſynopolis. He ſends David Arianita, with a ſufficient Power to attacque Strunpitza, who in room of it takes another Caſtle called Thermitza. Another Party he diſpatches away under command of Xiphias, to take in the ſeveral Forts of Triaditza, and all thoſe in the plain he took together with a Fort which they called Boion.

The Region of Chatzaria ſubdued.

Upper Media put into the Emperour's Hands.

77. In January the Emperour returned to Conſtantinople, and thence ſent a Fleet into Chatzaria commanded by Mongus the Son of Andronicus Ducas the Lydian, who by the aſſiſtence of Sphengus the Brother of Bladimer, who married Baſilius his Siſter, ſubdued that Region, having taken Tzulus the Prince thereof in the firſt Conflict. At the ſame time Senacherrimus the Prince of the upper Media (afterward called Aſpracavia) not able to reſiſt the Saracens who preſſed ſorely upon him, gave up himſelf, his Family and Countrey into the Emperour's Hands. Hereupon for a reward he was made a Patritian, and in lieu of his quitted Dominion received the Cities of Sebaſtea, Lariſſa and Abara, with other large Revenues. Of Aſpracavia was made Governour, Baſilius Argyrus the Patritian, who for his ill adminiſtration or bad ſucceſs was not long after put out of Command, and Nicephorus Comnenus was ſent his Succeſſour, who partly by force and partly by perſwaſion brought the Countrey to ſubmit. But all other Deſigns, Expeditions and Acceſſions ſeemed to the Emperour of no value, ſo long as Bulgaria remained unconquered, which having invaded ſo often in his own Perſon, he was much concerned in honour to have the work perfected, and for that purpoſe could give himſelf but little reſt. This ſame year being the fourteenth Indiction, he marched again into Triaditza, where he laid ſiege to the Caſtle of Pernicus, which he lay before and violently attacqued for eighty days together, but thoſe within as earneſtly and pertinaciouſly making reſiſtence after much loſs of his men, he was forced to riſe, and departed to Moſynopolis. Here having wintred and refreſhed his Army, in Spring again he breaks into Bulgaria, where he takes a Caſtle and gets great booty out of Pelagonia, but having in vain attacqued the City of Caſtoria, he retreats. That which moved him ſo to doe, was the Intelligence he had receiv'd, that Cracas was joyned with John having a vaſt Army, and that being aſſiſted by the Patzinacæ, they were reſolved to make an Inrode into the Territories of the Empire. Diſturbed at this report he retired, but in his way took and burnt the Caſtle of Boſograda, relieved Beræa, and having demoliſhed ſeveral other Forts, then made an Halt, having now received more welcome News, how that the deſigned Expedition of John and Cracas was come to nothing, the Patzinacæ refuſing to join with them.

Bulgaria once more invaded by the Emperour.

78. However proceeding in his Return, after this little Pauſe he took by ſtorm the Caſtle Setæna, where had been laid up much Corn, which being removed he commanded Fire to be ſet to the Place. Now hearing that John was not far off, he ſent againſt him the Cohorts of the Schools (ſo they termed them) of the Eaſt, and of the Theſſalonicians under Command of Conſtantine Diogenes, who was either not ſo wary, or had not ſo good intelligence as the Emperour. For, John had placed an Ambuſh for them, which Baſilius underſtanding and ſolicitous for his men rode on faſt before, bidding all ſuch as were Souldiers to follow him, which being perceived by thoſe that John had ſent out, they fled in great fear to their Camp, making much Noiſe with theſe words Bezeite Tſæſar, by which we

John, Prince of the Bulgarians routed.

Is afterward ſlain,

And the Countrey delivered up to Baſilius the Emperour.

ſuppoſe was meant Runne, here's Cæſar, (as moſt Nations Termed him) or the Emperour. John and all his Army thus putting themſelves to the Rout, Diogenes and his Men purſued them, did great Execution, and took the Horſes and Baggage of John with one of his Kinſmen, which done the Emperour returned to Bodena and ſo home to Conſtantinople on the ninth of January, the fifteenth Indiction, and the two and fortieth year of his Reign. John being by his retreat eaſed much of his fears, in confidence of his good fortune goes againſt Dyrrachium, where ingaging in fight he is ſlain, uncertain by whom, after he had born the Title of Prince or King of the Bulgarians two years and five Months. The Emperour was no ſooner certified of his death by the Governour of that City but rather flew than went to Bulgaria in hope that the long looked for Prey would now fall into his Hands. And ſo far good fortune complied with his Wiſhes, that when he was come on his way no farther than Conſtantinople the Brother and Son of the famous Cracras, ſo often mentioned, there met him to give up Pernicus and five and thirty Caſtles more, whom he courteouſly received, and having admitted Cracras to the Dignity of a Patritian, then held on his way to Moſynopolis. Thither came Ambaſſadours both from Pelagoma, Morobiſdus and Lipenius to give up other Cities; and when he had reached Serræ there Cracras himſelf met him with the Deputies of thoſe that yielded up the five and thirty Caſtles, and were kindly entertained. And hither came alſo Dragomuzus to ſurrender Strumpitza, and was alſo made a Patritian, becauſe he brought along with him John the Governour of Chaldia, who being taken Priſoner by Samuel had continued in Priſon two and twenty years.

Who receives his new Subjects with great kindneſs.

79. When the Emperour drew near to Strumpitza, David the Archbiſhop of Bulgaria met him with Letters from Mary the Widow of John which hinted that on certain conditions ſhe was willing to quit all pretences to Bulgaria. Here alſo met him Bogdanus the Lord of the Caſtles that ſtood farther within the Countrey, who alſo received the Dignity of a Patritian having formerly held with the Emperour, and killed for this purpoſe his own Father-in-Law. He proceeded now as far as Scopia, in which leaving a ſtrong Garriſon, he returned by the Caſtles of Stipeius and Proſacus being every where welcom'd with the Prayers and well-wiſhes of his new Subjects. Then he went to Achris where he was received with the lucky Acclamations of the People. This Achris was ſituate upon an high Hill near to a vaſt Lake out of which the River Drinus iſſuing toward the North, after no long ſpace turneth Weſtward and entreth Ionium (by which the Hiſtorian ſeems to mean the Countrey lying upon the Adriatick Sea) near the Caſtle Iliſſus. The Emperour now ſeized on the Treaſure of the Bulgarian Princes which was very great, as beſides other things ſeveral Rich Crowns adorned with Pearl, and an hundred Centenaries of Gold which he beſtowed as a Donative upon his Souldiers. Returning to his Camp he there received the Widow of John Bladiſthlabus with three Sons and ſix Daughters: and ſhe brought along with her a Baſtard Son of Samuel, and two Daughters of Radomere beſides ſix Sons one of which had his Eyes put out by John at ſuch time as he ſlew Radomere with his Wiſe and his Son-in-Law. She had other three Sons by John; but they were fled into the Hill Tinorus, one of the Tops of the Ceraunick Mountains, where much preſſed with difficulties by reaſon that the Emperour had given order to beſet the Mountain they ſent to him to yield, and within a while came to him as he lay at Diabolis in his Journey from the Lake Preſpa, where on a Tribunal erected for this purpoſe he kindly received them, and comforting them with moſt gentle words honoured Proſranus, who ſeems to have been the Eldeſt, with the Dignity of Magiſter, and the reſt with that of Patritians. And hither was brought, whom it moſt concerned him to ſee, Ibatzes deprived of his ſight; how and by whom, it's not an unpleaſant Story to relate.

Ibatzas onely ſtanding out.

80. Bladiſthlabus being dead, and his Wife and Children with all the Nobility having yielded themſelves and Countrey into the Emperour's hands, he alone refuſed to comply with the time and preſent poſture of Affairs, and ſeized upon a Mountain moſt difficult of acceſs. (Some called it Brochotus, others Proniſta) where was a neat Caſtle of the Bulgarian Princes, with Gardens and other things of ſolace and divertiſement. This in no little meaſure perplexed the Emperour, who had ſufficient cauſe, by reaſon of the Man's Qualifications, to ſuſpect the conſequence of this unexpected Uſurpation. “ He omitted his Journey as he had “ intended, and turning Southward, ſpent ſome time in ſoliciting him by Letters “ to conſider what he did, and not to expoſe himſelf to certain deſtruction by enterprizing ſo impoſſible a thing on his own Head without any advice or aſſiſtence, “ to which he anſwered ambiguouſly, drawing out the time in length and in expectation, “ pectation, he held Baſilius againſt his will five and fifty days at Diabolis. The care and anxiety the Emperour was in being taken notice of by Euſtathius Daphomelus a Patritian, whom he had lately preferred to the Government of Achris, he reſolved upon a ſtrange courſe, to rid him of this trouble, which he communicated to none but two of his Servants whom he could truſt, and he knew would ſtand by him in any undertaking. The Feaſt of the Aſſumption of our Lady was ſolemnly obſerved by Ibatzes, and to it were invited as well ſtrangers as Neighbours, and to it though not invited Daphnomelus would go, and being diſcovered by the Sentinels, he openly declared who he was, and ſent to let Ibatzes know that he was come to be merry with him. He wondred to hear that one ſhould come of his own accord, and put himſelf into an Enemies Hands, but he bad them bring him in and very kindly entertained him. Morning Prayer being over, and all others gone to their Appartments, he went to him and deſired that they two might diſcourſe in ſome convenient and ſecret place, for he had a matter of great importance, and which was for his own good to Communicate to him.

But is reduced by the valour and cunning of Euſtathius Daphnomelus.

81. Ibatzes ſuſpecting nothing but that he would join with him in his Rebellion, led him into an Orchard very thick beſet with Trees, ſo that they could ſcarcely either be ſeen or heard, whither being come Euſtathius being ſtrong and nimble, and watching an advantage ſtruck up his Heels, ſet his Knee upon his Breaſt, ſtopped his Mouth, and called his two Men who watched their motions conſtantly for this purpoſe. They thruſting their Cloths into his Mouth, forced both his Eyes out of his Head, which done they let him goe, and all three with their drawn Swords, got up into one of the higheſt Chambers in the Houſe, expecting what inſtantly followed. For aſſoon as the fact was divulged, a great multitude came running together, ſome with Swords, ſome with Spears, others with Bows, not a few with Stones, ſome with Wood, others with Fire, and others with other Combuſtible matter, Crying out cut their Throats, Burn them, Tear them Limb from Limb, Stone them, let no Body ſpare the Villains. Euſtathius ſeeing and hearing this could have ſmall hope to eſcape their fury, yet adviſed his Men not to let fall their Courage, nor by any means to reſign themſelves into their hands who would moſt certainly tear them in pieces in this Rage. “ Putting his Head out of a Window by the motion of his hand he procured ſilence, and then told them that “ for his part there had not been the leaſt enmity or grudge betwixt Ibatzes and “ him, the one being a Bulgarian and the other a Roman, as they ſhould judge, “ being born not in Thrace or Macedonia, neighbouring Countries, but in Aſia the “ leſs at a very great diſtance from Bulgaria. Therefore all that were wiſe a- “ mongſt them, muſt needs conclude that it muſt needs be ſome extraordinary “ thing that had put him upon ſuch an enterprize, and that nothing but Neceſ- “ ſity it ſelf could have engaged him in ſo dangerous an Attempt. He told them “ that what was done, was done by the Command of the Emperour, who had “ onely made uſe therein of his hands; and therefore if they were reſolved to kill “ him, kill him they might, he was in their power, yet reſolved with his Ser- “ vants to ſell his life at as dear a rate as he could, and fight it out to the laſt “ Breath. If they killed them, as it was no Maſtery being ſo many to ſo few, “ they ſhould not be unhappy in their death leaving behind them ſo powerfull “ an Avenger, againſt whom as it ſeemed they were reſolved to ſtruggle as long as “ poſſibly they could. This Speech eſpecially the dread they had of the Emperour therein mentioned produced ſuch an Alteration in their minds, that they all ſhrunk away by degrees, and the wiſer ſort wiſhed him Proſperity, and promiſed obedience. Euſtathius, then without any oppoſition carried away Ibatzes to the Emperour. He rewarded this notable ſervice with the Government of Dyrrachium and all the movable goods of Ibatzes, who was committed unto Cuſtody.

82. At the ſame time Nicolitzas who had been ſo often taken and ſo often diſmiſſed, having lurked in the Mountains, and been forſaken of well-nigh all his Men (who were frighted by a Company, ſent on purpoſe to hunt him out) of his own accord came to the Camp, and declared it was with Reſolution to yield himſelf to the Emperour, who would not ſee him but gave order that he ſhould be kept Priſoner at Theſſalonica. Baſilius having all things according to his Wiſh in thoſe Parts, and given leave to as many Romans as he had found in Captivity either here to remain or to follow him, removed to Caſtoria. Here were brought to his preſence two Daughters of Samuel; which beholding Mary, the Widow of John, to ſtand by him, preſently flew in her Face, and had made an end of her, if the Emperour himſelf had not interpoſed, and by good words mitigated their wrath, promiſing Baſilius having viſited moſt places of Bulgaria, miſing them alſo to provide well for them. On Mary he conferred the Honour of Zoſte, and ſent her with her Sons to Conſtantinople. Then by the Induſtry of Xiphias, did he domoliſh all the Caſtles in Serviæ and Soſcus, and came to the Caſtle of Stages, where Elamagus Prince of the Belegradi preſented himſelf to him in a ſervile Habit with his aſſiſtents. Thence proceeding towards Athens, in his paſſage thorough Zetunium, he beheld with Admiration the Bones of thoſe Bulgarians, that were ſlain in the Defeat given to Samuel by Nicephorus, and much more the Wall called Scelos built on Thermopylæ, at a Place called Rupena to reſtrain the Bulgarians. Arriving at Athens, he gave Thanks to our Lady for his good Succeſs, and offered very largely in the Church.

Returns in Triumph to Conſtantinople.

And thence returned to Conſtantinople, which he entred in Triumph through the great Doors of the Golden Gate, with a Golden creſted Crown called Tuphus (from the pride, ſaith Zonaras, of thoſe that wore this kind) Mary with the Daughters of Samuel, and the reſt of the Bulgarians going before him. With the Shouts and Acclamations of the People he went to the Great Church, and there having given thanks to Almighty God, went and repoſed himſelf in the Palace. This Conqueſt of Bulgaria happened in the ſecond Indiction, the forty fourth year of Baſilius and Conſtantine. A. D. 1019.

83. After his Return Sergius the Patriarch was very earneſt with him, to make good what he had promiſed in caſe of this Conqueſt, that he would remit the Allelengyum, but could not prevail.

The Chorbati give up themſelves.

His mind was wholly bent upon Covetouſneſs and Dominion, to gratifie which immediately after his Succeſs in Bulgaria, the Neighbouring Nation of the Chorbati, by the Hands of their two Princes, Brothers, gave up themſelves. There onely remained Sermo the Lord of Sermium, who refuſed to row by this great ſtream, and therefore ſpeedily made ſhipwreck of his life and all. Conſtantine Diogenes Governour of the Neighbouring Province, ſent to him to deſire Conference, and if he feared any deceit or Ambuſh, he deſired that each ſhould come onely with three Servants in his Company to the Rivers ſide that ran by them.

Sermium taken.

Sermo agreed and met him, but when he expected a Diſcourſe, Diogenes prevented it by thruſting a Dagger into his ſide, which he had hid in his Coat, and inſtantly ſlew him, which his Servants ſeeing fled as faſt as they could, leſt they ſhould be ſerv'd in the ſame manner. Then gathering together ſuch Forces as he commanded, he went to Sermium, which partly by threats and partly by promiſes he brought the Widow to ſurrender, which done ſhe was ſent away and married to one of the Principal Citizens of Conſtantinople; and Diogenes was made Governour of the newly (however) gained Territory for his pains. In the mean time, to make himſelf acceptable by ſomething how little ſoever, Baſilius ſupplies the City abundantly with water, by cleanſing and repairing the Aqueduct of Valentinian.

The Abaſgians breaking the League, Baſilius marches againſt them.

But his thoughts were quickly diverted from Employments of this Nature by a meſſage brought, that George the Prince of the Abaſgians had broken the League betwixt them, and invaded in hoſtile manner the adjacent Territories of the Empire. He preſently marched againſt him with a complete Army, leaving behind him Xiphias and Nicephorus the Son of Bardas Phocas both Patritians.

84. Now whether they took it ill that they were left behind, or for other more tempting reaſons, they got together a power of men, and broke out into Rebellion. This much diſordered the Army, and the Emperour more out of fear that they ſhould be beſet with the Rebels on one ſide, and on the other by the Abaſgians, with whom it was reported, that they held ſecret Intelligence. Baſilius in this ſtrait wrote Letters both to Xiphias and Phocas, but gave order to the meſſenger ſo to deliver them, that the one ſhould not know of any the other received.

A Rebellion at home but ſuppreſſed and puniſhed.

However upon the receit of them, Phocas was ſo free as to reade his to Xiphias, who denying that he received any, on a certain day ſent for the other to ſpeak with him, and when he came, having before hand laid his ſnares, took away his Life. Which the Emperour having underſtood, ſent againſt Xiphias Theophylact, the Son of Damianus Delaſſenus who took him Priſoner, and ſent him to Conſtantinople, to John the Prothonotary who ſhaved him, and made him a Monk in the Iſland of Antigonus.

The Abaſgians forced to ſubmit.

In this manner, Baſilius freed from all danger of this Rebellion gave battel to the Abaſgians, but with no Succeſs at firſt; but in a ſecond Conflict which happened on the eleventh of September, and the ſixth Indiction, Liparites their General fell, and with him the greateſt part of their Army. George fled into the more diſtant Mountains of Iberia, whence ſhortly after he ſent and made his Peace, ſubmitting to what Terms the Emperour pleaſed to impoſe, and gave up for an Hoſtage his Son Pancratius, whom Baſilius honoured with the Dignity of Magiſter, and ſo departed home.

He animadverts upon the Accomplices of the Arch-rebels.

85. There did he animadvert upon the Accomplices of Phocas and Xiphias, by confiſcating their Eſtates, and condemning them to Priſon; none he put to death but Pherſa a Patritian, who had firſt of all ſided with the Rebels, had killed four Officers of the Neighbouring Princes, and beheaded one of the Emperour's Eunuchs with his own Hands. There was alſo one of the Emperour's Chamber caſt to the Lions, for attempting to poiſon him for the ſake of Xiphias. A little before this, Anne the Siſter of Baſilius, and a Widow of Bladimer the Roſſian Prince died, after whoſe deceaſe Chryſochir a Kinſman of her Husbands, put Eight hundred men on board, and with them came to Conſtantinople, pretending he would ſerve the Emperour. But he requiring that he ſhould lay down his Arms, and then to ask what he pleaſed, he refuſed to doe it, and paſſing over the Propontis went to Abydus, where he defeated eaſily him that lay there for defence of the Coaſts, and then went to Lemnus, where he and all his Men were cut off deceitfully by the Fleet of the Cibyrræotæ, David of Achris the Governour of Samus, and Nicephorus Cabaſila the Commander at Theſſalonica. After this Baſilius prepared for an Expedition into Sicily, and for that purpoſe ſent before Oreſtes one of his moſt faithfull Eunuchs, with great Forces. But he was prevented by his Deſtiny from following, dying in the Month of December, and the Ninth Indiction, after he had lived Seventy ſaith Cedrenus, Seventy two years ſaith Zonaras, and born the Title of Emperour as many, but reigned alone in effect, though his Brother alſo had the Name the ſpace of fifty. He left his Brother his Succeſſour, and deſired him to ſee him buried in the Church of St. John the Evangeliſt and Divine at the Hebdomus, who therein fulfilled his will.

Preparing for an expedition into Sicily Baſilius dies.

Conſtantine X ſole Emperour.

86. Conſtantine the Tenth of that Name, came to the management of the Empire in the Ninth Indiction, A. D. 1026, and therein did little or no good to it, but much miſchief. Being a man of moſt depraved manners, he neither acted, nor thought any thing worthy of his Place and Dignity. His Delight was in running Races, jeſting with looſe and ſilly drolling Perſons, and drinking whole Nights together, and thus was willing to ſpend his time, while his Brother (who was content it ſhould be ſo) attended Affairs of State, and increaſed both the Reputation and Bounds of the Empire. In chuſing of his Officers (the great Tryal and Indication of a Prince) he had onely reſpect to thoſe of his own humour, ſuch vertuous Perſons as himſelf, drunken Slaves and the moſt profligate Wretches, no Man either for his Birth, Abilities or Education, being at all conſidered. Nicholas, the chief Man of his Chamberlains, he made Domeſtick of the Schools, and of his Bedchamber. Nicephorus the next after him Protoveſtiarius, and Simeon who was in the third Place his Drungarius Biglæ. One Euſtathius far inferiour to theſe, he created Captain of the Aſſociates. To one Spondyles he gave the Government of Antioch, and that of Iberia to one Nicetas, both Perſons very infamous. Theſe Miniſters under ſuch a Prince undid all, bringing all things into diſorder, and almoſt ruinated the Empire, which ſince the time of Romanus, had ſo exceedingly flouriſhed under Nicephorus Zimiſces and Baſilius. And not onely did he prefer unworthy, and ſcandalous Perſons, but every man eminent for any worth or goodneſs, aſmuch as in him lay, he laboured to diſgrace and undoe, eſpecially the moſt Noble or Illuſtrious Perſons. He pulled out the Eyes of Conſtantine a Patritian, Son of the Magiſter Michael Burtzas, having born him malice, for diſcovering his naughty Courſes to his Brother. And other moſt excellent Perſons he blinded, as we ſhall ſee; for as he began ſo he proceeded, the ſame Cauſes ever producing the ſame effects, when not hindred by Incapacity of the Subjects, or the Intervention of more powerfull Accidents.

His Management of Affairs.

87. At this time Nicephorus Comnanus governed Aſpracania (Baſpracania or Baſprania as it is variouſly written) a Man very wiſe, and as valiant as any of his time, with ſuch Succeſs, that he forced all his Neighbours to live quietly about him. But after ſome time finding his Souldiers begin to fail in their Courage againſt the Saracens, by all the means he could uſe, he endeavoured to reſuſcitate in them their wonted Courage, and upbraiding them much with the Alteration, procured them not onely to promiſe but to take a formal Oath, that they would not forſake, but ſtand by him to the laſt extremity againſt the Enemy. This being reported at Conſtantinople, Conſtantine and his effeminate Miniſters, incompetent Judges of matters relating to War or Fortitude, put him preſently out of command, and being ſent for up to the City he was condemned of Treaſon, or a deſigned Uſurpation, and had his Eyes put out, to the regret of all good men: and in the ſame ſort he dealt with Bardas a Patritian, deſcended from Bardas Condemning and putting out the Eyes of ſeveral Romans.

Phocas the Magiſter, whom he procured ſome of his Creatures to accuſe of a Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon. About the ſame time, George the Governour of Nawpactus, for his Folly commonly call'd Morogeorgius, by his perpetual Exactions and other Injuries ſo oppreſſed the Townſmen, that they broke out into a publick Rage againſt him, kill'd him and rifled his Houſe, for which Deed the Emperour not onely uſed great Cruelty in puniſhing the Authours of the Riot, but cauſed the Eyes of the Biſhop of the Place to be put out. There happened a Quarrel, and this was followed by a Combat betwixt Baſilius a Patritian, the Son of Romanus Sclerus, and Pruſianus the Bulgarian a Magiſter, and Captain of the Bucellarii, which judging to be a Crime no leſs than Treaſon, he baniſhed them both. Being told that Baſilius indeavoured to eſcape, he commanded his Eyes to be put out; and Baſianus when he expected the like meaſure, he moſt mercifully diſcharged. But he pull'd out the Eyes of Romanus Curcuas, who had married Pruſianus his Siſter, of Bogdanus, Gleba and Gudeles, and to give himſelf ſome diverſion by variety, cut out the Tongue of one Zacharias (poſſibly out of his wit to make him like the Prieſt of that Name, who was ſtruck dumb) pretending that they all had deſigns againſt him.

The Patzinacæ invading Bulgaria, are forced to return beyond Iſter.

A Great Drought.

The Saracens infeſting the Iſlands Cyclades are defeated.

Zoe Conſtantine's Daughter married to Romanus.

Conſtantine dies.

88. But to leave this odious Subject, let us ſee if we can find any other thing of publick Conſequence, and worthy the mentioning, in his Reign. In his firſt year the Patzinacæ broke into Bulgaria, and there did much miſchief, killing many of the People with ſeveral Officers and their Companies. Againſt them he created Diogenes the Governour of Sirmium, General of Bulgaria, who falling on them as they ſtragled, after much ſlaughter forced them to return beyond the Iſter. During his whole Reign there was a great Drought, which dried up both Fountains and Rivers. His Brother Baſilius, how hard and difficult ſoever in the caſe of the Allelengyum, yet herein was wont to gratifie the poorer ſort, that he did not exact Payments juſt when they were due, but bore with them till they could better doe it, ſo that at his death, the Tribute of two years was behind. But Conſtantine notwithſtanding the Drought, not onely when he came to the Government exacted all the Arrears, but forced the Payment alſo of three years to come, which not onely undid the Poor but much diſtreſſed the Rich, and thoſe that were not wont formerly to complain. And now did a Fleet of Saracens infeſt the Iſlands Cyclades, which was happily defeated and diſſipated by George Theodorocranus, the Governour of Samus, and Periboas, who commanded Chius, twelve Ships being taken. On the Ninth day of November in the twelfth Indiction, the Emperour fell ſuddenly ſick, and being given over by Phyſicians, then thought upon a Succeſſour. A meſſenger was ſent to fetch Conſtantine Delaſſenus, living then in Armenia, whom he deſigned to create Cæſar, and marry him to one of his Daughters. But Simeon ſo wrought out of his Love to Romanus Argyrus, that he altered his purpoſe, and another was ſent to bid Delaſſenus ſtay where he was. Romanus then was brought to Court, and leave given to chuſe whether he would looſe his Eyes or part with his Wiſe, and marrying the Daughter of the Emperour be declared Cæſar. He pauſed at it, but his Wife fearing what might happen to him, voluntarily ſhaved her ſelf and renounced the ſecular Life for the ſaving of his Eyes, and procuring him the Empire. Conſtantine had by Helena the Daughter of Alyni..s, an Eminent-Patritian, three Daughters; of which Eudocia the Eldeſt being disfigured by the Plague was turned Nun, and Theodora the youngeſt refuſed to marry Romanus, either becauſe they were too near a Kin, as ſhe pretended, or for that his lawfull Wife was yet living: but Zoe the ſecond was very well content to accept him for her Husband, and the matter of Kindred being diſcuſſed, and diſpenſed with by the Patriarch and Eccleſiaſticks, to her he was joyned in Marriage, and declared Emperour. The third day after the Wedding, Conſtantine died, when he had lived Seventy years and upward, and Reigned three wanting one Month.

Romanus and Zoe ſucceed.

89. Romanus the Fourth of that Name, beyond all his expectation, together with Zoe, took Poſſeſſion of the Empire in the twelfth Indiction, A. D. 1028. and at his beginning was very acceptable to his Subjects, though he had not come after ſuch a Predeceſſour. For he not onely took away the Allelengyum, ſo much complained of, which Cedrenus tells us (I know not what ground there is to believe him) Conſtantine would have done, had he not by death been prevented, but he increaſed the Salaries wont to be paid out of the publick Treaſury to thoſe of the Quire of St. Sophia, diſcharged out of Priſon ſuch as were guilty of ſlighter Faults, and not onely paid the publick Debts, but thoſe of private Men, and redeemed the Captives out of Patzinacia. He did many good things relating to the Church not here to be diſcourſed of, relieved many that were in great poverty, or otherwiſe diſtreſſed, for the health of his Father-in-Law's Soul they tell us expended a great Sum of Money, and made reparation to ſuch as he had injured either in way of Honour or Fortune. Romanus Sclerus who had Married his Siſter and had loſt his Eyes by Command of Conſtantine, he promoted to the Dignity of a Magiſter, and recalled out of Baniſhment Nicephorus Xiphias, who was turned Monk: And now as reconciled again, God gave convenient Rain, and abundance of all fruits followed, eſpecially of Oil. But theſe Acts of mercy Romanus mixed with others of ſeverity, which being accompanied with Juſtice and publick ſafety, did not eclipſe but more ſet off the other. Pruſianus the Bulgarian for Conſpiring with Theodora the Siſter of the Empreſs, and affecting the Sovereignty was deprived of his ſight, and his Mother Zoſtica expelled the City. Conſtantine Diogenes who had Married the Emperour's Brother's Daughter, and was Governour of Sirmium being removed to the Command of Theſſalonica, was accuſed by Oreſtes, one that had ſerved Baſilius, of a purpoſe to rebell, and for that was ſent to govern the Thracians, where his Crime being clearly diſcovered, he was brought bound to Conſtantinople, and caſt into the Tower, and his Complices ſix or ſeven men of eminency were beaten, and then carried in diſgrace through the City into Baniſhment. Theodora was alſo baniſhed from Court to Petrium.

His kindneſs and Juſtice at firſt.

90. On the laſt day of October a Comet appeared, ſeeming to move from Weſt to Eaſt, and on the ſame day the Roman Intereſt ſuffered much damage, under Command of Michael Spondyles the Governour of Antioch. Great Rains alſo fell and continued to fall till March, which cauſed mighty Floods every where, by which, and the rottenneſs of Graſs, moſt Cattel periſhed, and becauſe that the Seed corrupted in the ground, great ſcarcity happened the following year. The Emperour to redeem much loſs and diſgrace, by this time ſuffered in Syria, reſolved upon an Expedition to Berrœa, ſending before his Siſters Husband Conſtantine Carentenus a Patritian, with a flying Company, to diſcover the Paſſages, and infeſt the Enemy, but not to hazard a Battel till his Arrival. While he prepares for his Journey it happens, that George the Prince of Abaſgia dies, whoſe Widow ſends away her Ambaſſadours to deſire he would renew the League made formerly with her Husband, and aſſign a Wife to her Son Pancratius, to which he willingly aſſenting, both renewed the League, and ſent Helena his Brother Baſilius his Daughter into Abaſgia to be Married to Pancratius, whom he honoured with the Title of Curopalates. Now Romanus haſtens his Preparation for Syria, the ſtate of which Countrey we muſt declare before we bring him thither by fetching matters a little higher. The Reader is to remember, that the Emperour Nicephorus very much inlarged the Bounds of the Empire, in Syria and Phœnicia, where he recovered moſt of the Cities, and that Zimiſces following on what was begun, extended its Dominion as far as Damaſcus. Baſilius after them, being at firſt employed in Civil Broils, and afterward wholly taken up with the Bulgarian War, neglected the Eaſtern Parts, which gave the Saracens opportunity to lay their Heads together and conſult, yet they openly attempted nothing during his Reign. But under the diſſolute Government of his Brother Conſtantine, they neglected not their Advantage, the moſt potent Cities of the Eaſt now caſting off the Roman Yoke, and aſſerting their liberty, and the Saracens openly ſet upon many places, took them, and put the Garriſon Souldiers to the Sword. Above all, the Governour of Berrœa (or Chalep as they call'd it) plaid his Pranks, by his frequent Incurſions ſorely diſtreſſing Antioch, and the adjoyning Roman Pale. Spondyles the Governour of Antioch, endeavoured to reſtrain him but came off with loſs and diſgrace. And he ſuffered himſelf to be overreached by one Aſaraptius an Arabian a Priſoner in that City. This man perceiving his fickle humour vaunted of great matters he both could and would perform for the Emperour againſt the Saracens, if he were but ſet at Liberty; and particularly ſhewed him a Platt of ground, on which if a Fort were but built and committed to his keeping, he doubted not but to doe wonderfull things. Spondyles not onely believed what he ſaid, but ſet him at Liberty, built a Fort in the place, and therein putting a thouſand men, gave him the Command of it, who now being where he would, entertained Intelligence with the Ameras of Tripolis, and with Tusbere the Prince of Ægypt his General, who ſent a Body of men, which he having received into the Caſtle, they put all the Garriſon to the Sword, and then received it from his Hands. After this the Saracens ranged up and down without controll. Romanus removed Spondyles, and put his Brother-in-Law Conſtantine Carentenus, lately ſaid to be ſent

He reſolves upon an Expedition into Syria.

The League with the Abuſgians renewed thitherward with an Army, into his place, reſolving to follow in Perſon and proſecute the War.

The Saracens of Berrœa offer Peace, which is refuſed by the Emperour.

Who marches on with his Army.

Which is conſumed with Thirſt.

91. He was ſcarcely got on his way as far as Philomilium, when Meſſengers were ſent to him from Berrœa with Preſents, to ask pardon for what was paſt, to promiſe him to return to their former obedience, and pay all the Tribute that was due. There were ſeveral excellent Warriours now with him in the Army, who earneſtly adviſed him to hearken to them, and accept their Submiſſion, and that for very weighty Reaſons, alledging, that in the Summer time Water was much wanting in Syria, that the Saracens were accuſtom'd to them, and could very well endure both Heat and Thirſt, but the Roman Souldiers could not, eſpecially being burthened with their heavy Armour. But Romanus, what his Predeceſſour had done in the like kind, was ſo tickled with a fancy of the great honour he ſhould obtain, that he would not liſten to them, but held on in his Expedition, and entring Syria, incamped before a Caſtle called Azaezium, two days journey diſtant from Berrœa. Now intent upon his buſineſs, he ſent out Leo Choroſphactes a Patritian, Captain of the Excubitores, to ſcout about, to watch the motions of the Enemy, and find out ſome fitter place whereon to fix; but he fell into the Ambuſh laid for him in the Plain, and his Party was all defeated. Incouraged herewith, the Saracens hindred his men from foraging, and knowing well enough their greateſt want, from fetching in any Water, which cauſed them out of mere neceſſity, and for vehement thirſt, to ſtraggle up and down, though with manifeſt danger of their lives, which uſually they loſt before they returned. To reſtrain and chaſtize their boldneſs Conſtantine Delaſſenus was ſent with a convenient Power of men; but very ſillily and cowardly managed the buſineſs, and ran back in great terrour to the Camp, which ſtruck all the reſt of the Army with ſuch Conſternation, that now no mention was made of any Battel, but every man conſidered how he might ſave one. And a Council of War being called, it was reſolved, that the next day they ſhould diſlodge and march to Antioch.

And endeavouring to reach Antioch is ſhamefully beaten.

But the Baggage is re-taken by one George, who for a Reward is made Captain of the lower Media.

Theoctiſtus ſent with an Army to take the Caſtle Menicus.

92. Accordingly when the day came, being the tenth of Auguſt, in the thirteenth Indiction, and the ſecond year of Romanus, all the Gates of the Camp were open'd, and they ſet forward for Antioch, moſt of them being ſick of the Gripes, and vexed with a violent Thirſt. They were no ſooner come into a place convenient, but the Arabians ſet upon them, againſt whom they never turned Head, nor made any reſiſtence, but the groſs of the Army running away moſt ſhamefully, ſome were taken, others killed, and more deſtroyed by being born down and trodden on by their Fellows, yet one Eunuch of the Emperours is ſaid very ſtoutly to have demeaned himſelf in fetching off both his Servants and Waggons which had been taken, and as for the Emperour himſelf he eſcaped, but that with great difficulty, by the Courage of his Guards, to Antioch, as he had deſigned. At the ſame time was one George Maniaces Governour of a Province in theſe Parts, called Telucha. To him came about eight hundred of the Saracens, after this flight of the Emperour and his Army, told him the Emperour was taken, his Army utterly defeated, and uſed what Rhetorick they were able, to perſwade him like a wiſe man to quit that Town, which he was not able to hold; if not, by Break of day he would be ſurrounded and miſerably deſtroyed. He ſeemed to take their Advice in good part, and ſent them out a great quantity of Meat and Drink praying them therewith to refreſh themſelves that Night, and promiſing in the Morning to come forth and deliver up Telupha and whatever was the Emperour's into their hands. They gave credit to his words, and ſetting their hearts at reſt, made uſe of what he had ſent them to exceſs, which being his Deſign, at Midnight he iſſued out and killed them all Drunk and aſleep as they lay. Two hundred and eighty Camels he took loaded with the rich Plunder of the late Encounter, and cauſing the Ears and Noſes of the ſlain to be cut off, he went and preſented them to the Emperour, who then in his Retreat was come as far as to the Houſe of Phocas in Cappadocia. He for a Reward made George Captain of the Lower Media. When he left Syria he made Simeon the Servant of Conſtantine his Father-in-Law Domeſtick of the Schools, and the Command of Antioch he gave to Nicetas a Miſtheia, giving it in charge to theſe two, that by all means they ſhould reduce the Caſtle Menicus, which Muſaraph had built. They attempted what he had enjoyned them, but Muſaraph breaking out upon them by Night, forced them to be gone, and burnt their Engines. This Romanus took in ſo evil part, that he created General with full power one Theoctiſtus the Protoſpatharian, one of his moſt truſty Servants, and the Captain of the Aſſociates, having raiſed him a great Army of Romans and other Nations together, gave him inſtructions to joyn with Pinzarach the Ameras of Tripolis, who had lately revolted from the Amermumnes of Ægypt, and fled to his protection, and to take in the Caſtle Menicus, which moſt of all did diſcontent him.

Which he performs.

An Army ſent into Italy which miſcarries.

Romanus much altered for the worſe.

93. One Tuſber a Turk, the General of Ægypt, did much diſtreſs Pinzarach, till hearing of the coming of Theoctiſtus he then returned home. And Muſaraph durſt not truſt to his new Caſtle, but deſerted it, and flying to the Mountains about Tripolis, was there found out and ſlain. The Caſtle was by his Brother's Son delivered up to Theoctiſtus with another called Argyrolaſtrum ſeated on a craggy Mountain, which done he returned back to Conſtantinople. At the ſame time one of his Brethren, a Protoſpatharian, Oreſtes, ſent formerly by Baſilius into Sicily, having no skill in matters of that Nature, for which he was ſent, managed them with very ill ſucceſs. His Army he ſuffered to be Idle and Luxurious, and when their Intemperance had caſt moſt of them into Diſeaſes of their Bowels, then did the Saracens (who had watched but for a convenient opportunity) ſet upon them and made great ſlaughter of them, to repair which loſs the Emperour raiſed a great Army out of Greece and Macedonia, and ſent it into Italy, the greateſt part of which alſo miſcarried, through the unskilfulneſs of the General. This ſame year in the fifteenth Indiction to make his Eſtate more ſecure, he cauſed Pruſianus to be ſhaven for a Monk, and removed his Mother out of the Monaſtery where ſhe was into Thrace, and Conſtantine Diogenes being taken out of the Town, he alſo conſtrained to take the Religious Tonſure and Habit. A great Alteration indeed was now obſerved, if not in the Humour yet in the Actions of Romanus, which were changed much for the worſe after his return out of Syria. To repair his Diſgrace there ſuſtained, inſtead of an Emperour, to uſe the Expreſſions of Zonaras, he turn'd an Exactour and bitter Inquiſitour, requiring old and out-worn Debts of the Fathers from the Children, which the length of time, it was expected, had utterly buried in Oblivion, upon which account many were driven from their Inheritances, and from having good Eſtates were forced to beg their Bread. Yet did he not bring any of this Money thus gotten into the Treaſury, but this and much more taken out of the publick Revenue he conſumed, building a ſtately Monaſtery and a Church to the Honour of our Lady, thus chopping and changing, pulling down and building up again. To Monks alſo he was very profuſe, aſſigning them whole Provinces and Cities, and theſe the moſt fat and fertile of all the Empire, which was not ſuitable to that ſort of life which theſe men ought to lead, but more fit for Delicate, Effeminate, and Voluptuous Perſons, as Zonaras obſerves.

The League renewed with the Ameras of Chalepe.

A Conſpiracy diſcovered.

The Roman Pale infeſted by the Arabians, Patzinacæ, and Saracens, which laſt came ſhort home.

94. In the fifteenth Indiction and the Month of September, came Amer the Son of the Ameras or Governour of Chalepe, with great Preſents to renew the Peace for that place, with promiſe to pay the accuſtomed Tribute; which Accord to aſcertain and ratifie, was ſent Theophylact an Athenian and Protoſpatharian, who renewed the League with that People. Zoe the Empreſs now went ſuddenly into Petrium, and there ſhaved her Siſter Theodora, and made her a Nun; there being no other way, as it was ſaid, to put an end to her Plots and Diſcontents. Romanus Married his Brothers Daughter to the Regulus of Armenia, with a great Portion, and prepared for another Expedition into Syria. As he was on his way at Meſenacta, Theophanes the Biſhop of Theſſalonica, diſcovered a Plot to the Empreſs of Conſtantine Diogenes and Theodora her Siſter, to fly into Illyricum and there to Uſurp the Imperial Dignity, to which two Biſhops were privy, the Metropolitan of Dyrrachium and the Biſhop of Peritheorium. Hereupon both Diogenes and the Biſhops were ſuddenly apprehended. Diogenes when in the Palace of Blachernæ he was examined, threw himſelf down headlong from the Wall, rather than he would diſcover his Friends, and was caſt out unburied amongſt ſuch as laid violent hands on themſelves: The Biſhops were ſent away to the Emperour, and by him were diſmiſſed. On the eight and twentieth of July, being Friday, a blazing Star was ſeen to traverſe the Heavens from South to North ſo big and ſhining, that it illuſtrated all the horizon. And a little after came News, that the Arabians had made an Inrode into Meſopotamia as far as Melitenæ, that the Patzinacas had paſſed Iſter and invaded Myſia, and the Saracens, (Arabians they are alſo called, theſe Names being uſed promiſcuouſly, had waſted all the Coaſts of Illyricum with Fire and Sword, and were got as far as Corcyra. The Iſſue of theſe Diſturbances was, that the two former ſorts of theſe Enemies having done what they came for, returned home unhurt, but the Saracens were ſorely beaten by the Inhabitants of Raguſium, and Nicephorus the Son of Carantenus then Governour of Nauplium, and having loſt the greater part of their Ships, as they returned, periſhed by Shipwreck in the Sicilian Sea.

A great Famine and Plague.

A terrible Earthquake.

The Saracens of Africk infeſt the Iſlands but are beaten.

Ægypt invaded by the Romans who return with great Booty.

Percris near Babylon taken by them.

Another Victory over the Saracens.

95. This very year ſo great a Famine and a Plague both raged through Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, Armenia and Honorias that the Inhabitants left their dwellings and ſought out other Habitations, whom the Emperour meeting as he returned from Meſanacta compoſed them to go Home again furniſhing them with Money and other neceſſaries; and they were much relieved by Michael the Biſhop of Ancyra who omitted nothing in his power for their ſupport. On the thirteenth of Auguſt happened a terrible Earthquake. On February the twenty eighth in the ſame year another Comet appeared paſſing from the North toward the South with a Noiſe and cracking, and was ſeen till the fifteenth of March, having as it were a Bow above it, in which Month alſo another Earthquake fell out. At the ſame time the Saracens of Africk with a Thouſand Veſſels and an infinite Number of Seamen and Souldiers aboard them fell upon the Iſlands. With part of which Nicephorus Carantenus ingaged, defeated them and ſent five hundred bound in Fetters to the Emperour. This ſame year George Maniaces the Protoſpatharian, who commanded the Coaſts upon Euphrates, by corrupting Salamenes a Turk the Governour of Edeſſa the City of Oſroena, got it into his Hands, from which he ſent a yearly Tribute of fifty pounds to Conſtantinople. So proſperous were the Affairs of Romanus abroad, whilſt at Home Baſilius Durus his Siſters Husband who had been deprived of his ſight by Conſtantine now Plotted againſt his Life, though ſince his coming to the Government he had conferred on him the Dignity of Magiſter, and otherwiſe been very kind to him; for which he and his Wife were expelled the City. Not long after the Emperour incouraged by the Revolt of the Ameras of Tripolis whom he ſent with a conſiderable Army into Syria, gave order to Tecneas a Protoſpatharian to make War upon Ægypt with his Fleet and invade the parts about Alexandria which he did with ſuch ſucceſs that he ſunk and burnt many Veſſels and returned loaden with very great Booty. In all other Quarters the Arms or fortune of Romanus was as proſperous though in one particular accompanied with a diſaſtre. One Alimus a Saracen, Governour of a Fort called Percris near to Babylon, delivered the place up to the Emperour, but ſent his Son to him expecting he ſhould beſides other gifts be ſent back dignified by the Title of a Patritian. But it ſo happened By reaſon of the Indiſpoſition of the Emperour that the young Man coming to Conſtantinople was wholly neglected, and no notice taken of him, which ſo inraged him that he returned to his Father and perſwaded him, if poſſible to recover the Fort into his own Hands. This, by entring into a confedaracy with the Neighbouring Perſians, and through the careleſneſs of Nicolas Chryſelius a Bulgarian to whom the Cuſtody of it had been committed, he eaſily did, and put to the Sword ſix Thouſand Roman Souldiers that then lay in Garriſon. Now Alimus thought himſelf ſufficiently revenged, when ſhortly after Nicetas Pegonites a Patritian being ſent into theſe Parts with an Army of Romans and Roſſians lays Siege to the Place, and with ſuch earneſtneſs and conſtancy inforces it, that he carries it by ſtrength, and therein kills both Alimus and his Son. The News hereof was the more welcome at Court becauſe there it met with an addreſs made by Alda the Widow of George ſometime Regulus of the Abaſgians, whereby ſhe delivered up a very ſtrong Caſtle call'd Anacuphe, for which Romanus inveſted her Son Demetrius with the Dignity of a Magiſter. And much about the ſame time Carantenus got another Victory over the Saracens ſix hundred of whom he ſent bound to the Emperour.

A terrible Earthquake and Famine which cauſeth Romanus to be very mercyfull and kind to his Subjects.

96. But the joy conceived for all this good ſucceſs was not long after allayed by the Terrour of an Earthquake which on the ſeventeenth day of February ſorely afflicted the Cities of Syria. And ſo great a famine followed throughout the Eaſt, by reaſon of multitudes of Locuſts which devoured all the Fruits of the Earth, eſpecially in Cappadocia, Armenia and Paphlagonia that many of the inhabitants were forced to ſell their Children and to ſeek out new Habitations, of whom multitudes came into Thrace. The Emperour diſtributed three Nomiſma's to every man, and commanded them to return home, which by this time they might the better doe becauſe a vehement Wind had driven moſt of the Locuſts into the Helleſpont, the ſhores of which were all covered with them. Now in a manner he wholly employed himſelf in Works of mercy and compaſſion towards his People. Such Hoſpitals as had been erected for Poor and diſeaſed People about Con-

Romanus made away by his Wife Zoe.

Zonaras.

ſtantinople and had been demoliſhed by Earthquakes or other ways he reedified for the ſame uſes. He repaired the Aqueducts by which Water was brought into the City; his Wife ſent him to another World in ſuch cares and employments being buſied, after this manner. When he firſt arrived at the imperial Dignity, as Men tickled with Honour are wont to doe, he flattered himſelf with hopes of many years, though he had then arrived at ſixty, and of Children therein to ſucceed him, though his Wife was nothing leſs than fifty. So deſirous he was of having a Son, that at the firſt he very earneſtly uſed all indeavours that way, omitting no Ointments nor other means to render himſelf luſty and her fit for conception. He cauſed her to wear certain Gemms about her as made to believe them very efficacious for fecundity, ſhe refuſing nothing of this Nature but farther uſing Charms and Inchantments; though all proved ineffectual: which he perceiving, afterwards ſcarcely ever cohabited with her, or ever made her a kind Viſit, being both by Nature and Age in himſelf little Prone to carnal Imbracements. Some years ſhe bore this humour though with much Regrets, but at length her luſt and hatred of him aroſe to ſuch violence as to practiſe againſt his Life, being exaſperated by a violent paſſion ſhe had conceived for another Perſon. Romanus had about him a certain Eunuch called John who had ſerved him while he was yet a private Man, and after his coming to the Empire had been preferred to great Employments. This John had four Brothers; Miehael, Nicetas, Conſtantine and George, whereof the two later were Eunuchs as well as himſelf: Nicetas was a ſtripling; but Michael was come to Man's Eſtate, and a moſt beautifull Perſon. Both of them dealt in Silver and Adulterated the Coin, as the other three had formerly uſed a Circulatory or rambling kind of Trade.

Who falls in love with Michael.

Being very cloſe together.

Yet ſuſpected by Romanus.

Who in a ſhort time after is Poiſoned by them.

97. John by degrees procured for his Brothers acceſs to the Emperour who preferr'd them all, and in particular made Michael Overſeer of the Pantheon, and took him into his Bedchamber. With him Zoe the Empreſs fell moſt deſperately in love, and her luſt being more and more inflamed by the daily ſight of him, though ſhe extremely hated John, yet could ſhe not forbear to talk with him, and in her diſcourſe ſtill ſeek occaſion to ask queſtions and ſpeak of his Brother. John being a crafty Man perceived by the great delight ſhe took in talking of him, how matters ſtood, and giving him notice thereof charged him that if ſhe applyed her ſelf any way familiarly to him, not to be ſhie and baſhfull but entertain her with all the Careſſes that Lovers are wont to doe, to the very laſt point, which inſtructions he ſo obſerved that from looks they proceeded to dalliance, and lay frequently together. As Courtiers are quick to Eſpy, and the Women eſpecially curious to pry and enquire into love matters, their entertainments how private ſoever could not be concealed, but from the Court to the City became the diſcourſe of all, and in every place; the good old Emperour being the onely Man that was ignorant of it. At length from his Siſter Pulcheria, and ſome others he received hints, which he onely made uſe of ſo far as to ask Michael the queſtion, whether there was any ſuch matter, and, when he denied it, to make him ſwear, which he having done, he thought he would not forſwear himſelf, and thence concluded it a Calumny. Now for this perjury Michael was reported ſtruck with a dreadfull diſeaſe, being at certain times ſeized with a Frenzy, a trembling and ſtaring with his Eyes, which Romanus beholding pitied the Man and was the more confirmed in his incredulity, concluding his Wife could take no pleaſure in the converſation of ſo miſerable a Creature, who was not capable either of loving or being beloved. Others ſaid that he knew very well what courſe of Life ſhe led, but knowing her to be a moſt laſcivious and inſatiable Woman winked at what ſhe practiſed with Michael, leſt being hindred from his imbracements ſhe ſhould proſtitute her ſelf to more. However it was, ſhe reſolved to be rid of him, that what ſhe now enjoyed by ſtealth and in fear ſhe might openly and ſecurely own, and for that purpoſe is ſaid to have given him a ſlow working Poiſon which by degrees made an end of him. The Symptoms were a face much ſwollen, and diſcolour'd, ſhort and quick Reſpiration, and the falling off of all his Hair, ſigns pregnant enough and of a violent ſuſpicion. Yet he continued Languiſhing till the fifteenth day of April, on which having according to the Cuſtome made the Rogæ, or paid Penſions to the Senatours, he went into a Bath and there by ſome thereto appointed to make more ſpeedy work of it was ſtifled by holding his Head a ſufficient time under Water, which done he was pulled thence and laid upon his Bed. He was ſpeechleſs now but not quite dead, and the Rumour being ſpred that he was dying his Wife ran for haſte amongſt the reſt and made great Lamentation for her dear Husband, who caſting out of his Mouth ſome black matter preſently departed the World, after he had Reigned five years and ſix Months in the ſecond Indiction. A. D. 1034. In his Youth he applyed himſelf to learning, and was well ſeen in Greek Authours and the knowledge of the Civil Laws, although he boaſted himſelf much more knowing than he was.

98. The ſame Night when the office of Chriſt's Paſſion was Sung, or the Service belonging to Good Friday, Alexius the Patriarch was ſent for to Court, as it were by Command of Romanus, whither being come he found the Emperour Dead, and Zoe in the Golden Room Royally furniſhed for ſo worthy an occaſion, produced Michael, and required him to Marry them together. The Patriarch amazed at the ſuddenneſs of the thing, was very backward, till John and ſhe Bribed him by a preſent of fifty pounds to himſelf, and as much to his Clergy; by which overcome, he ſolemnized the Marriage. Zoe having thus introduced Michael the Paphlagonian (as for diſtinction he is ſtyled from his Countrey) both into her Bed and Throne, therein purpoſed to uſe him but as a Drudge and Servant, and reſolving to Govern her ſelf, took into the Court ſuch Eunuchs as had ſerved her Father. But ſhe was much deceived through the induſtry and craft of John her Husband's Brother, who ſufficiently underſtanding her, and mindfull of Romanus his Fate, turn'd out all theſe Eunuchs, and removing from her all her moſt truſty Women, put into their places his own Friends and Acquaintance,by which and other means he ſo hamper'd her,that to her great grief ſhe could neither doe nor act any thing, not ſo much as go into the Bath without his knowledge and permiſſion. Having thus ſecured all in the Palace, he wrote Letters into all Provinces which ſignified the Death of Romanus, and how by his Will and Determination Michael had ſucceeded in the Empire and Marriage of Zoe. All Men ſeemed to be ſufficiently pleaſed with the change, and wiſhed proſperity to them, except Conſtantine Delaſſenus the Patritian, who took it in moſt high diſdain that ſo obſcure and ignoble a Fellow ſhould be ſo preferred before Perſons of moſt high Rank and Quality, of which at this time there were very many, John was much diſturbed to hear how much he concerned himſelf, and reſolved to draw him to their Party if poſſible, employing one Ergodotes an Eunuch, a Man very able to inſinuate any thing, to him for this purpoſe, who offering him Oath for his Security, and requiring one from him for his Loyal deportment, was to bring him to the Emperour, where things ſhould be concluded and made up betwixt them, to their mutual ſatisfaction. In the mean time he made the Senate his own by promoting all the chiefeſt of them and the leading men to places of Dignity and Revenue. And amongſt the multitude as any be perceived to be in Capacity to doe miſchief by preferments he took off, and obliging ſuch as were fit to doe ſervice, made all the People ſatisfied and at his Devotion.

Zoe and Michael Marry and are Crowned, ſucceeding Romanus in the Empire.

99. But all this notwithſtanding our Writers obſerve, that ſuch things happened at the very firſt beginning as manifeſtly ſhewed theſe devices how ever yet proſperous to have much diſpleaſed Almighty God. For on Eaſter day fell ſuch a terrible ſtorm of Hail that it brake down Trees, Houſes and Churches in great numbers, and ſo deſtroyed the ſtanding Corn that a great ſcarcity thereupon followed. And on the Lord's day following appeared ſo great a Comet that with the light it caſt it obſcured all the Stars,and ſome imagined the Sun was returning,though it was but the third hour of the night. And the Emperour was in a grievous manner tormented with his diſtemper, which would not be overcome by any either ſpiritual or temporal means that could be uſed: ſome affirming he was poſſeſſed, and thoſe that judged moſt favourably accounting it no better than a Frenzy or Lunatick Diſeaſe. Delaſſenus was not ſo eaſily to be brought off by Ergodotes as they imagined, requiring greater caution than his bare Oath for his ſecurity, which given he ſignified by a Meſſenger of his own that he ſhould not refuſe to come to Conſtantinople. To him then was ſent one Conſtantine Phagitzes an Eunuch, the Emperour's Countreyman, and confident with the wood ſaid to belong to the Croſs of Chriſt, the Linen Cloath that had his Image upon it and the Epiſtle which they believed he wrote to Augarus, with the Picture of the Bleſſed Virgin; by the Religious Opinion of which he was induced to accept of the Faith given him, and went with Delaſſenus to the Court, where being honourably received, and dignified with the Title of Proconſul, he was richly preſented and ordered to live at his eaſe in his own Houſe near at hand. Now we are told a ſtrange Story, how the Locuſts which by the Wind were caſt upon the Shore of the Helleſpont, revived and did great miſchief to the adjacent Countries, eſpecially in the Province of Thrace for three years, which ended, they periſhed about Pergamus.

A terrible ſtorm of Hail.

A vaſt Comet appears.

The Locuſts revived.

100. But, Michael bearing onely the name, his Brother John exerciſed all the power of an Emperour, by virtue whereof he made his other Brother Nicetas Governour of Antioch. Nicetas going thither to enter upon his Charge the Townſmen refuſed to admit him, fearfull that he would with ſeverity puniſh them for having lately in a Tumult killed one Sallibas who with too much rigour had gathered the publick Revenue. At length upon promiſe of pardon and oblivion they opened their Gates and received him, but when he had got poſſeſſion without any regard to his promiſe he cauſed about an hundred Perſons to be beheaded and faſtned upon Poles, and ſent eleven of the principal Citizens all of great Nobility (of whom Elpidius a Patritian was the chief) bound to Conſtantinople, having confiſcated their Eſtates: and he wrote to his Brother John that the Gates had been ſhut againſt him not becauſe of the Murther of Salibas but out of their Inclinations to Delaſſenus. He being formerly in ſuſpicion, Credit was eaſily given to this ſuggeſtion and being brought before the Emperour on the third day of Auguſt, in the ſecond indiction, he was condemned to Baniſhment in the Iſland Prota, againſt which breach of Faith Conſtantinus Ducas his Son-in-Law proclaiming and proteſting, was for his Pains caſt Priſoner into a Tower. The Eſtates of three very eminent and rich Men in Aſia the leſs were upon this pretence ſeized and aſſigned over to Conſtantine the Emperour's Brother. And Simeon the Protoveſtiarius one of Conſtantine the Emperour's Miniſters for diſapproving thoſe proceedings as injurious and Breaches of Faith was expelled both from Court and City, and made a Monk at Olympus in a Monaſtery of his own founding. This ſame year for forty days together the Eaſtern parts were terrified with an Earthquake by which many Men periſhed at Jeruſalem, beſides the ruine of Houſes and Churches. In the Indiction following and the Month of September a Pillar of Fire appeared toward the Eaſt with its Head inclining Southward. And at the ſame time the Saracens took Myra and thoſe of Berrœa caſt out the Governour whom the Emperour had ſent to them: Pancratius the Abaſgian to revenge the cauſe of Romanus his Wives Uncle broke the League and recovered ſuch Caſtles and Forts as had formerly been in the hands of the Emperours: moreover the Patzinacæ having paſſed Iſter waſted all Myſia as far as Theſſalonica; and the Saracens of Africk by their Fleets, not a little indamaged the Iſlands Cyclades.

An Earthquake in the Eaſt and a Pillar of Fire ſeen in the Air at which time the Roman Territories on all ſides are infeſted.

101. Theſe matters were of very great conſequence, but ſeemed nothing to John the Governour of Orphans, as he is ſtyled, who ruled all, in compariſon of the dangers which at home threatened them from Delaſſenus, whom imagining he would never ſecurely enough keep, from the Iſland he removed him to a Tower, and that kept with a very ſtrong Guard: and George Maniaces he removed from Edeſſa, and made him Governour of the upper Media or Aſpracania, to prevent the growth of intereſt by favour and intelligence, ſending to ſucceed him one Leo Lependrenus. Nicetas ſhortly after dying in his Government of Antioch, he would intruſt none with it but Conſtantine the other Brother, and now did he promote to the place of Protoveſtiarius him that onely remained of the reſt, for Simeon as we ſaid had taken upon him the monaſtical courſe of Life. To make the Government of Conſtantine more acceptable to thoſe of Antioch, their fellow Citizens were releaſed out of Priſon, and the Emperour farther to eſtabliſh the intereſt of his Family or rather to gratifie the ſolicitude of his Brother, who ſeeing him ſo ſickly was afraid if he died both he and his Family ſhould be deſtroyed by the Empreſs, promoted Michael the Son of his Siſter Mary to the Dignity of Cæſar. He attended now little but matters of Devotion bewailing to his laſt hour the Murther of Romanus, for which he thought to appeaſe Almighty God by good Works and Liberality to the Poor, the building of Monaſteries and other things which that Age eſteemed the moſt valuable. But as our writers obſerve they profited him nothing. Indeed had he made Reſignation of his ill gotten Empire which occaſioned his Sin, had he put the Adultereſs away which had provoked him, and in a private condition deplored his Crimes, they might have been Teſtimonies of his Repentance. But he ſtill uſed the Company of Zoe and thought of parting with his Soul as much as the Empire. Out of ill gotten goods he made a ſhew of Liberality and yet vainly imagined he thereby expiated his former faults, and purchaſed pardon by the purſes of other Men, the publick Revenue.

'Ορφανοτρόφος

Michael promoted to the Dignity of Cæſar the Emperour being very Sickly.

The Saracens of Africk and Sicily infeſting the Cyclades are forced to make Peace.

102. This ſame year in the Month of May did the Saracens of Africk and Sicily infeſt the Cyclades and the maritime Coaſts of Thrace with their Incurſions, but the Governours ſo attended their motions that moſt of them came ſhort home, five hundred being ſent alive to the Emperour and were faſtned upon Poles all along the Coaſt from Atramytium to Strobelus. This ſo humbled the Ameras of Sicily, that he eaſily admitted of Peace which John offered him by one George Probatas, who was ſent Ambaſſadour for this purpoſe. The Ameras whoſe Name was Apolaphar Muchumet, was honoured with the Title of Magiſter, and being attached by his Brother Apochapſus, ſent to the Emperour for aſſiſtence, according to the Conditions of the League made betwixt them. To repreſs Apochapſus therefore George Maniaces was ſent into Lombardy, together with Stephen a Patritian the Huſband of the Emperour's Siſter, and Commander of the Fleet, and Conſtantine Chages, who governed the Cibyrreotæ, gave the Saracens a notable defeat at Sea. In Winter happened a mighty Froſt, which incouraged the Patzinacæ to paſs the River Iſter, and to haraſs Myſia and Thrace, as far as to Macedonia, and in Summer following vaſt quantities of Locuſts did much damage to the fruits of theſe Countries. No fewer times than thrice in one year, did that People make Inrodes into the Territories of the Empire, where they deſtroyed all things in their way, and tortured all Perſons to death they took without any reſpect had to Sex or Age, amongſt whom were five Officers of Eminence. But it fell out well for the Empire, that much about the ſame time, Noſiſthlabus and Hieroſthlabus, two Princes of the Roſſians died; and Servia, which after the Death of Romanus had caſt off the Yoke, was now again in the third year of Michael recover'd to it. And the publick ſatisfaction for theſe things was no whit leſſened by what happened in Ægypt, the Amermumnes whereof being dead, his Wife imbracing Chriſtian Religion, together with her Son offered to make a Peace with the Romans, with whoſe deſires Michael ſo far complied as to grant a Truce for thirty years.

The Patzinacæ haraſs Myſia and Thrace.

A Truce for thirty years betwixt Ægypt and the Romans.

103. The year following happened three ſeveral Earthquakes, whereof one was very terrible. The Saracens of Meſopotamia, uniting themſelves laid ſiege to Edeſſa, which could not poſſibly have eſcaped their Hands, but that Conſtantine the Emperour's Brother, ſent timely Succours from Antioch, for which Care and Induſtry he was rewarded with the Office of Domeſtick of the Schools of the Eaſt. The Summer was ſo dry, that no Rain fell for ſix Months together, for removal of which Judgment, Proceſſions and Supplications were made, but nothing fell from Heaven but a great ſtorm of Hail which did great miſchief to Trees, and damage to the Tiles of Houſes. A Great ſcarcity hereupon following at Conſtantinople, John procured Corn out of Peloponneſus and Greece, much to the Relief of the Citizens. In the mean while the two Saracen Brothers in Sicily, whom we lately mentioned, making War upon each other, Apochapſus who ſeemed to decline, craved aſſiſtence of the Ameras of Africk, who ſent it on this Condition to have part of the Iſland aſſigned him, and jointly they defeated Apolaphar, Maniaces not yet being arrived with his Auxiliaries. Apolaphar hereupon betook himſelf to Leo Opus the Governour of Lombardy, who with ſuch force as the ſhortneſs of the time would give him leave to raiſe, paſſed over into Sicily, where he grapled with the Ameras of Africk, and repreſſed him, but the two Brothers beginning to look towards an Agreement, leſt ſtrangers ſhould deprive them of what they ſtrugled for, and to plot againſt the Romans, he returned into Italy, and gave Scope to the Ameras to renew his Hoſtilities, which he did with all freedom, much to the loſs of the Iſlanders. In the following year on the ſecond of November, another Earthquake happened which laſted till January. And a great Famine followed throughout Thrace, Macedonia, and all theſe Quarters as far as Theſſaly, whereat the Biſhop of Theſſalonica taking advantage, and refuſing to pay to his Clerks, both what he ought and what he was able to diſcharge, was caught, notwithſtanding all his cunning by the Emperour. Being convict of Perjury (in ſwearing he had but thirty Pounds, though he was found to have three and thirty Centenaries of Gold in ready money) all this Wealth was ſeiſed to the uſe of his Creditours and the Poor, and he was turned out of his Biſhoprick, of the Revenues whereof ſo much onely was aſſigned him, as was convenient for his maintenance.

Three ſeveral Earthquakes. The Saracens of Meſopotamia lay Siege to Edeſſa, which is relieved.

A Drought.

Another Earthquake. And a Famine in Thrace, Macedonia, and Theſſaly.

104. Now did Pancratius Prince of Abaſgia, make War upon Jaſitas Prince of the upper Iberia, whom the Emperour being obliged to ſuccour, John ſent againſt the Aggreſſour his Brother Conſtantine, Domeſtick of the Schools with all the Forces belonging to the Eaſt, yet ſupported by a promiſe, that Delaſſenus ſhould with him be ſent as Councellour and Aſſiſtant, which being not performed (ſo great a Jealouſie was had of the Man) his Courage and Conduct failed him, and he returned home without having any thing performed. At this time Zoe the Empreſs indeavoured to poiſon John, which was diſcovered, and he puniſhing ſufficiently the Conſpiratours had a nearer regard both to her, and his own preſervation, we muſt not forget (though our Authours ſeem to have done it all this while) that George Maniaces arriving in Sicily, to anſwer the requeſt of the Ameras of that Iſland, the two Brothers made Peace betwixt themſelves, and jointly made War againſt him, procuring out of Africk a great Power of Men for this purpoſe. Againſt theſe Africans he had ſuch ſucceſs, that a Brook is reported to have received a Tincture from their Bloud, and animated if not ſtrengthned by this Succeſs, he preſently brought under thirteen Towns, and by Degrees conquered the whole Iſland. At the ſame time in the Eaſt matters were in a different poſture, where Edeſſa eſcaped narrowly of being taken by the Saracens, in this manner. Parasbatzes an Iberian was Governour there; to whom came twelve Men of the Principal of their Nation with five hundred Horſe, and as many Camels carrying Boxes on their Backs, wherein were beſtowed no fewer than twelve thouſand of armed Men. The pretence was that the Camels bore Preſents ſent to the Emperour, but the Deſign was to get the armed Men into the Caſtle, and ſo to make ſure of the Sentinels, as to maſter both it and the City. Parasbatzes the Governour kindly entertained the twelve Perſons at a Feaſt, yet would not admit the Horſemen or Camels into the City, which refuſal proved ſo fortunate, that the Conſpiracy was diſcovered by an Armenian Beggar, who overheard one of thoſe in the Boxes, diſcourſing and asking his Fellow where they were. The Governour ſecretly admoniſhed by him to look to himſelf, left his Gueſts at their Feaſt, and with a ſufficient Number of Men going out of the Town, pull'd the Saracens out of their Neſts, and killed them in the Place. This done he returned to his Company, the laſt courſe of whoſe entertainment was of the ſame ſort; for he kill'd them all, except one of the chief, whom having deprived of Hands, Ears and Noſe, in that Condition he ſent him to make relation of their Succeſs to his Countreymen.

Edeſſa like to be taken by the Saracens, but the Deſign is diſcovered and they are cut off.

105. In the mean time John who managed all things, was ſo in love with his Power and Domination, that his Jealouſie and Fear to looſe it, gave him but little quiet and contentment. His fear of Delaſſenus was grown to ſo great a ſuſpicion, that he not onely broke his promiſe with his Brother, in ſending him his aſſiſtant againſt the Abaſgian, leſt he improve any advantage put into his Hands; but thinking him too dangerous in the private Condition, as he was, reſolved to deprive him of all Helpers and Abettours, and for that purpoſe ſent into Baniſhment his two Brothers, and all his other Relations, being very deſirous to rid himſelf of his whole Family. He was very cunning in his Contrivances, and not wanting to exerciſe his Wits for the hoarding up of Treaſure, the uſual Humour of Men of his Condition. No means he omitted, how indirect and unjuſt ſoever to accompliſh this end. He raiſed the publick Revenue by greater Impoſitions upon Land, and other Courſes unworthy as our Authours tell us to be related. In the mean time his Brother the Emperour, was vexed more than ever with his Diſeaſe, which notwithſtanding all his Alms and Acts of Charity increaſed, and was more exaſperated by acceſſion of a Dropſie. At the ſame time his People were diſturbed by almoſt continual Earthquakes, by one of which Smirna was made a miſerable ſpectacle, and in ſome provinces the Quinzy raged ſo much, that the living ſcarcely ſufficed to bury the Dead. In Sicily, the War renewed by the Ameras of Carthage againſt Maniaces, who watching his opportunity fell upon him with ſuch violence and execution, that few of his Men eſcaped with their Lives, and he himſelf got away in a little boat into Africk. Maniaces to prevent his flight, in caſe he ſhould be defeated, had before the ingagement given order to Stephen the Commander of the Fleet, and Brother-in-Law to the Emperour, to hover about the Coaſts and intercept him; but through his Careleſneſs he eſcaped. This ſo far inraged Maniaces, and tranſported him, that aſſoon as he ſaw him he reviled him, and to ſevere words added as ſowre blows, which he gave him on the Head with a Cudgel. This Stephen received with ſo great Indignation, that to be revenged he wrote to John, and accuſed him of plotting againſt the Emperour, to which his jealous Pate ſo far gave credit, that he ordered him to be ſent Priſoner to Conſtantinople, where he was caſt into cloſe Priſon, together with Baſilius Theodorocranus a Patritian. The command of Sicily was given to Stephen, jointly with Baſilius Pedradites an Eunuch, who ſo ordered their matters, that in a ſhort ſpace by their Rapacity, and negligence they brought all to nothing. It was Maniaces his courſe when he took any conſiderable Place, there to build a Fort to keep the People in obedience. Now the People perceiving the Careleſs humour of the two new Commanders, and provoked by their Exactions, privily

The Emperour's Diſeaſe increaſed by acceſſion of a Dropſie.

The War renewed in Sicily, which is wholly overrun by the Ameras of Carthage Meſſana excepted.

procured ſome Men to be ſent over from Carthage, and falling upon theſe Forts, took them all with all the conſiderable Towns in the Iſland, Meſſana excepted, which was held by Catacalo Ambuſtus a Protoſpatharian, and Captain of the Armenian Legion, with three hundred Horſe and five hundred Foot. To Meſſana now they lay ſiege, all that are capable of bearing Arms, being forced into the Field; Stephen and Pediates being fled into Lombardy.

To which the Saracens laynig ſiege are by a ſudden Sally cut off.

106. For three days together Catacalo ſhut himſelf cloſe up, and thereby cauſed the Saracens to believe him fearfull, and to deſpair of any way eſcaping the danger. They as fully ſecure and judging no otherwiſe, than that they had him as ſure as a Bird in a Net, neglected all Diſcipline, ſtragling up and down, making merry, and giving up themſelves to all Jollity and Drunkenneſs. On the fourth day which was Whitſunday, he having finiſhed his Devotions, took the advantage offered him, and about Dinner time made a briſk Sally upon them, wherein firſt making to the Tent of Apolaphar their Commander, he killed him as he was drunk, and then made vaſt Slaughter of the ordinary ſort, ſo as all the Countrey was overſpread with dead Bodies, ſo unexpected was the Onſet: And incredible Wealth the Souldiers got in the rifling of the Camp. To leave all Sicily now in the Hands of the Saracens, Meſſana excepted, and to return into the Eaſt, we find Michael the Emperour at Theſſalonica, fixed at the Tomb of Demetrius the Martyr, by whoſe means he hoped to be freed from his Diſeaſe, and thence would he not ſtir without abſolute neceſſity compelled him, neglecting all Affairs of State which were caſt upon the Shoulders of John his Brother. And never did man manage them more to the diſquiet and diſcontent of the Subject, whom he oppreſſed by all ways and Methods he could, with whoſe cruel Actions other ſad Accidents joyning, made them very miſerable. For Earthquakes and violent Storms of Wind and Rain ſorely diſtreſſed them, yet with this little comfort, that together with the Comets which frequently appeared, they ſeemed to predict the impending Fate of the Tyrants. Their Siſter Mary the Mother of Cæſar as ſenſible of what was coming, having in a Journey to Epheſus obſerved ſeveral Acts of Injuſtice and Oppreſſion, thereof certified John, and was earneſt with him to prevent ſuch things for the time to come, for which ſhe was much derided, he calling her Fool, telling her ſhe talk'd like a Woman, and underſtood not what belonged to Government. But while he thus pleaſed himſelf in his Craft of governing, a thing fell out which much diſturbed both his Brother and him. To defray his Expenſes at Theſſalonica, John put ten Centenaries of Gold aboard a Veſſel, which by a Tempeſt was ſplit upon the Coaſt of Illyricum, and Stephen Boiſthlabus Prince of Serbia (or Servia) who had lately made his eſcape from Conſtantinople, and turning out thence Theophilus Eroticus, had made himſelf Maſter of that Countrey, ſeized the Money to his own uſe.

Michael the Emperor fixed at the Tomb of Demetrius. John his Brother exercising great Cruelties.

107. The Emperour when he underſtood that he had his Money, ſent and made demand of it, threatning to recover it by force if fair words would not prevail, Stephen ſlighted the Threats, whereupon to make them good, George Probatas an Eunuch was ſent with an Army, but by his Indiſcretion and want of Conduct the Deſign miſcarried, and having loſt well nigh all his men in Straits and impaſſable places, he himſelf eſcaped with great difficulty. In the very ſame year the Bulgarians revolted upon this occaſion. One Petrus Deleanus a Bulgarian, the Servant of a Citizen of Conſtantinople running away from his Maſter, in all places as far as Morabus and Belegrade (Caſtles of Pannonia, ſaith our Authour, beyond Iſter, and bordering upon the Territories of the Turks) gave out that he was the natural Son of Romanus and Nephew of Samuel, by which he ſo moved the Bulgarian Nation, which having lately ſubmitted unto the Yoke, was now again impatient of Servitude, that in Naiſſus and Scupia, the principal Towns, aſwell as elſewhere, he was with lucky Acclamations proclaimed and owned as King; and as a Sacrifice to this new Idol the Romans were butchered whereever they were met with. As ſoon as this was known to Baſilius Synademus the Governour of Dyrrachium, he judging it was the beſt way to ſuppreſs the miſchief in the beginning, marched out with all the Forces of the Garriſon againſt Deleanus, but coming to a place called Debra, a Quarrel fell out betwixt him and a certain Tribune in the Army, who taking the effectual way to ruine powerfull and popular men, accuſed him to the Emperour of Treaſon, whereupon he was turn'd out of Command, and clapt up cloſe Priſoner at Theſſalonica. The Tribune by Name Michael Dermocaitas could not for his good Service and Zeal receive a leſſer Reward than the Command of the Malefactour, which he managed ſo extremely ill, that the People inraged by his Cruel Exactions, roſe up againſt him as one man,

The Bulgarians revolt chuſing Deleanus for King.

Cedreno Δελεάνος Zonaræ Δολιάνος.

So do the Inhabitants of Dyrrachium chuſing Teichomere.

man, and having driven him out of Town, and knowing how the matter would be reſented by the Emperour, openly revolted, making choice for their King one Teichomere a Souldier amongſt them of good note both for Valour and Prudence.

Teichomere removed and ſlain by the Wiles of Deleanus who alone governs Bulgaria.

Leading an Army towards Theſſalonica.

Takes Dyrrachium, and moſt part of the Province of Nicopolis.

A Conſpiracy diſcovered and puniſhed.

108. Now were there two Kings, and conſequently two great Factions in Bulgaria, whereof when neither ſeemed able to prevail againſt the other by force, by cunning and ſlight the matter was eaſily effected. Deleanus wrote kind Letters to the other, inviting him to partake of the Sovereignty, and ſo counterfeited a contented and ſelf-denying Perſon, that he prevailed with Teichomere, to come to him and join their Forces together. Having now gotten a convenient opportunity, he calls all the Souldiers together, and deſired them that if they believed him to be deſcended from Samuel, and were ſatisfied in their Election of him to be their King, that they would remove Teichomere, or if ſuch was their pleaſure he would willingly ſurrender his Intereſt to him, foraſmuch as it was not to be thought, that Bulgaria could bear two Kings together. This produced at firſt a great conteſt amongſt the Souldiers, which ended yet in the choice of Deleanus to be their King, and the ſtoning to death of the unhappy Teichomere. Deleanus being now poſſeſſed of the Kingdom without a Rival, led an Army preſently towards Theſſalonica againſt the Emperour, who would not ſtay his coming, but in a confuſed manner ran away to Conſtantinople, leaving all his Baggage and Treaſury behind to be brought after him by Manuel Ibatza one of his Domeſticks, who carried it over to Deleanus. This Upſtart ſo diligently managed his matters, that by Forces ſent under Conduct of one Caucanus, he took Dyrrachium, and into Greece diſpatched another Army under Command of one Anthimus. So much he proſpered in his Enterprize, that the Province of Nicopolis, all except Naupactus gave up it ſelf into his Hands, being impatient of the Domination of John, whoſe moſt cruel and exacting Officer they cut into pieces, and caſt off the Yoke of Obedience. When Baſilius conquered Bulgaria, he made no alteration as to Taxes, but contented himſelf with what had been paid to Samuel in kind, in this proportion, that whoever had a Yoke of Oxen paid a Meaſure of Wheat, another of Milium, and a Veſſel of Wine to the publick. This John had changed into ready money, which they of Nicopolis took ſo very ill, that taking their opportunity they revolted from the Emperour, and joined themſelves with their Countreymen. At this time a great Conſpiracy was hatched againſt the Emperour by Michael Cerularius, John Macrempolita, and many others, which being detected they were baniſhed, and their Eſtates ſeized. And againſt Conſtantine the great Domeſtick, a Mutiny was raiſed at Meſanactæ, for which Michael Gabras, Theodoſius Meſanyctes, and other Centurions loſt their Eyes. And Gregory Taronita a Patritian, the Principal contriver was covered with a raw Hide all over, but where ſpace was left for breath and ſight, and in that manner ſent up to John to Conſtantinople.

Aluſianus run to the Bulgarians.

Is admitted Collegue with Deleanus.

Beſieges Theſſalonica.

But is beaten and his Army routed.

109. In the Ninth Indiction, the Month of September, Aluſianus the Patritian, the ſecond Son of Aaron ſo often mentioned, and Governour of Theodoſiople, fled ſecretly and betook himſelf to Deleanus upon this occaſion. Being accuſed of ſome unjuſt proceedings, the Emperour or rather his Brother was ſo incenſed againſt him, that before his Cauſe could be heard, he was forbidden the Court, or to come to Conſtantinople without leave, and more than this John ſcrued out of him Fifty pounds of Gold, and which vexed him moſt took from him a very beautifull Woman, which he kept in the Countrey. Being not able by all his ſolicitation to procure a redreſs of theſe grievances, he took the Armenian Habit, and paſſing for a Servant of Baſilius Theodorocranus, got undiſcovered to Oſtrobus, where Deleanus then lying with an Army, very joyfully received him in appearance. He was ſufficiently ſenſible how deſpicable both his counterfeit Perſon and Intereſt was in danger to prove at the appearance of one of the true Family, but perceiving all the Souldiers out of reſpect to his Lineage to bear him hearty affection, he ſaw there was no other way, but to offer him to ſhare in the Sovereignty of the Countrey. Aluſianus was wiſer than to neglect ſo fair a beginning, and being admitted his Collegue was preſently ſent with forty thouſand Men againſt Theſſalonica, which then was held by Conſtantine the Patritian, the Emperour's Kinſman, who ſo manfully defended himſelf, that Aluſianus having with all ſorts of Engines attacked it for ſix Days together, perceived there was no other Courſe to be taken, but to ſtarve them out. But the Defendants reſolving to fruſtrate his expectations, made a General and unexpected Sally, and forced him to raiſe his Siege with ſuch loſs, that fifteen thouſand of his Men are ſaid to be ſlain, and the reſt ran away with him to Deleanus, the Victory being aſcribed to Saint Demetrius the Martyr, whom ſome of the Bulgarians ſwore they ſaw fighting, like a young Man at the Head of the Roman Troops, and deſtroying thoſe againſt whom he fought by Fire which proceeded from him, ſo powerfull had been the Prayers of the beſieged at his Sepulchre, and efficacious the Ointment proceeding from his Tomb.

110. This defeat of Aluſianus, increaſed the Jealouſies already conceived betwixt him and Deleanus, and ripened their Hatred and Deſigns; for Deleanus would not be convinced but it was out of Treachery, and the other was rendred more peeviſh and out of humour by the apprehenſion of his Malice, and of the diſgrace he had received by the overthrow. Now they thought of nothing, but how to circumvent and deſtroy each other, nor plotted any thing but how to get advantages to doe it. But Aluſianus was before-hand with his Collegue, whom having invited to a Feaſt, when he was drunk he cauſed his Eyes to be put out, and not truſting to his own Intereſt or the Humour of the Bulgarians, then ſent to the Emperour and offered to return to his obedience, provided he might be accepted, and receive rewards due to his Loyalty, which was granted, and he repaired to Michael, then lying at Moſynopolis, who conferred on him the Dignity of Magiſter, and to make ſure of him ſent him to his Brother John to Conſtantinople. Michael was before this reſolved in Perſon, to make an expedition into Bulgaria, upon hearing that that Province had revolted, having this ſaying frequently in his Mouth, that It was a ſhame for him who had added nothing to the Empire, to loſe any Portion of it. The Dropſie had already ſo far prevailed, that he was adviſed by thoſe about him to alter his purpoſe, which was farther urged by the Principal Senatours, but he by this oppoſition was the more quickened to undertake the Journey. And when on a certain Night he ſeemed overpowered by his Diſeaſe, and no hope there was, that he could proceed in his March the following day, to the great wonder of all Men he was in the Morning ſeen at the Head of his Men, and very ſtoutly led on into Bulgaria, where deſigning to fall upon the Revolters, and reduce them by force, this opportunity was preſented of getting the Victory without fighting. For of their two Princes, the one being depoſed, and the other revolted, the Bulgarians without an Head, and here and there diſperſed, very eaſily returned to obedience. Deleanus having got into his Hands, he ſent to Theſſalonica. Then piercing into the more Inner Parts of the Countrey, he came to the wooden Rampart made formerly by Manuel Ibatzes at Prilapus, to reſtrain the Emperour's Incurſions, but this he broke down, and having diſſipated ſome Bulgarians who began to unite themſelves, he took Ibatzes, with whom and Deleanus he returned in Triumph to Conſtantinople. Having done this work, and perceiving his time to be but ſhort by the prevalence of his Diſeaſe, he caſt off all Cares of State, and forſaking the Palace betook himſelf to a Monaſtery of his own building, and there putting off the Purple and all Enſigns of Majeſty, was ſhaven for a Monk. He gave himſelf up to Religious Exerciſes, wholly refuſing to admit the Empreſs to his preſence, and perpetually bewailed his Sins, eſpecially the Murther of Romanus the Emperour, till ſuch time as his Dropſie oppreſſed his Vitals, which was on the tenth Day of December, in the tenth Indiction, after he had Reigned ſeven years and eight Months, or thereabouts. He of himſelf was mild enough in his Government, though the contrary Humour of his Brothers made his Reign be ill ſpoken of. The onely Crime laid to his Charge is, that about Romanus his death; which yet moſt aſcribe more to his Brother John than him.

Aluſianus circumvents Deleanus and returns to the Emperour.

Who marches towards Bulgaria.

Reducing it into obedience returns in Triumph to Conſtantinople.

Is ſhaven.

Dies.

The Empire devolved upon Zoe.

111. By the death of Michael, the Empire was again devolved upon Zoe, as by hereditary right. Michael ſirnamed Calaphates his Nephew by his Siſter, the Wife of Stephen, who ordered matters ſo ill in Sicily, was as we ſaid promoted by him to the Dignity of Cæſar. Yet afterward, as if he repented of what he had done, he was ordered to live out of Conſtantinople, and forbidden to come to Court without licence firſt obtained. But when Michael was gone into the Monaſtery, his Brothers wrote Letters as in the Emperour's Name, whereby he was recalled into the Palace, but his Uncle John gave him his Leſſon, which was by all means to pleaſe Zoe, and doe nothing without her approbation. Thus inſtructed, they bring him into her Preſence, where he falls down at her Feet, and putting her in mind how ſhe had adopted him for her Son, at the time of his Advancement to the Title of Cæſar, and ingage moſt ſolemnly to her, that upon the Death of his Uncle he ſhould onely enjoy the Name of Emperour, but ſhe all the Power, whom as a Slave bought with money is wont to do his Lady and Patroneſs, he would obſerve and obey to the utmoſt. She being of her ſelf very eaſie, and finding the buſineſs of Government more troubleſome than ſhe had imagined, after three days deliberation complied with them, and (adopting him for her Son, ſaith Cedrenus, though others write that this was done before) cauſed him to be adorned with the Imperial Diadem, of which he was unworthy, not ſo much in reſpect to his obſcure Birth and Family (his Father's Trade having been to pitch Ships) but to his diſpoſition and manners, though before the Trial he was reputed active and induſtrious. As an ill Omen, of what a giddy humour he would prove, at his Coronation he was taken with ſuch a Vertigo and Miſt before his Eyes, that he had like to have faln into a ſwoun, and with Ointments and Perfumes, could hardly be recovered. But thus did Michael Calaphates, the fifth of that Name, become Emperour of the Romans in the Tenth Indiction, A. D. M. XLI. Before his Admiſſion, Zoe would ſecure ſome matters her ſelf. Firſt John his Uncle, ſhe removed into a Monaſtery. Then Conſtantine the Domeſtick of the Schools, ſhe deprived of his Command, and confined him to his Houſe, as ſhe did alſo George the Protoveſtiarius.

Who makes Michael Calaphates Emperour.

112. It's obſerved of the Reign of Michael, that during its continuance, there was ſtill an Earthquake in one part or other of the Empire. Such were his Actions, that they quickly produced an Alteration in his Fortune. He was deceitfull and highly ingratefull, having no regard either to the obligations of Nature or Friendſhip, of ſo laviſh a Tongue, that never regarded what he ſaid, his Heart and Lips never agreeing: In adverſity moſt baſe and ſervile, and born to puniſh the Crimes of his Uncle John, and to procure the Ruine of all his Family. For ſome time however his Uncle had been outed by the Empreſs, yet he uſed his advice, gave him great Titles and moſt fair words; but either to pleaſe the Empreſs, or rather to gratifie his own Humour by degrees, bore himſelf to him after a quite contrary Faſhion; being ſo far from giving him any reſpect, that he took all occaſions to croſs and to affront him. The onely Perſon of his Kindred to whom he bore any reſpect was his Uncle Conſtantine, whom he prevailed with Zoe to have recalled from his Confinement: on him he conferred the Title of Nobiliſſimus, and would have him near him, ſuffering him to affront his Brother John in his Preſence without any reprehenſion, which cauſed John to depart at a good diſtance from the City. Hereupon Michael broke out into open Enmity againſt him. He had formerly ſent for him to Court, but when he was to come, on purpoſe abſented himſelf at the Theatre, to behold the Circenſian Games. Now again he ſent a Gally for him to give an account of his proud Carriage, and when he was come near the Palace, ordered him to be carried away into Baniſhment: And thus he rewarded him, by whoſe Craft and Deſign he had both received the Dignity of Cæſar, and the Imperial Power. Having thus removed him, he dealt no better with his other Relations, many of whom not onely men in Size, but bearded by reaſon of their Age, nay both Husbands and Fathers he cauſed to be gelded, and made Eunuchs. He had now obtained the Conqueſt over his own Kindred, but another Triumph remained, which required more than Herculean pains. This was to reduce the Empreſs Zoe to a private Life, and this he reſolved upon by the advice and aſſiſtence of his Uncle Conſtantine, and firſt attempted it by theſe means.

His Character.

Zonaras Tom. 3. in Michaele Calaphato.

Diſgracing and uſing ill all his own Relations.

113. This moſt Ignoble (adoptive) Son cauſes odd rumours to be ſpread (ſay our Authours) againſt his moſt Noble Mother, reporting her guilty of many Crimes, particularly of witchcraft and ſorcery, and that ſhe Plotted to take away his Life. Having thus made his way he caſts her out of the Court, baniſhes her into the Princes Iſland, cauſes one who had ſo well deſerved of him to be ſhaven, and inſtead of the Purple which had deſcended to her from her many Anceſtours, to put on the Habit of a Nun. Cedrenus writes that before he did this he reſolved to try how the affections of the Citizens of Conſtantinople ſtood, after this manner. The next Lord's day after Eaſter he ordered a ſolemn Proceſſion to be made to the Church of the Apoſtles, in which he appeared with his Diadem on his Head, and waited on by all the Senate. All the People ran to the ſhew, and thoſe that lived in the Streets through which he paſſed from the Palace adorned the Walls and Windows of their Houſes, as is uſual, with the beſt and richeſt Hangings they had to Grace the Solemnity, and were not wanting to follow him with uſual Acclamations. This the vain and miſerable Man concluded to proceed from their intire affection to him, and in the night following put his device in practice in the manner formerly related. “ The day following he cauſed a writing publickly to be read by the Prefect of the City to this purpoſe, that he had “ baniſhed Zoe becauſe ſhe was an Enemy to his Government, and removed “ Alexius from the Patriarchate for conſenting to her Deſigns, promiſing “ his People all protection and all good things if they remained firm in their “ Duty and Allegiance to him. As the Prefect was concluding, ſome one amongſt the multitude was heard to ſay, We will not have Stauropta Calaphates for our Emperour, but we will obey Zoe our Mother to whom the Empire is juſtly deſcended by hereditary right, to which preſently all the People acclaimed as with one voice. Let Calaphates his Eyes be pulled out. Then with ſtones and all other things that came to hand they fell upon the Prefect (this was Anaſtaſius, a Patritian, formerly one of the Miniſters of Zoe's Father) and had certainly kill'd him had he not ſpeedily got away.

And depoſing Zoe the Empreſs.

Upon which a tumult ariſes in the City of Conſtantinople.

114. Zonaras writes that Michael, after his depoſing of Zoe accounting himſelf ſecure, fell to his pleaſures and former delights, and therein was ſuddenly ſurprized. For at what had happened to the Empreſs all the People was affected no otherwiſe than each one is wont to be at his own Calamity and misfortune: the Men bethought themſelves of what her Anceſtours had performed, and the Women concerned for her Sex as well as Birth failed not to contribute their paſſions for making up a publick diſcontent. The whole City out of a diſcontent broke out into a publick Rage and ſedition, and every Man reſolved to venture his Life in vindication of her to whom the right belonged. The Patriarch out of fear of being depoſed had taken up his reſidence in the great Church, where hearing the joyfull News of thoſe commotions he expected to hear of the depoſition of Michael. Thither repaired all the Eunuchs that had belonged to the Father of Zoe, with Conſtantine Cabaſilas the Patritian, and now they durſt ſhew themſelves to all the reſt of the Senatours, who with Unanimous conſent ſent for Theodora out of Petrium and in the Church ſaluted her Empreſs together with her Siſter Zoe. Then with all the multitude they made to the Court, thence to expell Michael, who at firſt was little ſenſible of the danger wherein he ſtood, till ſeeing the People ſo much bandy together and his Guards out of conſcience incline to the ſide of the Women, he was then very much affrighted. His Uncle the Nobiliſſimus to provide both for his own ſecurity, and his Eſtate, ſent and fetcht back Zoe into the Palace, and againſt the Nobility oppoſed ſome Companies of Souldiers who reſtrained their violence a little though with the loſs of many Lives, till they brought her to the Theatre and there ſhewed to them their Lady and Miſtreſs, having deveſted her of her vail and reſtored to her all the imperial Ornaments. They imagined this would quiet the People, but ſo far was it from it that the ſight of two together, ſo divers as to their Birth and Education, the more inraged them, which they teſtified not onely by moſt reproachfull words but by caſting of Stones and all other expreſſions of Fury and Indignation.

Cedrenus.

Theodora ſent for and ſaluted Empreſs together with her Siſter Zoe who is brought back into the Palace.

115. Michael now deſpairing to doe any good reſolved to depart into a Monaſtery, and there take the Religious Habit, but his Uncle would not permit him, telling him an Empire was not ſo eaſily to be parted with, that it was manſully to be defended, and to be parted with by a generous and reſolute death worthy of ſo great a Prince. Reſolution being taken accordingly, all that were in the Court were Armed, and it was eſteemed very good fortune that Catacalo Ambuſtus was lately arrived out of Sicily with the welcome News of what had happened at Meſſana, whoſe preſence and Aſſiſtence not a little incouraged the Emperour. The multitude Attacquing the Court in three ſeveral Parties, the deſendants were alſo divided into ſo many, who being well Armed killed many of the unarmed People, who with Stones, peices of Wood or any thing they could light on ingaged with the Souldiers and three Thouſand Men are ſaid to have periſhed in this Attempt. But however the Citizens at length by their Numbers prevailed and breaking into the Palace made Booty all the Treaſure, and what elſe they could there find, tore in pieces the Rolls of the Tributes and ſought diligently how to take Michael, who ſeeing that there was no more contending nor ſtriving againſt ſo great a ſtream, took a Pinace, and with the Nobiliſſimus fled to the Monaſtery of Studium where they both took the Religious Habit, and ſo this conteſt ended after three days and as many nights. Zoe who was left in the

The Citizens attacque the Court.

And force the Emperour to fly in his Pinace to Studium where he takes the Religious Habit.

the Palace having now recovered the Sovereign power diſdained to think that her Siſter ſhould Reign with her, but the Senate and People would needs have it ſo, and ſhe was forced to acquieſce in their Reſolution and admit Theodora into the Palace. Then from an high Place did ſhe make a ſpeech, firſt to the Senate, and then to the People, giving them thanks for their great kindneſs expreſſed to her and her Family, wiſhing and promiſing them all returns of kindneſs, and ſhe deſired to know their opinions what ſhould be done with the Emperour, for ſuch he was, and according to the Rules of the Government for ſuch he could not be denied.

116. The Univerſal Cry was that the wicked wretch as they Termed him, ſhould be made away; ſome named the nailing him to a Pole, others to a Croſs, and others more mercifull, propounded the ſaving of his Life by the loſs of his Eyes. Zoe pitied the Man (as a Creature it's likely of her own making, for we naturally love thoſe to whom we have been in the place of Parents or Benefactours) and was for ſparing him; but Theodora full of Animoſity for her long confinement, and deſirous to vent her Anger againſt any one, gave order to Capanares, one who was lately made Prefect of the City, to goe ſpeedily and pull out the Eyes of him and the Nobiliſſimus. His Errand and Voyage being known, the multitude followed him to the Monaſtery, where the two Princes upon notice of their coming betook themſelves into the moſt cecret Receſs of the Church of St. John Baptiſt, but the People the more inſenſed for the death of ſo many of their Relations and Neighbours dragged them out by the Heels through the Forum to the place called Sigma above the Monaſtery of Peribleptus and there pulled out their Eyes, Conſtantine bearing it very patiently, but Michael with Reluctancy and Lamentation deſiring them to doe it to his Uncle firſt who had been the Authour and cauſe of all the Evils of which they complained, and he had the favour to cloſe his Eyes with the ſight of that Spectacle. After the blinding of them they were both baniſhed, Conſtantine and others of his kindred to ſeveral places and Michael to Elegnis on the twenty firſt day of April the tenth Indiction after he had Reigned four Months and five days. The two Empreſſes (or rather Zoe alóne) being thus made ſure of began to ſettle the Commonwealth and their own Eſtate by beſtowing Honours upon the Senatours, and diſtributing Money amongſt the People as the caſe required: and commands were ſent into all the Provinces that no Offices of Magiſtracy ſhould be ſold which before had been the ordinary courſe, and all Acts of Injuſtice and Oppreſſion were ſeverely forbidden. There being great occaſion for Money, the Nobiliſſimus was fetch'd back to the Court, and being queſtioned concerning the publick Treaſure, was by threats brought to diſcover three and fifty Centenaries of Gold hid at his Houſe, which being found he was returned to the former place of his confinement. Then was Nicholas the Preſident made Domeſtick of the Schools of the Eaſt having been the Eunuch of their Father, and of the Weſt, Conſtantine Cabaſilas the Patritian. And John Maniaces whom Michael had diſmiſſed out of Cuſtody from a Patritian was honoured with the Dignity of Magiſter, and with full Authority ſent General of an Army into Italy.

Michael and the Nobliſſimus have their Eyes put out and are baniſhed.

Zoe and Theodora being Empreſſes.

Πρόεδρος.

117. Though matters were thus well ordered, yet the State ſeemed not ſetled except an Emperour was created, which all Men wiſhed, and that ſhould be lawfully married to Zoe. And ſhe being as deſirous of an Husband as they were of an Emperour had already caſt her thoughts and affections upon ſeveral. The firſt was Conſtantine Delaſſenus, who was ſent for to Court as upon ſome other occaſion; but he ſpake ſo roughly and ſeemed ſo intractable that he was rejected. The next was one Conſtantine Catapano the Husband of another Woman, though her Paramour; but his Wife not enduring the thought that ſhe ſhould part with him in that manner choſe rather by Poiſon to ſend him to another World, that neither of them might enjoy him. Being thus prevented as to him ſhe reſolved upon one Conſtantine Monomachus, whom John having baniſhed to Mytilena, becauſe a rumour was ſpread that he ſhould Reign, ſhe had recalled, and while ſhe yet thought of Marrying the other Conſtantine had made Pretor or Judge of the Greeks. He was a Man both Noble as to his extraction and very handſome. His firſt Wife dying he married the Niece of Romanus the Emperour by his Brother, but by that Alliance got not any preferment; yet coming by that means often to Court he had opportunity to be in the Empreſs's ſight and became very familiar with her, and ſhe was ſo kind to him (as to ſay truth her humour was ever free and generous) that from her bounty he received great ſumms of Δικαστὴν ἑλλήνων προεχειρίσατο.

Conſtantine Monomachus married to Zoe, and choſen Emperour.

of Money. This made ſome ſuſpicious and credulous Perſons talk hardly of them and Michael the Succeſſour of Romanus out of mere jealouſie though for ſome pretended Crimes confined the Man to Leſbus where he continued all his time, and found not the other Michael that followed more favourable to him. Being now ſent for to the City he was ſtopped at the Church of St. Michael in Damocrania and Stephen of Pergamenus an Eunuch of the Chamber meeting him adorned him with Purple and brought him in a Pinace to Conſtantinople where he was Married to Zoe by one Stypes a Prieſt of New Rome, as Cedrenus calls him, for Allexius the Patriarch refuſed to ſolemnize the Nuptials becauſe of the third Marriage, ſo terrible a matter in thoſe days, yet did he ſet the Crown on his Head the day following. Thus did Conſtantine ſirnamed Monomachus obtain the imperial Dignity on the eleventh day of June in the tenth Indiction. A. D. M.XLII. And the power of the two Siſters became extinct after it had continued ſcarcely three months which though it pleaſed the People, out of reſpect to the Nobility of their Houſe and their hatred to Michael, yet to the prudent ſort ſeemed very uncouth and indecent. For odd they thought it to ſee two Women ſit together upon the Tribunal, to have all Royal Ceremonies performed to two of that ſex at the ſame time, incircled with the uſual Guards and attended by the Senatours and principal Magiſtrates: to ſee cauſes debated before them, all affairs of State handled in their preſence; to behold them giving audience to Ambaſſadours, preſiding in the Senate and the other publick and ſolemn Aſſemblies of the Empire.

He obliges his Subjects.

And acceptable to the Empreſſes.

He ſends an Army againſt the Triballi.

Which is deſtroyed at its return through the Straits.

118. The general ſatisfaction for having an Emperour was no whit diminiſhed by the firſt Obſervations made upon the Carriage and Demeanour of Monomachus. For the Senatours he immediately obliged by preferring them to places of Dignity and profit, and the People by diſtribution of Money, as he thought he had Intereſt and Opportunity. For ſatisfaction of the Provinces he ſent abroad his Edicts, by which giving notice of his Promotion, he promiſed all good Offices, and the removal of all Grievances whatſoever. John the Great Actour in the days of his Brother, he removed into Leſbus, Michael his Nephew, lately depoſed, into Chius, and Conſtantine Nobiliſſimus into Samus, whereby he farther pleaſed the People. But Wiſe men and ſuch as pried nearer into his Actions and the Methods of his Government obſerved, that without any Prudence or grave conſideration he conferred Dignities, and beſtowed Money, aſwell the unfit as fit, the unworthy as worthy receiving his Favours; and he never regarded whether there was Money or no Money in the Treaſury. But this could not hinder him from being Popular, or not obvious to the eyes of the Vulgar, to whom other things did farther commend him. For he frankly and freely forgave ſuch from whom he had received Injuries when a private man; and he was ſo wiſe as to give content at home, making himſelf acceptable to the two Women by a Pleaſant and Debonnair Carriage, and he little cared to perplex himſelf and ſoure his humour by much and difficult buſineſs, but rather indulged his Pleaſures and took his eaſe. He ſeemed to Countenance men of Ingenuity and Learning, though of the latter he ſcarcely had received any taſte. But the Provinces were in no good condition, however matters ſtood at Court and in the City. On the ſixth of October in the eleventh Indiction a Comet appeared traverſing the Heavens from the Eaſt to the Weſt, and kept on its Courſe as long as that Month continued, being afterward eſteemed to forerun and predict thoſe Calamities which ſhortly after happened. Stephen Boiſthlabus who, as was ſaid, eſcaped from Conſtantinople, had ſeized on the Mountains of Illyricum, of the Triballi and Servi, and thence like a Beaſt of Prey fell down upon the adjacent Territories of the Empire, and did very great miſchief to the Inhabitants. Hereupon the Emperour ſent Orders to Michael a Patritian the Son of Anaſtaſius the Logotheta, and then Governour of Dyrrachium, to raiſe what force he could out of the adjoyning Provinces, and hunt him out. But it's both the weakneſs and grievous puniſhment of the folly of a Prince, to chuſe unfit Perſons for the management of buſineſs. This Michael had not the leaſt skill in Martial Matters, was an Effeminate and Diſſolute Perſon, brought up in Idleneſs and Luxury and now ordered his Affairs like ſuch a General, with ſixty thouſand men he marched into the Territories of the Triballi, and that through ſuch difficult, rough, ſteep, and narrow ways, that onely two Horſemen could ride abreaſt. The Servi living at thoſe Straits, obſerved his motion and ſuffered him without Interruption to paſs them into the Champion Countrey, and there to burn and plunder at his pleaſure, but watched his return and poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Straits and difficult Paſſages. And when loaded with booty and without fear or wit he re-entred, they fell upon on him and his Army with Stones, Earth, Darts, and all other things convenient from the higher ground, that of the miſerable Souldiers who could not in the leaſt defend themſelves nor ſtir any way forty thouſand were ſlain. The reſt paſſing the Holes and Valleys which were now filled up with the Carkaſſes of their Fellows got up to the Mountains as they could, and by Night together with their Prudent General eſcaped.

119. At the ſame time a great danger threatned the Emperour from Italy, where George Maniaces uſurped the Sovereignty for theſe Cauſes and upon theſe occaſions. When firſt this George was by Michael ſent into Italy to aſſiſt Apolaphar the Prince of Sicily againſt his Brother and the Africans, he took to his aſſiſtence five hundred Franks Commanded by one Arduin the Lord of a certain Region ſubject to none other, and by their aſſiſtence did he obtain all his Trophies in that War. When he was removed from his Charge, Michael Doceanus the Protoſpatharian, a ſilly Man, omitted to pay theſe Franks their monthly Wages as he had been wont; and when their Captain came to him, and deſired him to be more courteous to the Souldiers, and not defraud them of their Wages, he contumeliouſly beat him, which cauſed the Franks to Revolt. He to chaſtize and reduce them would not uſe all the Force he might, but ingaged them with the Opſician Legion, and a part of that of the Thracians upon the River Aufidus at Cannæ, and there loſt the greater part of his Army, where the Romans long before had been ignominiouſly beaten by Hannibal. Yet did not this experiment teach him any wiſedom, ſo as ſufficiently to furniſh himſelf for another Ingagement, but onely rallying together ſuch as had been lately beaten with ſome Piſidians and Lycaonians, which made up the Legion of the Phoberati, he fell raſhly upon the Franks again, now ſtrengthned by conſiderable Supplies, and from them received a great Overthrow. Michael the Emperour having Information of his Conduct, ſent one Boioannes to ſucceed him, a Man of much repute for matters of War, Deſcended from Boioannes, who under the Reign of Baſilius reduced all Italy as far as Rome to his obedience. But he having none but beaten and diſcourag'd Men to lead againſt the Enemy, was ſo far from driving them out, that he could not defend his own Poſts, but was defeated at Monopolis and taken Priſoner; after which the Franks ſo beſtirred themſelves, that they brought under Italy, four Cities onely remaining to the Romans, (our Authours mean the Emperour) viz. Brunduſium, Hidriis, Tarentum and Baris.

Italy taken from the Emperour by the Franks except four Cities.

120. Now Michael the Emperour being dead, and Calaphates depoſed, Maniaces, as we ſaid, was ſent into Italy, and there, though he laboured under the ſame difficulty of want of Men as thoſe before him had done, yet ſo far exceeding them in the Art of a General, that he drove the Franks from Capua, Beneventum and Naples, and brought the Countrey into a reaſonable good condition. Whilſt he employed himſelf there in his Command, Romanus Sclerus who was his Neighbour where his Eſtate lay in the Eaſtern Parts, who bore him mortal hatred for an Injury he thought done to him, did him ſuch miſchief as forced him upon an Attempt,the Iſſue of which proved deſtructive to him. The Siſter of this Sclerus was the Emperour Monomachus his Miſtreſs, who on her ſo doted, that beſides all other things ſhe deſired, he preferred her Brother to be Magiſter and Protoſtrator. Puffed up with this advancement, and now thinking he might doe any thing, he both injured him in his Eſtate and Lands, and lay with his Wife very licentiouſly. Maniaces having notice hereof, boyled with Rage, and by no means could digeſt the Affront, but as he was thinkng how to be revenged for theſe Injuries his thoughts were farther employed by another, for Sclerus procured him to be turn'd out of his Employment in Italy. This made him deſperate, for he could not but expect ſtill worſe at Court where his Enemy had ſo great an Intereſt, and drove him into a Reſolution of Uſurping and taking Arms againſt the Emperour. He killed him that was ſent to ſucceed him, one Pardus a Protoſpatharian, a Fellow not at all fit for ſuch an Employment, but onely becauſe he was known to Monomachus, and then took the Diademe with other Enſigns of Majeſty, and was by the Forces of Italy which he eaſily cajolled to this Service, ſaluted Emperour. Putting his Army Aboard he paſſed over into Bulgaria, with the News whereof they were ſo ſtruck at Conſtantinople, that Letters were written to him in the Emperour's Name, which promiſed Pardon to him and his Followers for all that was paſt, beſides good Rewards, if they would return to their former obedience. But he continuing fixt in his Reſolution, an Army was got together, and committed to the Conduct of Stephanus Sebaſtophorus, who brought the tidings of his Promotion to Monomachus when he met him at Damocranea. At a Maniaces uſurps in Italy.

Entring Bulgaria,

Is met by Stephen the Emperour's General, and in Battel wounded, of which he dies.

place called Oſtrobus they met, and then Stephen had the worſt of it, Maniaces leading on his own Men, and fighting ſtoutly in the Head of them. And all now received and acknowledged him for Emperour in the Field, when ſuddenly he fell dow dead from his Horſe, having it ſeems received a mortal wound in his Breaſt, though not known from what Hand. Now was the Scene quite changed: they who a little before did him reverence as Emperour, now railed at him as a Traitour, and his Head being cut off, his Men ſubmitted to the preſent Power. Stephen for his great Conqueſt returned in triumph to the City, where for a ſhew the Head of Maniaces was carried on the point of a Spear, and ſome of thoſe whom the Death of their General, not the valour of Stephen had ſubdued, to encreaſe the Pageantry followed it as a Trophy upon Aſſes; the worthy Conquerour bringing up the Rere on a Milk-white Steed.

An account of Conſtantine, with Sclerœna his Doxy.

121 But into ſo great danger was Monomachus brought by his Miſtreſs, a Lady ſo conſiderable, that Zonaras thinks it not a thing below the Dignity of an Hiſtory to give an account of their Amours; he having Buried two Wives, had no mind to Marry a third, but it ſeems judging Fornication better than a breach of that humour ſo much applauded in thoſe days, uſed the company of this Woman, being a Widow, and the Kinſwoman of one of his Wives, at firſt privily, but afterwards without any diſſimulation. She was Young, very Beautifull, and deſcended of the Noble Family of the Scleri, which attracted his Affections to her, but ſhe was not at all in his debt; the teſtifications of her Love to him were full as large and ſignificant. They could neither of them be at quiet if they were not together; and when he was Baniſhed ſhe followed him, not able to live but in his company, where by all her Arts ſhe endeavoured to make his condition as eaſie as might be, both with her ſociety, advice and ſupply of his wants, ſo far as her Eſtate would allow, having a ſtrange fancy all along that one day he would arrive at the Sovereignty. And when at the Sovereignty he arrived, at the height of his Proſperity he forgot not her that had been his chief comfort in his diſtreſs, but got the conſent of the Empreſs that ſhe might be ſent for to Court and provided for, with which Zoe was well enough content, the greatneſs of her Age having now mortified Jealouſie in her, together with her experience of the misfortunes which this life affords. Now was Sclerœna removed from Mitylena to the City, where at firſt ſhe was in no ſplendour either as to Houſe or Attendance, but by degrees was ſerved like an Empreſs, and her Houſe turned as into a Court. For Monomachus, where ſhe lay built very ſumptuouſly both for her convenience, and that under pretence of overſeeing his Workmen he might have oftner occaſions to make her Viſits. At firſt he was ſhie and cautious of being diſcovered in his Amours, but at length caſt off all diſſimulation, and uſed her not as a Concubine and Vice-wife, but as one to whom he had been lawfully Married. Now all the Treaſury is at her Command, and not enduring her abſence hardly for a moment, he obtains the conſent of the Empreſs for bringing her into the Court, where by his endeavours a great friendſhip was contracted betwixt them, ſo as Zoe grudged her neither the Name nor Honours of an Empreſs, and contented her ſelf with his company when ſhe knew he was not with his Miſtreſs. Thus lived he and his Sclerœna together, hoping ſtill for a nearer conjunction, at leaſt which would more ſatisfie the World, when on a ſudden death prevented it, ſnatching her away, to his great diſcontentment, a little before the Civil War of Maniaces, occaſioned by his Power and Interceſſion for her Brother, as ſome write, though by a Sedition there happened upon her account it appears that ſhe lived longer.

The Iſland Cyprus reduced to obedience.

122. But the Civil War raiſed by Maniaces was not all the Difficulty wherewith the Emperour ſtrugled at the ſame time. Theophilus Eroticus the Governour of Cyprus, a man greedy of Novelty, when he heard of the Death of Calaphates, and the confuſion which thereupon happened, thinking it a ſeaſonable time for putting in practice what he had deſigned, put all the Inhabitants of the Iſland into a Tumult, and excited them to the Murther of Theophylact a Protoſpatharian, a Judge there, and the Chief Collectour of the Tributes. But it ſucceeded well that Conſtantine Chages a Patritian being ready at Hand, without any more trouble to the Emperour or much adoe, ſeduced the Iſland, and therein taking the Rebel brought him to Conſtantinople, where a Woman's Coat was put upon him, and therein he was ſhewn at the Circenſian Games, which done, and his Eſtate confiſcated, he was then diſmiſſed. On the ſecond of May following the Eyes of John the Brother and Great Miniſter of Michael the Paphlagonian were put out, ſome ſay by command of Theodora, but as moſt affirmed by order of Monomachus himſelf, out of revenge for his long Confinement, which misfortune he ſurvived vived but eleven days. In the month of July Stephen Sabaſtophorus was accuſed of Conſpiring againſt the Emperour, to prefer Leo a Patritian to his Place, and make the Son of Lampus Governour of Melitena; for which Stephen was condemned to a Monaſtick life, having all his Eſtate ſeized, and Lampus was cruelly tortured, ſhewed up and down the Forum, and deprived of his Eyes, after which he ſoon died. At the ſame time, the ſame month the Roſſians again took Arms, who had for a long time held ſo good correſpondence with the Empire, that there was mutual commerce,and the Merchants went to and fro without the leaſt Interruption. Now it happened that at Conſtantinople there was a quarrel amongſt the Trades-men, and it ſo fell out, that one of thoſe Scythian Merchants was killed. The Prince of the Countrey, Bladimer by Name, a paſſionate Man and reſtleſs, took the matter ſo heinouſly, that without any delay he raiſed all his Subjects that were fit to bear Arms, and beſides procuring many Auxiliaries out of the Northern Nations, an Army of a hundred thouſand Men he put into their uſual Boats, whereof each was made of one Tree, and ſo proceeded againſt the City. The Emperour aſſoon as he knew of his Deſign ſent to him, and offered all reaſonable ſatisfaction if he would lay down Arms, and preſſed him much not for ſlight cauſes to break that Peace which for ſo many years had been preſerved inviolable betwixt the Nations; but he returning a ſawcy Anſwer, and treating the Meſſengers with much diſreſpect, he then provided for his own ſecurity. All Scythian Merchants and others that were ſpread up and down the Empire he cauſed to be ſecured for fear of any Conſpiracy. Then got he ready all the Gallies and Veſſels he could compaſs, and putting aboard as many Forces as the time would permit him, he himſelf in a Pinnace led them againſt the Enemy, whom he found in the Straits about Pharus. Beſides his Fleet a ſtrong Party of Horſe waited and attended his motions all along the Shore.

The Roſſians break the League with the Empire.

Are met by the Emperour's Fleet, and defeated.

But ſome of the Gallies purſuing too far, are deſtroyed by the Enemy.

123. There the Fleets faced each other, but neither would begin the Fight; the Scythians keeping themſelves within the Haven, and the Romans attending what courſe they would Steer. The time being ſpent, and Night approaching, the Emperour ſent to Bladimer the ſecond time to move him to Peace, but he as peremptorily and ſawcily as ever, rejected his offer, declaring he would not lay down Arms except he ſhould have paid down three Pounds of Gold for every Man he had with him. This Anſwer being ſo inſolent and Extravagant, Monachus prepared himſelf to Fight. He gave order to Baſilius Theodorocranus a Magiſter, with three ſwift Gallies to make a gentle onſet to skirmiſh with the Roſſians, and provoke them to Fight, to ſee how they would order their matters. But he inſtead of skirmiſhing paſſed into the middle of them, burnt with Wild-fire ſeven of their Veſſels, ſunk other three with all the Men in them, and took another, having either killed or driven out all thoſe that were aboard. Then did the Emperour make up to them with his whole Fleet, which perceiving, they concluded that if they could not ſuſtain the violence of three Gallies, they ſhould never be able to endure the whole ſhock, and therefore ſhifted for themſelves as they could, ran upon the Rocks and Shelves, and loſt moſt of their Veſſels; and ſuch as eſcaped to the Shore the Emperour's Horſe fell upon and killed ſo many, that fifteen thouſand of their dead Bodies were afterwards found upon the Shore. The Scythians being thus defeated, after a farther ſtay of two days the Emperour returned to Conſtantinople, leaving a ſufficient Power under command of Nicholas one of the Chamber, and Theodorocranus with orders to look well to the Maritime Coaſt, not to ſuffer the Barbarians to land, and that the whole Fleet ſhould be ſtill in the Bay of Pharus. But however it happened, twenty four Triremes ſeparated from the reſt of the Fleet, purſued the Enemy ſo far till they paſſed the Bay wherein they lay, and were driven beyond them. The Scythians perceiving this, and how Wind and all things ſerved, reſolved to intercept their paſſage, which they eaſily did in the Straits, by lying thick from one ſhore to the other. There being no way to eſcape, Conſtantine Caballarius a Patritian, the Captain of the Cibyrræotæ with his and other Gallies endeavoured to make a paſſage, but was killed as he manfully fought, and his Ship with four others, together with the Men fell into the Hands of the Roſſians; the other Ships were ſplit upon the Rocks or run aſhore. The Men were ſome drowned, ſome killed or taken by the Enemy, and ſuch as eſcaped came in much ſhame and conſternation to their Friends. The Roſſians having beyond all expectation done ſo much miſchief, made the more comfortable Retreat. But being forced to return aſwell by Land as by Sea (ſo many of their Veſſels had miſcarried) they fell into the Territories of the Government of Catacalo, Beſta Ambuſtus, who then commanded the Coaſt about Iſter,

and

and were moſt of them killed and taken, of the later of which he ſent five Hundred bound in Chains to the Emperour, having, to his great Commendation when firſt theſe Scythians arrived, been very watchfull in his Charge, ſo as to hinder their landing, and deſtroy many of them. And his Care and Induſtry, he continued to this very laſt.

124. In the twelfth Indiction the Month of September, the ſecond year of Monomachus, ſo great a Tempeſt happened, that in a manner deſtroyed all the Grapes of that year. On the Ninth Day of March following, which was conſecrated to the Memory of the forty Martyrs, the Emperour being about his Devotion, was ſtopped by a Sedition of the People. Going on Foot in Proceſſion accompanied with his Guards, and followed by the Acclamations of the People, from the Palace to the Church of our Saviour in Chalce, he there took Horſe to paſs on to the Church of the Martyrs, when from amongſt the Multitude this Voice was heard. We will not have Scleræna be Empreſs, nor our Sovereign Ladies Zoe and Theodora Porphyrogenita, to die upon her Account; which caſt all into Confuſion and Tumults, wherein the Rabble demanded the Life of the Emperour, and they had taken it had not the two Empreſſes ſhewed themſelves to them from an high place, and by good words appeaſed them. But the Emperour was frighted from his Proceſſion, and was glad in an whole Skin to eſcape into the Palace. The following year, he thought himſelf concerned in honour to make challenge of a City which he found belonged to the Empire upon this occaſion. At ſuch time as George Prince of the Abaſgians, made War upon the Romans, he was aſſiſted by one Johaneſices, the Lord of a City called Anium. But when Baſilius the Emperour invaded Iberia, and was too hard for George, then Johaneſices fearing he ſhould be puniſhed for what he had done fled to the Emperour, and gave up himſelf with the Keys of the City into his Hands, which rendition Baſilius, accepting, honoured him with the Dignity of a Magiſter, and made him Governour of Anium and Armenia the Great for his Life, with this caution of writing, that after his death it ſhould revolve upon the Empire as Part thereof. But Baſilius being dead, and many years after him Johaneſices, his Son Cacicius entred upon the Government, and it being not obſerved kept his Fathers Territories in good Peace and Friendſhip with the Romans. Now Monomachus finding the writing in the Archives, was reſolved to make demand of the Reſtitution of Anium, and all the Great Armenia as the Heir of Baſilius. Cacicius profeſſed himſelf the Friend and Servant of the Emperour, but ſeeking for Excuſes and Delays, Monomachus reſolved to recover his Right by Force of Arms, and committed an Army to the Conduct of Michael Beſta, Jaſites newly deſigned Governour of Iberia, with order to make War upon Cacicius.

A Tumult in the City of Conſtantinople concerning Zoe and Theodora.

Conſtantine challenges the City Anium and Armenia the Great as belonging to the Empire.

125. Cacicius conſidering into what ſtraits he was brought, made all preparations he could for defence, and had rather the better of Jaſites, to whoſe aid then was ſent Nicholas Domeſtick of the Schools, formerly of the Chamber to Conſtantine the Emperour with a great Army, to ſuppreſs Cacicius by mere Numbers if nothing elſe will doe it, and moreover the Emperour wrote Letters to Apleſpharius the Governour of Tibium, and that Perſarmenia which lies upon the River Araxes, to fall upon him on his ſide the Countrey. Apleſpharius wrote back again, that on this Condition he would doe it, if the Emperour would under his Hand make a grant to him of whatſoever he ſhould take from Cacicius, which he did accordingly, an Inſtrument being written and confirmed by the Golden Bulla. He having received this, applied himſelf to his work, and took many Caſtles and Forts belonging to Cacicius, who being thus beſet on all ſides, and deſpairing to extricate himſelf out of ſuch difficulties, made Peace with Nicholas, and by him giving up himſelf and the City to the Emperour, afterward went to him, and from him receiving the Dignity of a Magiſter, with Ample Revenues from Cappadocia, and elſewhere, lived thenceforth a quiet and peaceable Life. Now did Monomachus demand the Caſtles and Forts, which Apleſpharius had taken as part of the Dominion of Anium, which he refuſing to ſurrender, and alledging the Golden Bull whereby they were granted to him, Command was ſent to Nicholas, with the Roman and Iberian Forces, and thoſe that had belonged to Cacicius to make War upon him, and recover them by Force. Nicholas accordingly ſends Jaſites to lay ſiege to Tibium. Apleſpharius being a very good Souldier, and knowing himſelf not in a condition to graple with the Romans, keeps himſelf within the Walls, and beforehand lays all the Ground adjoining under Water by Sluces made from the River, and he places in the Vineyards which were on

And ſending thither an Army hath them delivered up.

Then they lay Siege to Tibium.

on higher Ground a Number of Archers, whom he bid expect the ſign he ſhould give them by Trumpet, and in this poſture expect the coming of the Enemy. The Officers of the Romans finding him cloſe in the Town, and the Grounds under Water, concluded it was out of fear and deſperation, and haſted without order to get to the Walls by the ways that were left paſſable, and take poſſeſſion of what was already their own. Then did Apleſpharius give the ſign to thoſe he had placed in Ambuſh, who from the Vineyards with Arrows, Darts and Stones, made great ſlaughter of theſe unwary Men, who were ſo intangled in Thickets, Ditches and Water, that not able to defend themſelves or fly, an innumerable Number of them there periſhed, and Jaſites with ſome other Officers, eſcaped with the News of the Adventure and Succeſs to Nicholas. The Emperour having notice of the Defeat, put both Nicholas and Jaſites out of their Offices, and in place of the latter made Ambuſtus Governour of Iberia. In the Room of Nicholas he made General one Conſtantine Captain of the great Sodality, as it was termed, an Eunuch deſcended from the Saracens, but moſt faithfull to him, who had much ſerved him when yet in a private Condition. Theſe coming ſufficiently furniſhed into the Province, thought not fit to lay ſiege to Tibium the principal Town, but took in ſeveral Forts belonging to Anium, very ſtrong and ſituate on Craggy Rocks, which Apleſpharius often attempted to relieve; but in vain. Thence they removed to a ſtrong Caſtle near to Tibium, called Chelidonium, about which they drew a Trench, and had taken it or ſtarved out the Defendants; but that the Uſurpation of Tornicius in the Weſt, obſtructed both this and other Proceedings.

But by an Ambuſh are all cut off.

Μεγάλης ἐταιρείας ἄρχων.

126. This Leo Tornicius being formerly Governour of Iberia, had upon a ſurmize of a Conſpiracy for advancing himſelf been turn'd out of Command, been ſhaven and put into a Monaſtery, though the Emperour's near Kinſman by his Mother. His dwelling having been at Adrianople (formerly called Oreſtias, from Oreſtes the Son of Agamemnon) he had the Macedonians much at his Devotion, who exceedingly eſteemed him, for he was a Man both beautifull and of excellent parts, and had a certain way peculiar to himſelf of gaining love from thoſe with whom he converſed: but what got him moſt Reverence, a Report or Prophecy went about, that in time he ſhould come to be Emperour. Theſe and other things cauſed Monomachus his Kinſman much to diſtaſte him. On the other ſide, Eupropia the Emperour's Siſter uſed him with great reſpect: being a Woman indeed of a very generous mind, very noble and rich, but not at all acceptable to her Brother, who ſtood in awe of her, becauſe of her eminent Wiſedom. And to be even with him, ſhe neither received any thing from, nor frequented the Court, but when ſhe met him was wont to carry it very high towards him, would rebuke and chide him, and when he fell into paſſion for her ſo doing, would by ſilence contemn and diſſemble it. He perceiving her great affection to Tornicius, on purpoſe to ſeparate them made him Governour of Iberia, where all things proſpering under him, and he flouriſhing in great repute, thence ſome took occaſion of calumniating him to the Emperour, who cauſed him to be ſhaven and to take the Habit of a Monk. But the Macedonians, as was ſaid, being much addicted to him, carried away by Night out of Conſtantinople, and at Adrianople ſaluted him Emperour, whither great Confluence there was made of Souldiers from all thoſe Parts, either through deſire of Plunder and Innovation, out of love to him or hatred to Monomachus who had much diſtaſted, and as much diſtruſted of late the military Men. Thus incouraged, he reſolved with all ſpeed to march for Conſtantinople, which he had great hopes would inſtantly be put into his Hands by the Citizens, who for certain Cauſes bore neither at preſent any good will to the Emperour, and the Armies of the Eaſt had their Hands ſufficiently full in thoſe Quarters. With theſe hopes he incamped before the City, with intention to uſe violence if fair words would not prevail. The next Morning coming up with his Army to the Walls about Blachernæ, he ſummoned the Town, and by great promiſes invited thoſe that kept the Gates to open them; but they not onely refuſing, but reviling him with ill Language, he then gave the Onſet.

Zonaras.

Leo Tornicius uſurps.

Laying Siege to Conſtantinople.

127. The Emperour all this while was very ſolicitous, not being (at leaſt as he thought) ſufficiently provided for ſo ſurprizing a Miſchief. In the firſt place he ſent into Iberia to Conſtantine, to come to him with all the ſpeed he could make, whatever his buſineſs at preſent ſhould be. But for making effectual oppoſition againſt the Enemy now endeavouring to ſcale the Walls, he brought the Citizens and others together, not exceeding a thouſand Men. Now as to the Management of this affair, accounts counts are very different. Cedrenus writes of his going out into the Field, with a contemptible Number in reſpect of the Enemy, and how his Men were beaten back, and driven into the Trench, he himſelf with difficulty eſcaping into the City, which might have been taken with the greateſt eaſe, had the Uſurper proſecuted his Victory; not onely the Gates, but the Walls themſelves about Blachernæ, being left deſolate. On the other ſide Zonaras tells us, that the Emperour never went out of the City, but in his Imperialibus ſhewed himſelf upon the Wall, thinking thereby to ſtrike ſome awe into the Rebels. But the Macedonians on the contrary, being accuſtomed to ſcurrility, with bitter Invectives reviled him, ſinging Songs, and uſing Geſtures, choſen for ſuch an occaſion, and ſuch as iſſued out with Loſs and Ignominy they beat in again, or elſe killed or drowned them in the Trench before they could there arrive. But this opportunity which now in a manner begged his acceptance, Tornicius did not improve, purſuing thoſe that ſallied to the Walls, but never conſidering whether he could goe any farther. Monomachus ſeeing this, laid hold of the Advantage to bring the Citizens upon the Wall again, and to re-inforce the City, having narrowly eſcaped the ſhot of an Arrow, which fell upon one of the under Servants of his Bedchamber, though without any hurt. The day following, Tornicius renewed the Aſſault, but had no more any ſuch advantage, for he was both repulſed, and was nigh being killed by a Stone of a Talent weight, which was caſt out of an Engine, by which danger he was ſo affrighted and diſcouraged for want of Succeſs, and above all when he perceived, that his Men began to fall off from him to the Emperour, that fearing to be delivered up into his Hands, he raiſed his ſiege and retreated to Arcadiopolis, where he joined Forces with John Batatzes. All the Cities of Macedonia and Thrace had ſubmitted to him, Redeſtus excepted, which now he ſent ſeveral of his Captains and Kinſmen to beſiege, and afterward followed with all his Army, but attacked it without Succeſs. By this time the Eaſtern Forces were arrived, and the Emperour ſent them directly into Thrace againſt him, under Command of Michael Jaſites the Magiſter, who incamping himſelf againſt him at Arcadiople, would not ſuffer his Men to doe any Injury to the Countreymen, ſuch of Tornicius his Souldiers as he took he uſed very civily, and by good words and promiſe of Pardon, endeavoured to draw away all the reſt. Now Winter was at hand, and the Arts of Jaſites had ſuch influence upon them, that they began to conſider, that they could not undergo both the Incommodities of the Seaſon, the want of Proviſions, and ſuſtain the Violence of ſo powerfull an Enemy all together, by degrees they fell off to the Magiſter. For ſome time, notwithſtanding, Tornicius would not quit his hopes, as long as obſcure Perſons onely revolted. But when the great Commanders of his Army fell off, then with Batatzes who alone ſtuck by him, he conſulted how to eſcape, and when that could not be they betook themſelves into a Church, whence Jaſites cauſed them to be fetcht, and ſent them bound to the Emperour. On Chriſtmas-Eve by his Command their Eyes were put out, ſuch as were moſt eminent in the Rebellion, were ignominiouſly led about the Forum, then baniſhed, and their Eſtates confiſcated. The ordinary ſort were all ſent away into their own Countries.

But not purſuing his Victory is forced to raiſe the Siege.

And retreat to Arcadiopolis.

There he is deſerted by his Followers, and puniſhed for his Rebellion.

128. Thus was Monomachus happily delivered from this Civil War, but another from abroad now fell upon him, to the Empire the moſt miſchievous of all others, becauſe made upon it by the Turks, who in concluſion by their furious and victorious Arms put an end to it, and erected one of their own in its Place. The Turks, ſay our Authours, were an Hunniſh Nation, inhabiting the Northern Parts of the Mountain Caucaſus, moſt populous and free, as having never ſubmitted the Neck to the Yoke of any Perſon or People, but laid one of their own upon ſeveral others by Degrees, and firſt upon this occaſion. After ſuch time as the Saracens had overturned the Kingdom of the Perſians, and had not onely ſubdued Perſia, but Media, Babylon, Aſſyria, Egypt, Africk, and no ſmall Part of Europe it ſelf, they began to fall out among themſelves, and their vaſt Empire was divided into ſeveral Portions, ſo that Spain, Africk, Ægypt, Babylon and Perſia had their ſeveral Princes, and theſe Wars one with another. At ſuch time as Baſilius was Emperour, Muchumator Mahomet the Son of Imbrael, was Prince of Perſia, the Choraſmi, Oretani and Media, having War with the Indians and Babylonians, and put hard to it ſent to the Prince of the Turks for aſſiſtence, deſiring three thouſand Men, which he accordingly ſent him under Command of Tragelipax, or Tangrolipix Mucalet the Son of Michael, hoping by this means to have a Paſſage opened into Perſia, which was hitherto ſtopped by the ſeveral

The Turks make War upon the Empire.

Tangrolipix a Turk aſſiſts the Saracens againſt the Arabians.

ſtrong

But refuſing to fight with the Indians. He revolts.

ſtrong Forts which ſtood upon the River Araxes. Mahomet making uſe of theſe Auxiliaries eaſily maſtered Piſaſtrius Prince of the Arabians whoſe Men could not endure the force of their Arrows. After this he would have uſed them againſt the Indians; but they deſired to be diſmiſſed and to have the Garriſon removed from the Bridge of Araxes by which they muſt of neceſſity paſs, and when he refuſed, and went to offer violence, they revolted and betook themſelves to the Wilderneſs of Carbonitis and the Mountains, not daring to abide a Battel becauſe they were ſo ſmall a Number. Upon the Saracens they fell down continually, and did much miſchief to the adjacent Parts, ſo that to deſtroy them Muchumet ſent an Army of twenty Thouſand Men commanded by ten of the moſt Noble of his Nation. The Captains thought it not ſafe to enter the Deſart being not provided of neceſſaries for ſo deſolate a place, but incamped themſelves at the entrance, which Tangrolipix underſtanding fell upon them by night when they little expected it, eaſily defeated them, and finding in their Camp many Chariots and Horſes with much Money, now would not like a Fugitive practiſe Robberies and make incurſions by ſtealth, but openly ſhew himſelf as a fair Warriour. And all Malefactours and diſcontented Perſons that could, now came in to him from the Neighbouring Countries, eſpecially ſuch as loved to maintain themſelves by Rapine and Violence, ſo that in a ſhort time his force was increaſed to fifty Thouſand Men.

And defeating Mahomet is declared Sultan and King of all the Dominions of the Perſians and Saracens.

Seizes on the Dominions of Babylon.

129. Mahomet inraged at the defeat put out the Eyes of the ten Commanders and threatned ſuch Souldiers as had eſcaped to lead and ſhew them abroad in Womens Cloaths, which cauſed whem now when he prepared to renew the War to run from him to Tangrolipix, who now came and offered Mahomet Battel. He notwithſtanding the revolt of theſe Men had got another Army together of Saracens, Perſians, Caberians and Arabians, of about five hundred Thouſand and with an hundred Elephants bearing Turrets on their backs gave Battel to his Enemy in a place called Aſpachan, which was fought with much vigour on both ſides, but he riding about to animate his Souldiers chanced to fall from his Horſe and broke his Neck, whereby the Quarrel was decided, for his Army then ſubmitted and Tangrolipix by univerſal conſent was declared King of Perſia and all Mahomet's Dominions. Tangrolipix thus promoted preſently cleared the Bridge of Araxes, and then his Countreymen in great multitudes flocked to him, wherewith having ſufficiently ſtrengthened himſelf he took the Title of Sultan (by which Abſolute Emperour or King of Kings is meant) and inſlaving the Saracens and Perſians divided all the Countrey amongſt the Turks. Having here ſettled his Affairs he reſolved to make War upon the Neighbouring Princes and firſt overthrew in ſeveral Battels and killed him of Babylon whoſe Dominions he then ſeized into his hands. After this he ſent Cuthimuſes (his Brother's ſome call him, others his Uncle's Son) againſt the Arabians from whom he received a notable defeat, and in his flight asked leave of Stephen a Patritian the Emperour's Governour of Media (at that time called Baſpracæn) to paſs through that Countrey, which he denying, he made his way by force and worſting Sephen who oppoſed him took him Priſoner, and in his paſſage through Trabrezium ſold him to the Lord of the Place. Returning to the Sultan he excuſed himſelf of the blow received from the Arabians, whom he would undertake to ſubdue if he might but be ſent the ſecond time; and by the way he ſpake of Baſpracæn, how fertile a Countrey it was and eaſie to be Conquered being held by Women, as he termed thoſe Roman Souldiers with whom he had fought.

But is beaten by the Arabians.

Then he ſends an Army into Media.

130. But the Sultan was ſo inraged at him that he deſigned to put him to death for the loſs in Arabia, and as for Media, he feared to make War againſt the Romans being awed by the fame which the Emperours Nicephorus, Zimiſces and Baſilius had obtained in the World, and concluding with himſelf that the valour and power of the Empire was ſtill the ſame. But while he deliberated hereof Cuthimuſes for fear, fled and ſeized on a City in the Countrey of the Choraſmii called Paſar, a very ſtrong place. When now the Sultan was moving againſt the Arabians who had the ſame ſucceſs againſt him, as his Kinſman, and he returned home with the like diſgrace. This ſhould have made him have better thoughts of Cuthimuſes, but he beſieged him in Paſar, whence he made many ſallies, and did much damage to the Sultan, who now beſides this Iron in the Fire made himſelf ſtill more work by ſending an Army of about twenty Thouſand Men to Conquer Media under command of Aſan the Deaf his Brother's Son. Aſan entring the Countrey deſtroyed all things in his way, ſparing neither Sex nor Age. The Countrey was then Governed by Aaron Beſta the Son of Bladiſthlabus and Brother of Pruſianus, who finding himſelf too weak to graple with the Turks wrote to Catacalo Beſta, Ambuſtus the Governour of Axium and Iberia to come to his aid with all the ſpeed he could make, which he accordingly did, uſing great expedition. When they came together and it was propounded whether they ſhould fall upon the Turks by night or openly give them Battel by day, Catacalo was pleaſed with neither but adviſed to have the Camp left with the Baggage and carriage Beaſts and to lie in Ambuſh till the Turks ſhould be buſie in the Plunder of it. The Device took ſo well that Aſan coming to give them Battel and perceiving there was no body left in their Camp, preſumed they were fled out of fear, and boldly bad his men enter and ſeize on the Booty. Then did the Romans about vening riſe from their Ambuſh and taking them in ſo much diſorder killed moſt of them with their Captain, very few eſcaping through the Mountains into the Cities of Perſarmenia.

Which is cut off by the Romans.

131. The Sultan was grievouſly perplexed at the News yet to repair his loſs by better ſucceſs he got together of an Army an hundred Thouſand Men conſiſting of Turks, Caberi and Limnitæ, which he committed to Abram Alim his half Brother for a ſecond attempt upon Media. Upon notice of their coming Aaron and Ambuſtus again united their forces and Councils. Catacalo's advice was to fight them e'er they came into the Roman Territories while they were weary, a great part of them wanted Horſes, and ſuch Horſes as wanted ſhooes whereas the Roman Souldier was full of courage animated by his late ſucceſs. On the contrary Aaron affirmed that they ought by no means to hazard a Battel againſt ſuch a multitude, but that all the ſtrong places were to be fortified, and all they had was to be put within the Walls till they could ſend to the Emperour, and from him receive orders what to doe in ſo difficult a caſe. This courſe was taken, and having put all the Women and Children and all their beſt things into the ſtrong places they two ſent to the Emperour, and withdrew into a plain of Iberia by the Natives called Oſurtru. The Emperour wrote back to them that they ſhould attempt nothing till Liparites Prince of part of Iberia ſhould joyn with them, to whom he ſent as he was a Friend and Ally of the Empire not to fail it at this time. Liparites at his Leiſure raiſed his Men when in the mean time Abram having entred Media, and perceiving that the Roman forces had out of fear withdrawn themſelves into Iberia reſolved to march after them with all ſpeed, and fight them e'er they ſhould be increaſed by Acceſſion of new ſupplies. The Captains having notice hereof, leſt they ſhould be ſurprized before the coming of Liparites wrote to him to haſten, and betook themſelves to a place, very difficult of Acceſs. Alim not being able to come at them, went to Artze a Village of great capacity wherein lived a great Number of Merchants and Tradſmen not onely of the Countrey, but Syrians alſo, and Armenians, and of other Nations, and the inhabitants truſting to their Numbers though they had no Walls ſtoutly defended themſelves, by ſtopping up the Paſſages, and from their Houſes caſting down Stones, Wood and Darts upon the Turks, whom thus they held in play for ſix days together. This coming to the Ears of Ambuſtus in the Roman Camp he moſt earneſtly urged that they might not ſtay for the Loitering Liparites, but take this advantage while the Turks were thus buſied at the Village, and fall upon them: but Aaron refuſed to joyn with him affirming he would doe nothing but what he was warranted by the Emperour.

Another Expedition into Media.

Laying Siege to Artze.

132. Abram finding what he did not expect, ſo great reſiſtence, and that he could not by force of Arms Conquer one Village, the Wealth of which he moſt vehemently thriſted after, reſolved to conſume all he could not get and ſet it on fire, by which the inhabitants being forced out; (though an hundred and fifty Thouſand are ſaid to have periſhed partly ſlain by the Sword and partly burnt in the fire, into which many it's reported caſt themſelves) he found much Silver and other things that were not combuſtible. Beſides he got many Horſes and other Cattel, and ſo led away his Army well inriched in queſt of the Romans. Liparites being by this time come to them, they were come down into the Plain, and had pitched at the Foot of an Hill on which ſtood a Caſtle called Capetrum. The Turks now marching in no order but running in Herds together, Ambuſtus moved that in this condition they might fall upon them; but now Liparites refuſed to fight out of a ſuperſtitious humour, becauſe it was Saturday which he reckoned amongſt unlucky days, being the eighteenth of September and the ſecond Indiction, in the ſeventh year of Monomachus. But Abram underſtanding by his Scouts where, and in what condition the Enemy lay, marched up to them in due order of Battel, which they perceiving, put themſelves how unwillingly ſoever into the like poſture to receive them: Ambuſtus led the Right and Aaron the

Which is burnt and Sack't by the Turks.

They meet and ingaging the Roman Army are defeated.

But take Captive Liparites one of the Roman Generals.

Sending him to the Sultan.

the Left Wing; the middle of the Battel being left to the Conduct of Liparites. To Ambuſtus was oppoſite Abram himſelf, to Aaron another of the Turkiſh Commanders called Choroſanites, and to Liparites one Aſpam Selarius the half Brother of Abram. The fight began a little before Sunſet, and both Ambuſtus and Aaron defeated their Oppoſites, and purſued them till Cocks crow. But Liparites inraged for the loſs of a Kinſman, to be revenged ingaged more deſperately than prudently and was taken Priſoner, being much expected by his Friends who returning from the purſuit and lighting from their Horſes gave God thanks for the Victory in theſe words, ſinging, What God is ſo great as our God? Expecting with great longing to hear what was become of Liparites whom at firſt they concluded to be in purſuit of the Enemy they were at length put out of all doubt by the coming of one that had ſerved under him who affirmed him taken and led away bound to ſuch place as he that took him pleaſed. The Roman Captains notwithſtanding their Victory were ſo ſtruck with the News, that paſſing that night without ſleep, in the Morning they conſulted what was to be done; and all reſolved to depart home. Thereupon Aaron with his Men returned to Ibane the Metropolis of Baſpracan or Media, and Catacalo with his went back to Anium. But Abram overjoyed that he had taken Liparites, and thereupon thinking himſelf the moſt happy Man alive, omitting all other buſineſs conveyed him himſelf five days Journey, and then ſent him away to the Sultan who made a ſhew of joy for the taking of ſo conſiderable a Man; but envying his Brother the good fortune, as he had formerly Stomached Cutlumuſus for his bad, reſolved to make him alſo away, and for that watched his opportunity.

But by preſents is redeemed and ſent Home, and with him an Ambaſſadour from the Turks to the Emperour.

Tyrach Prince of the Patzinacæ.

From whom Kegenes Revolts.

133. The Emperour having News of the Captivity of Liparites deſired above meaſure to have him freed, and for that purpoſe ſent one to the Sultan with Preſents of the value of his Ranſom offering alſo to make a Peace and Alliance with him. The Sultan that he might ſeem a generous Prince rather than a Man of violence and Robbery ſent him Liparites Gratis, receiving the Preſents that were ſent him, but he gave them all to his Priſoner, adviſing him to have him in his mind, and no more to bear Arms againſt the Turks. And he ſent in Ambaſſage to the Emperour their Seriph, who had the ſame Relation to their Caliſph, as the Syncellus at Conſtantinople in old time had to the Patriarch, ſucceeding him in ordinary courſe when he died. The Seriph at his audience ſpeaking many things arrogantly and boaſtingly according to their faſhion required, that the Romans ſhould become Tributaries to his Maſter, and when the Emperour would hear of no ſuch matter returned home. This Hint cauſed Monomachus in expectation of War to provide for the ſecurity of the Provinces, when violence was offered to them by an Enemy in another Quarter, the Patzinacæ a People of Scythia. This People being of that ſort of Scythians then termed Royal, the moſt powerfull of them all was divided into thirteen Tribes, which though they all made up one Nation, yet each received Denomination from its own Prince. They poſſeſſed beyond Iſter the Champion extending from Boryſthenes to Pannonia, not being any where fixt but wandring from place to place, and always dwelling in Tents. Their Prince at this time was Tyrach the Son of Kilter a Man of Noble extract, but very Lazy and heavy. But there was one Kegenes the Son of Baltzar, by Birth obſcure, but of great fame for Arms which he had obtained in his Conduct againſt the Uzzian Hunniſh Nation whom making incurſions he had often repulſed with great loſs, Tyrach not daring to ſhew his Head, but lurking in the Fenns about Iſter. The People reverencing Tyrach for his extraction, but much more admiring the other for his valour, he grew ſo jealous of him that he reſolved to take his Life, which often attempting ſecretly without ſucceſs, at length he openly ſent a Company to ſeize, and kill him. But Kegenes having timely notice of their coming made his eſcape into the Fenns of Boryſthenes whence he ſent and procured his Friends and his own Tribe called the Tribe of Belemarne with another which had the name of Paguman to revolt from Tyrach.

Putting himſelf under the Protection of the Emperour.

134. With theſe two Tribes he Ingaged and Fought Tyrach, aſſiſted by eleven, being oppreſſed with multitudes and being defeated, reſolved the onely means of his ſafety, was to go over to the Emperour. He went to Doroſtolus, and there paſſing into a River Iſland with his Men to the Number of twenty Thouſand, ſent to Michael the Son of Anaſtaſius Governour of the Countrey to let him know who he was, and the reaſon of his coming, which was to put himſelf into the Emperour's protection, whoſe intereſt he doubted not very much to promote. The Governour having communicated his deſires to the Emperour received orders to receive him courteouſly with his Men, to provide them of all neceſſaries and ſend him to Conſtantinople where he was entertained with all the kindneſs he could expect. He promiſed to be Baptized and to perſwade his Countreymen alſo to turn Chriſtians, and was Honoured with the Dignity of Patritian: then were aſſigned to him three Caſtles with large Grounds on the Bank of Iſter and he and all his Men received Baptiſm. When he was conveniently ſetled he made frequent inrodes into the Territories of Tyrach, where he killed all the Men, and ſold the Women and Children to the Romans for ſlaves. Hereupon Tyrach ſent the Emperour to expoſtulate for that being a Friend and Ally of the Patzinacæ he had received their Enemy and Fugitive, and required that he would not any more afford him any aſſiſtence for the invaſion of their Countrey; otherwiſe he denounced War againſt him. Of this meſſage the Emperour made very light, and laught at it as unreaſonable, whereupon the Meſſengers departed as they came. He wrote to Michael and Kegenes to look narrowly to the Bank of Iſter, and to ſend him word in caſe any conſiderable Army made any attempt to paſs that River, to prevent which he ſent an hundred Gallies to hover about thoſe Coaſts. But to render theſe Gallies uſeleſs, Tyrach expected the coming of Winter and a Froſt, which having cruſted over the River to the thickneſs of fifteen Cubits, he then paſſed over with all the Power he could make, and with his Numbers, which amounted to eight hundred thouſand Men, overwhelmed, as it were, the Roman Provinces. The Emperour having ſpeedy notice hereof, as ſpeedily ſent away to Conſtantine Arianites the Magiſter and Governour of Adrianople, and to Baſilius Monachus the General of Bulgaria, with the Forces of Macedonia and Bulgaria to join themſelves with Michael and Kegenes, which accordingly they did. The Roman Armies being united, Kegenes as he ſaw his advantages, being better acquainted than any other with the humour of his Countrey Men, made many Aſſaults upon them, who having on this ſide the River light upon Wine and Drinks made with Honey, of which before they had never taſted, thereof drank ſo intemperately, that great multitudes of them died every day. This being made known to Kegenes, he prevailed with the other Captains to fall upon them now when they were diſtreſſed by Cold and Sickneſs; though with ſome Reluctancy, to ingage in Fight with ſo great Multitudes.

Upon which War is denounced againſt the Romans.

Wherein Tyrach, the King and the whole Army of the Patzinacæ are defeated and taken.

135. A ſudden and fierce onſet being made upon them, they were ſo much therewith affrighted that this added to their other diſtreſs, they threw down their Arms, and yielded aſwell Tyrach and the moſt Noble, as the reſt of the multitude. Kegenes very vehemently urged that they ſhould all be put to Death, which he executed on many upon whom he light, with this ſaying, that A Snake is to be killed in Winter while he cannot move his Tail, leſt when Summer comes (animated afreſh by the heat of the Sun) he doe more miſchief. But the Roman Captains abhorring ſo great cruelty, thought fit they ſhould be beſtowed in the Deſart places of Bulgaria, a Tribute put upon them, by which a good Revenue would accrue to the Emperour, and he might be furniſht with Souldiers againſt the Turks or other Enemies. They prevailed againſt Kegenes, who yet to doe what lay in his power, killed all he had taken except ſuch as he could make Money of, and went his way. The reſt of the multitude Baſilius the Governour of Bulgaria diſperſed through the Plains of Sardica, Naiſus and Eutzapelus, taking from them all their Weapons leſt they ſhould afterward attempt any thing. Tyrach and an hundred and forty others were ſent up to Conſtantinople, where they were kindly entertained by the Emperour, Baptized, had Honours and Wealth conferred on them, and lived with greater content and pleaſure than formerly. But by this time the Sultan diſpleaſed by the Anſwer to his Meſſage, had gathered Forces out of Perſia and Babylonia, and renewed the War: Monomachus upon notice, beſides other preparations cauſed fifteen thouſand of the lately Conquered Patzinacæ to be Armed, and giving them four Commanders of thoſe who abode at Conſtantinople, whom he richly preſented and adorned with coſtly Armour, ſent them into Iberia under Conduct of Conſtantine Hadrobalanus a Patritian. They went on their way as far as Melitena, but drawing near to Damatrys, and conſulting what to doe with themſelves, they abhorred ſo much the thoughts of going into Iberia, by the Advice of Catalune one of their Officers they reſolved to return back to their Countreymen, and following his example in taking the Sea with his Horſe, ſwom over it being narrow, for they had no Boats, and by a prodigious adventure got back to Traditza. There arming their Companions as they could they did much miſchief to the Roman Territores, and ſome of them removing to the River Oſmus, and the Countrey lying about Iſter, thence they made excurſions into Thrace and Macedonia, having the better of ſuch Captains as oppoſed them, till at length they made a Truce with the Romans for thirty years.

The Sultan renews the War upon the Emperour, who ſending fifteen thouſand Patzinacæ againſt him, they return back into their own Countrey.

After which a Truce with them for thirty years.

The Sultan is repelled every where.

And laying Siege to Mantzikierte.

136. In the mean time the Sultan was with all his Force entred into Iberia, where the Inhabitants had ſhut up themſelves and their Wealth in the ſtrong Towns, ſo that being come as far as Comium, and there underſtanding that the Roman Army was to Rendeſvouz at Cæſarea, he would not venture to proceed, but returned in great wrath becauſe he could perform no greater things. Paſſing into Baaſpracan or Media, and there finding all in the ſame poſture, in Indignation he was reſolved to attacque ſome of the Garriſons, and ſell upon a City called Mantzikierte, ſituate in a Champion Soil, fortified by a triple Wall, and furniſhed largely with Water and all other neceſſaries, of which the Inhabitants had timely provided themſelves. Thinking becauſe of its ſituation with eaſe to become Maſter of it, he attacqued it with all ſorts of Engines for thirty days without intermiſſion; but nothing could he gain upon it, the valour and induſtry of Baſilius a Patritian the Governour, a very prudent Perſon fruſtrating all his Attempts. Wearied with the frequent Repulſes he received, he purpoſed to raiſe his Siege, when Alcan the Captain of the Coraſmii begged of him but to continue it one day longer, and commit it to his management, which was readily granted. By break of day Alcan having his men and all things in readineſs, placed the Sultan and the moſt eminent Perſons about him on an Hill near the Eaſtern Gate to be Spectatours of what ſhould follow; and then to that Gate applied all his Engines and Devices, becauſe in that place the Wall ſeemed lower, and the place where he ſhould ſtand ſomewhat higher, ſo that it afforded advantage to doe execution upon thoſe within the Walls. The Army he divided into two parts, whereof the one he ordered to ſtand upon that Ground to ſhoot into the Town, the other with Forks and other ruſtical Inſtruments to bear up a ſort of Engine called Læſa, and bear it to the Walls. This Læſa was a kind of Hurdle or Tent made of Boughs, and above covered with an Ox Hide, born with Feet or Pillars which ſtood upon Wheels. This they were to thruſt to the Walls, which under covert of it they were to demoliſh; for he concluded that all Arrows or Darts would be kept off by the Hide above, and they might work at the Walls as he pleaſed, eſpecially ſeeing his Archers placed upon that advantageous Ground would not permit any to appear upon the Battlements. But Baſilius perceiving what he aim'd at, gave order to ſuch as were to defend the Walls not to appear nor ſhew themſelves, but to have in readineſs great Stones, Arrows and Darts, and expect the ſign, which was, Chriſt help us; and he had prepared ſome very great Beams which were ſharpned at one end. Now Alcan ſeemed to himſelf by his ſhowrs of Arrows, to have driven all from the Battlements, and therefore the Læſæ were put to the Walls, which being come ſo near that they could not go back, Baſilius gave the watch-word, and out came they that had the guidance of the Beams, and let them fall upon the Læſæ: then did others plye them with great Stones and other things, whereby the Tops of them were quite broken, and they within were expoſed to all Arrows, Darts and other things that came to Hand, and all periſhed, amongſt whom Alcan himſelf: he being known by the goodneſs of his Armour, two Young Men iſſued out and by his Hair drew him in at the Gate, which done, Baſilius cauſed his Head to be cut off and ſhot amongſt the Turks. At the ſight of it the Sultan was much troubled, and broke up his Siege, pretending he was called away by more urgent Affairs, and threatning the next ſpring with greater Forces to make another Journey into the Roman Territories.

Is forced to riſe and go Home.

137. The Emperour being ſolicitous about his return, and deſirous to be Revenged of Apleſphar, who having broken the League made with Conſtantine, had invaded his Dominions, gathered all the Forces of the Eaſt together, and over them appointed for Commander one Nicephorus an Eunuch, and formerly his Chaplain when a private Man, but who ſince had for love of the World renounced his Orders. Him he now graced with the Title of Governour and General of the Camp, and ſent him into the Eaſt, not becauſe of any valour or skill he had, but becauſe he knew him faithfull to him. This Nicephorus proceeding as far as the Iron Bridges, as they were called, and Cantzacium, light not upon the Turks (for they upon hearing what Preparations were made againſt them under Command of Abimilech the Brother of Cutlumuſus, were returned Home) but forced Apleſphar within the Walls, and waſting the Countrey, compelled him again to make Peace, and renew the League, for confirmation whereof he gave up as Hoſtage Artaſiras the Son of Phatlum his Brother, Prince of the Region of Cantzacium, whom having received, Nicephorus as having performed enough, returned to Conſtantinople. In the mean time the Patzinacæ, as we hinted, paſſing over Hæmus, and viewing the Plain which lay betwixt it and Iſter, and extends it ſelf as far as the Sea; and perceiving how well it was Wooded and Watered, there ſate down (the Inhabitants called it, An hundred Hills) and thence made Incurſions into the Dominions of the Empire, the ſubjects of which they not a little moleſted. Upon this occaſion Kegenes was ſent for by the Emperour to Conſult, and lying with his Forces in a Field near to the City, while as yet he knew not wherefore he was ſent, three of the Patzinacæ his Countreymen made an attempt upon his life, and wounded him by Night though not mortally, for ſome of his Guard coming timely in, they ſtruck not courageouſly, but endeavouring to eſcape, as much more Aſſiſtence came in with Baltzar the Son of Kegenes, they were taken. They appealed to the Emperour; whereupon Baltzar put his Father into a Chariot with four Wheels, and after him drew them bound, and ſo with all his Horſe, he himſelf, together with his Brother Gulin followed on Foot, and entred the City till they came to the Cirque, then leaving there the reſt, he himſelf went to the Emperour. At ſight of him the Emperour demanded why he had not at firſt put to Death the Aſſaſſinates, to which he anſwered, becauſe they had appealed unto him. Hereupon Monomachus grew ſuſpicious, and ſent immediately for the Men, who being asked the cauſe of the Attempt, affirmed they did it for his ſake, and for the Empire and City, to which Kegenes was a Traitour, having a deſign by break of Day to have entred, killed all, and with the Plunder to return to his own Countreymen.

The Patzinacæ make freſh incurſions into the Empire, upon which Kegenes is ſent for to Conſtantinople,

And is there kept Priſoner.

But his Followers return to their Countreymen, making freſh Incurſions.

Upon which an Army is ſent againſt them.

138. Now whereas the Emperour ſhould have made ſtrict Inquiſition, and ſifted out the matter, he gave credit to the improbable and ill coherent tales of theſe Fellows, and cauſing Kegenes to be brought to Court, under pretence of Cure and Phyſick, kept him cloſe up, ſeparated his Sons the one from the other, and pretending great kindneſs to his Men, and flattering them with large allowance of Meat and Drink, endeavoured by degrees, and as he could to diſarm them, and commit the principal of them to cuſtody, giving free leave in the mean time to the Aſſaſſinates to go where ever they pleaſed. Yet thought he for all this to cover his deſign, though the Patzinacæ proved far more cunning, and deceived the Deceiver as he thought himſelf. They took very thankfully what he ſent them, and made ſhew of much contentment and obedience; but conſidering all theſe particulars they were well ſatisfied as to their Inclinations, and by Night got them away from the Camp, and travelling hard on the third Day by great Journeys paſſed the Hæmus, and joined themſelves with their Countreymen. Now being all united and having Arms ſufficient, they came over the Mountain to a Caſtle called Aula, not far from Adrianople, and thence waſted the Countries adjacent, which aſſoon as Conſtantine Areianites the Magiſter and General of the Weſt underſtood, he drew out ſome Forces againſt them, and lighting upon ſome Straglers and Parties had at firſt the better of them, but Ingaging their main Body near a Fort called Dampolis, there he was defeated, with the loſs of many men; and returning to Adrianople gave notice thereof to the Emperour, ſignifying that there was neceſſity of bringing another Army into the Field, and that no good could be expected from thoſe who had been already beaten againſt ſo reſolved and numerous an Enemy. The Emperour had had notice of the defeat before his Letters arrived, and had ſent to Tyrach and the other Noblemen of the Patzinacæ, then reſiding at Conſtantinople, whom having richly Preſented they engaged by Oath to pacifie and quiet their Nation. He ſent alſo for all the Forces of the Eaſt, which having paſſed over from Abydus and Chryſopolis, he then aſſigned them Nicephorus the Rectour for their Captain, to whom he joyned Catacalo the General of the Eaſt, and Erbebius a Frank Captain of his Countreymen, yet ſo as to be obedient to his Orders. Conſtantine marching with his Army over Hæmus, came to a place called Diacene, and there incamped and fortified himſelf, purpoſing the day following to leave all his Baggage there, and ſo with the Army diſintangled from all Incumbrances to Fight the Enemy, whom he ſo contemned as not fearing to have the better of them, it onely perplexed him how to prevent their running away, and eſcaping his Victorious Arms. Nay the Souldiers being as confident as their Captain; ſome of them had prepared Ropes and Thongs wherewith to lead away their Priſoners.

Ingens Cedreni Lacuna ex Hiſtoria Scylitzæ Curopalatæ ſuppletur.

139. In the mean time Tyrach and the reſt of the Nobility whom the Emperour had diſmiſſed were come to the Patzinacæ, and conſpired with the reſt for the beſt promotion of the Affairs of their Countrey, ſo far were they from accompliſhing what they had ſworn at their departure. Conſtantine conſulting what was fitteſt to be done, Ambuſtus was for falling on them while they were yet diſperſed and out of order, which the General out of Gallantry refuſed, ſaying that

They would run away into the Woods, and for his part he had no Dogs to Hunt them out. But this fault was quickly amended, for the Patzinacæ drew up in order towards him, and then the next Morning he prepared to give them Battel. He himſelf led the middle Battel, Ambuſtus the Right, and Francopullus the Left Wing; but without much labour they loſt the day, the Romans ignominiouſly betaking themſelves to their Heels, onely Ambuſtus and thoſe about him fighting manfully were ſlain: the Patzinacæ durſt not make any conſiderable purſuit for fear of Ambuſhes, hardly imagining they could be earneſt in running upon ſo little provocation. The Emperour at the News was much netled, but not able to recall what he had done in the choice of a General, reſolved if poſſible to repair the loſs the following year. In the third Indiction, and the eighth year of his Reign he ſent for his Army out of the Eaſtern Parts, which he committed to the Conduct of Conſtantine Captain of the Friends or Aſſociates, and commanded him to joyn with the Forces ſtill in Thrace, and chaſtize (if poſſible) the obſtinate Patzinacæ. He went to Adrianople, and there uniting his Forces, incamped himſelf within a Rampart; and the Patzinacæ hearing of his coming, ſhortly after came up to him on the eighth day of June. While he was in a Council of War conſulting what to doe, Samuel Burtzes one of his Officers without any orders led the Foot he Commanded, he ſet upon the Enemy, who far exceeding him in numbers ſore diſtreſſed him, ſo that he ſent ſeveral Meſſengers to the General for Aſſiſtence, who though he could have wiſhed him puniſhed for his raſhneſs, yet conſidering it was the Emperour's buſineſs, concluded he muſt not neglect it, and ſo was conſtrained to give the Signal for Battel.

But is put to Flight.

So that more Forces are raiſed.

Ἑταίρειαρχα.

140. He went in to the Succour of Burtzes, but could not prevail againſt the obſtinate Enemy, who much animated by vanquiſhing the Foot already, eaſily diſcouraged the Horſe, ſo that Horſe and Foot both ran ignominiouſly within the Rampart, and there ſecured themſelves, after the Loſs of many Men and ſeveral Perſons of Eminence, as Michael Doceianus a Patritian, and Conſtantinus Areianitus the Magiſter, who died on the third Day after of his Wounds. The Patzinacæ beſieged them in the Rampart, and had certainly taken it, but that they were diſcouraged by an accident, an arrow out of an Engine killing one Sultzus, and his Horſe under him, when at the ſame time it chanced, that Glabas Nicetas drew near with ſome Succours from Adrianople, which they imagining to be Baſilius with the Forces of Bulgaria, would not abide his coming, but diſperſed themſelves. While matters went thus abroad, at home in the City, a Conſpiracy was diſcovered againſt the Emperour, whereof were Authours, Nicephorus and Michael the Sons of Nicephorus, with others of their Relations. Inquiſition was made after all Offenders, but none were puniſhed, but Nicephorus whoſe Eſtate was ſeized, and then he ſent into Baniſhment. Monomachus rid of this Danger, ſet himſelf wholly to vindicate the Honour of the Empire againſt the Patzinacæ. Kegenes he took out of Priſon and ſent him to them, he ingaging to take them off from their outrageous Courſes. All the Forces he could raiſe out of his own Subjects, and his Allies he cauſed to be got together, in particular the Franks and Barangi, over every Nation he appointed for Commander ſome Eminent Perſon of their own, and over all made General Nicephorus Bryennius a Patritian, whom upon this occaſion he called Ethnarch, and ſent him againſt the Patzinacæ, who now very much deſpiſing the Romans, freely and without any fear laid all waſte they could come at in Macedonia and Thrace. Their Cruelty they exerciſed more than ever, not ſparing the Infants that hung at the Breaſt, and ſome of them were ſo bold as to come as far as Cataſyrtæ, not far diſtant from Conſtantinople, and were paid well for their boldneſs. For the Emperour ſet out a Party againſt them, collected out of his own Guards, and others under Command of John, ſirnamed Philoſophus a Patritian, one of the Eunuchs belonging to the Chamber of Zoe the Empreſs, which falling on them by Night when drunk and ſleepy, made an end of them all, and ſent up Cart-loads of their Heads to Monomachus.

Which are alſo defeated.

A Conſpiracy at home, but diſcovered and puniſhed.

Kegenes releaſed out of Priſon.

The whole Force of the Empire ingaged againſt the Patzinacæ.

Who had the boldneſs to come near to Conſtantinople but pay for it.

141. But in the mean time Kegenes to perform his promiſe made to the Emperour, came near to his Countreymen and ſent to them to let them know his mind, to which they returning this Anſwer, and confirming it by Oath that they would be governed by him, he truſted and went to them, but was no ſooner come, but they cut him to pieces, and thoſe very ſmall ones. Bryennius coming to Adrianople, took care for preſervation of the Countrey; for the Emperour thinking not yet enough done, ſent after him Michael a Patritian, and Acoluthus, or Captain of his Guards, with a new ſupply, and to have the chief Command, but but with Order to be carefull how he ingaged in Battel, and in the firſt place to repreſs the Incurſions of the Enemy, into the poor haraſſed Countries. He accordingly, having joined with Bryennius, ſet upon them as they ranged in Parties. One he cut off at a Place called Goloa, and another near a Caſtle named Toplitzus, which ſo diſcouraged them, that they dared no more to appear in the Countrey, lying at the Foot of Hæmus, but transferred all their Power and Rage into Macedonia, which they waſted with a ſelect Party, able if need were to reſiſt all oppoſers they could expect from thence. Bryennius and Michael having notice of this their Cunning, by Night diſcamped, and keeping their Deſign very cloſe, by great Marches came to Chariopolis which they entred, and as the Patzinacæ merily returned home in the Evening from their Plunder, to their Camp not far from the City, in which they did not think any Army at all could be, fell upon them as they lay ſleeping and ſecure, and eaſily put them to the Sword. This defeat ſo awed them, that for the two following years they did not range about ſo licenciouſly as formerly, but very cautiouſly and as it were by ſtealth.

Several of their Parties being cut off they make not their Incurſions ſo openly as heretofore.

142. The Emperour was in ſome meaſure freed from his apprehenſions of them, but in the mean time perceived not what danger he was in from a Snake he had taken into his boſome. There was one Romanus Boilas, who being an obſcure man ſerved in the Wars, of a ready Tongue, Cedrenus tells us, but Zonaras will have him a Stammerer, not able to ſpeak plain, which defect having received partly from Nature, he had increaſed by affectation and cuſtome, thinking it ſeems it would make the more notice to be taken of him. With this man the Emperour, aſſoon as he came to the Knowledge of him, was wonderfully taken, pleaſing himſelf exceedingly with his trifling and inſignificant Wit, ſo as he had conſtant acceſs both to him and to the Women when he pleaſed, and was not wanting to himſelf, but made uſe of his time and opportunities to hoard up much Wealth. This ſo far imboldned him, as from a mean Condition to procure the Dignity of a Senatour. But his ambition diſdained ſuch moderate bounds; mean men when got into Power uſually carry their Heads and Noſes high, and ſnuffing up much of the upper Air, cannot once be brought to think of their former Friends or Condition, till an Ebb of Fortune diſcover their Folly to them again aſwell as their Original and Principles. Being Senatour he was never quiet till he became the moſt inward Councillour, and chief Miniſter of the Emperour, to which having arrived, what wanted there now but to be Emperour himſelf, and for this vaſt preferment as he wanted not opportunity, (having continual acceſs both into the Bedchamber, and other the moſt ſecret retiring Rooms) by the death of the preſent Prince to bring his ends about, ſo he thought himſelf abundantly meriting the Dignity, and had a Conſcience large enough to bear any thing that might make for that purpoſe. Being then poſſeſſed with a vehement deſire of reigning, he cunningly attempted all he knew to be diſſatisfied with the Emperour. To ſuch as abhorred the thought of making him away, he pretended abundance of Love, as having onely tried their Loyaſty and good Affection to their Prince, to whom he would not fail to make it known. But ſuch as approved of the thing he incouraged to the utmoſt, nay obliged them to it by Oath, and watched for a convenient opportunity to put it in Execution. And to Execution he had put it, but that he was detected by one of the Conſpiratours, as he had the very Sword in his Hand, which ſhould have done the deed. Hereupon much Inquiſition was uſed for conviction of his complices, whoſe Eſtates were confiſcated, and their Perſons baniſhed; but no other puniſhment was inflicted upon himſelf, but that the Emperour for ſome time ſhewed ſome averſeneſs or diſſatisfaction in his Company, which in a little time wore off again, and he returned to his wonted Truſt and Familiarity.

A Conſpiracy at home but diſcovered and puniſhed.

143. In the mean time (to return a little into the Eaſt) the Sultan as we ſaid bearing a mortal Spight to his Brother Abram, continually ſought occaſion to take away his Life, which he perceiving fled to Cutlumuſus his Kinſman, with whom he joined Forces and Intereſt to make War upon the Sultan. They gave him Battel at a Place called Paſar, but there Abram was taken Priſoner and put to death. Cutlumuſus with ſix thouſand Men, and Melech Abram's Son ſent to the Emperour, deſiring to be received into his Protection, and in the mean time till an anſwer ſhould be returned, laid ſiege to a Town in Perſarmenia called Carſe, which he took, the Caſtle excepted. But the Sultan with an Army purſuing him came into Iberia, whom to avoid he fled as far as Saba and Arabia the Happy. In Iberia the Sultan laid all waſte before him, to ſtop whoſe progreſs the Civil Wars among the Turks.

Em-

Another Expedition againſt the Patzinacæ.

But with great Loſs to the Empire.

At laſt a truce for 30 years is concluded.

Emperour recalled Michael Acoluthus out of the Weſt, and ſent him into that Province, who there in Chaldia gathering together the diſperſed Franks and Barangi, uſed his indeavours to repreſs his Motions and Hoſtilities. The Sultan having News of his ſudden Arrival, concluded with himſelf that he meant to fight, and conſidered that ſhould he ingage and overcome the Emperour's Servant and Officer, it would not at all redound to his Honour, and ſhould he be beaten by him it would tend exceeding much to his diſrepute, whereupon he departed with all his Forces to Tabreſium. At the ſame time Michaelas the Son of Stephen, and his Succeſſour in his Principality over the Triballi and Serbi, entred into the League with the Emperour, and receiving from him the Office and Dignity of Protoſpatharius, was admitted a Friend and Ally of the Roman Empire. At the ſame time the Prince of Ægypt courted him with Preſents. But nothing gave him or could give him ſatisfaction, ſo long as the Patzinacæ ſtill went unpuniſhed, to chaſtize whom he now again raiſed, and got together all the Force he could make both out of Eaſt and Weſt, over which he appointed General Michael Acoluthus, and beſides this he commanded Baſilius Syncellus, with the Bulgarian Army, to join with him in the Expedition. The Patzinacæ having notice of the Contrivance, incamped themſelves at a Place called Great Priſchlava, which they fortified by a deep Trench and a Bulwark, reſolving therein to endure a Siege. And the Romans beſieged them till they were weary, and began to be in diſtreſs for Neceſſaries, which drove them into a Conſultation what was to be done. It was reſolved that the Siege ſhould be raiſed, and accordingly a deep ſilence being injoined late at Night they departed. This was not unknown to Tyrach, who ſent out a great Number to ſtop the ways through which they muſt paſs, and then did he ſet upon them as they went at their backs whereby great Multitudes were killed, when ſhe fled from him the other receiving, and killing them in the narrow or unknown Paſſages. Amongſt others fell Syncellus; thoſe that eſcaped got with Michael to Adrianople. The Emperour exceedingly afflicted for the perpetual Loſs and Diſgrace received from this People, made yet once again Preparations ſo great, that he reſolved if poſſible to root them out of the Earth, making new Levies, and hiring Souldiers whereever he could. They from a Fugitive underſtanding his Reſolutions, to divert ſo great a ſtorm as was gathering, ſent and deſired Peace. And he condeſcended to a Truce for thirty Years.

Conſtantine the Emperour is very profuſe.

He disbands the Souldiers upon the Frontiers to the Ruine of the Empire.

Zoe the Empreſs dies.

144. The Truce was very ſeaſonable, conſidering into what condition his great Expence had brought him. Whereas the great Charge of his Wars ſhould have made him frugal and circumſpect in other matters, it was ſo far from it, that the more he expended out of the Neceſſity, the more he would profuſely and vainly caſt away, the certain Argument of a weak and eaſie Prince. He had an ambition to appear bountifull and liberal, but in it was not the leaſt Skill or Diſcretion, not being able to diſtinguiſh betwixt Magnificence and Prodigality. In beſtowing the publick Treaſure, he never obſerved any Rules of to whom, when, or how much, and ſo plunged himſelf into ſo great Neceſſities, that by honourable or diſhonourable means, by right or wrong he muſt have Supplies. That which was taken notice of moſt to beggar him, was the building of a Monaſtery to St. George in Mangana, as it was thought chiefly, that under pretence of viſiting and overſeeing the Workmen, he might have opportunity more frequently to viſit his Scleræna, who followed ſeveral Games, and particularly that of Hunting in theſe Parts. Hereby and by his other Courſes, the Treaſury was quite drained, to recruit which he invented ſeveral mean, ſordid and unjuſt Courſes, employing moſt rapacious Fellows in the gathering the Revenue, who exacted it without any reſpect had to Right or Equity. And one thing there is, which makes him guilty of the Decay and Ruine of the Empire; to be ſure the Eaſt was loſt through his Miſcarriage in this profuſe way. For whereas certain Provinces, thoſe upon the Boders eſpecially, were free from Tribute and Impoſitions for this Reaſon, becauſe they maintained ſo many Souldiers to keep the Straits, to watch the Roman Pale, and ſecure it from the Incurſions of Barbarians, he disbanded theſe Souldiers, and diſſolved the Garriſons of ſuch Parts, particularly the Army of Iberia, ſo neceſſary for reſiſtence of the Turks, conſiſting of fifty thouſand Men, they were disbanded by Leo Serblius, on purpoſe to raiſe a Revenue out of that Countrey: an Act of moſt pernicious and infamous Conſequence, which ſets a Mark upon him to all Poſterity, as a dreadfull warning to all profuſe Princes. Zoe the Empreſs dying at Seventy Years of Age, he howled and roared for her, and behaved himſelf much unlike a Man, compared her with Angels, and when out of the moiſture of her Tomb a Muſhrome ſprung up he affirmed it an evidence ſent from Heaven that ſhe was there received amongſt the intelligent Powers. But his love was ſo great to her that preſently after her Death he made choice of another object inamoured of the Daughter of a certain Alan Prince, which then lay as an Hoſtage at Conſtantinople, that he brought her into the Palace; called her Auguſta, gave her Royal maintenance,and had it not been for the Awe and reſpect he bore to Theodora, or eſpecially for the Infamy of a fourth Marriage he had made her Empreſs and given her a Diadem. But the Domination of this new Lady was not long lived. For after his death, ſhe was reduced into the State and condition ſhe was in before, except ſhe made uſe of her time and ſaved any thing, the ſhort ſpace that her Beauty ruled.

145. For now Monomachus grew towards his end, being almoſt quite ſpent by the Gout, which preſently after his advancement ſo ſeized on his Limbs that he could neither ſtand nor go, but was held up or carried when ever he had occaſion to ſtir. Afterward his intemperance toward Women increaſing the diſtemper, the humour fell alſo into his Hands and upon his Shoulders, and at length tormented him throughout both in all his Joynts, and inwardly in his ſide, ſo that he could not but with great pain and trouble fetch his Breath. His caſe now ſeeming deſperate both to himſelf and others, thoſe that were about him conſulted about a Succeſſour. The chief Man now in favour and power was one John the Principal Logotheta, an Eunuch and otherwiſe a pityfull fellow, of obſcure Original, and as deſpicable as to his parts, utterly as unfit for buſineſs as to write or ſpeak according to true Grammar; but him the Emperour intruſted with all and deſigned him Prince of the Senate, having removed from the place of chief Miniſter one Lictrudes a Perſon of quite different Qualifications becauſe he was wont to deal plainly with him, and oppoſe any thing he knew contrary to reaſon. This John together with Conſtantine the Protonotarius Dromi, Baſilius the Caniclei Præfectus and others, perceiving him drawing on, put him in mind of ſetling matters and recommended to him Nicephorus the Proteuon (or Primate, as one might call him,but that this Title is appropriate to Eccleſiaſticks) as the moſt fit Perſon to ſucceed him, to which he aſſenting they ſent notice to him then being at his Government in Bulgaria ſecretly as they thought and without the knowledge of Theodora. But ſhe wanted not Friends to let her know their contrivance how private ſoever, and leaving Monomachus dying in this new Monaſtery ſhe entred a Pinace and accompanied with ſeveral that were faithfull to her went to the great Palace in Conſtantinople where ſhe was publiſhed, declared and owned Empreſs by all, as right Heir to her Anceſtours. This News thereof brought to Monomachus increaſed his diſtemper and he lived little longer than to teſtifie his ſorrow by a ſigh, with which he ended his days after he had Reigned twelve years and eight months. That we may not diſmiſs him without his due commendations as well as tax him for his faults, the proviſion he made for the Poor, for the Aged and Strangers in his Monaſtery is applauded by our Writers. And whereas the Revenues of the great Church were ſo loſt and diminiſhed that Service was there onely ſaid on the Lord's day, he ſo provided for it that Maſs was there every day celebrated, and for the Communion he largely ſupplied the Altar with Plate, adorned with Gemms and Pearl very richly. Yet his Reign is ill ſpoken of for the reaſons above alledged, and was more taken notice of by the People for ſome ill Accidents that happened toward the end thereof. For in the ſeventh and eighth Indictions ſo great a Plague there raged in the City that the quick could ſcarcely Bury the Dead. And in the Summer of the ſeventh ſo great Tempeſts, that they killed both much Cattel and ſome Men.

Conſtantine Monomachus dies, Theodora is declared rightfull Empreſs.

146. Theodora Porphyrogenita having got poſſeſſion of what the People granted to be her Inheritance, firſt puniſhed thoſe that had been for the promotion of Nicephorus, by the Confiſcation of their Eſtates and Baniſhment. Then to her Eunuchs did ſhe diſtribute the greateſt Places and Offices in the Empire. Theodorus ſhe makes Domeſtick of the Schools of the Eaſt, and ſends him thither to reſtrain the inrodes of the Turks, taking away from the Magiſter Iſaacius Comnenus the Maſterſhip of the Camp. For Monomachus had Tranſported all the Macedonian forces into the Eaſt under Macedonian Captains, amongſt which was alſo Bryennius, a certain Rumour or Prophecy running abroad, that the Turks ſhould be ſuppreſſed by ſuch an Army as Alexander the Great uſed in Conquering the Perſians. She made Nicetas the Logotheta Dromi, Manuel the Drungarius Biglæ, and for his great abilities ſhe employed Leo Straboſpondylus as her Maſter of State, who had formerly ſerved the Emperour Michael. Aſſiſted by theſe and other Officers though ſhe was very old, yet would ſhe govern her ſelf, and refuſed to make any Emperour. To Leo ſhe committed the chief management of all affairs; but ſhe her ſelf would ſit upon the judgment ſeat, give Audience and anſwer to Ambaſſadours, create Magiſtrates, pronounce Laws, and interpoſe her Opinion and Reſolution both in publick and private matters: and her Government ſucceeded well enough. For againſt her no man oppoſed himſelf, nor diſobeyed her, and ſhe maintained her Authority ſeizing the Eſtate and baniſhing Bryennius becauſe upon hearing of the Death of Monomachus he had with the Macedonians under his command removed to Chryſopolis without her orders. No Nation made War upon her, neither did any publick Calamity happen in her time, the ſeaſons of the year being all good and natural. Though old as ſhe was yet being of a ſtrong conſtitution and able enough for buſineſs, ſhe promiſed her ſelf many years. But though herein ſhe flattered her ſelf and was flattered into this belief, it's ſaid, by a Monk, yet e'er two years came to an end ſhe found ſhe was deceived, being ſeized with the Iliack Paſſion, a diſeaſe always dangerous, and which cauſed the Phyſicians to deſpair of her recovery. Then did thoſe about her conſider whom to prefer to the Government by whom theſe happy days might be continued. They pitched upon Michael Stratioticus one of Conſtantinople, innocent and harmleſs, but utterly unfit for ſuch an employment both in reſpect of his ignorance, for from his youth he had onely been uſed to War; and his great Age, for he was very Decrepit. But the Eunuchs and Leo judging him fit for their turn becauſe they could govern him at their pleaſure, they perſwaded Theodora to make him Emperour, which ſhe did by adorning him with a Diadem, after he had given his Oath to doe nothing without their knowledge and conſent. Theſe matters finiſhed Theodora ended her Life when ſhe had Reigned one year and nine months about the end of Auguſt.

She ſettles her Government.

Naming Michael Stratioticus for her Succeſſour dies.

Michael Emperour.

147. Michael Stratioticus by her death became Emperour and Monarch, and was for ſuch declared on the laſt day of Auguſt in the ninth Indiction, A. D. M. LVI. As ſoon as the News of his promotion came to the Ears of Theodoſius the Preſident, the Couſin German of Monomachus he was thereby ſo much diſturbed as not conſidering the difficulty of the thing he undertook nor what danger he incurred, he got together his dependants, Servants and ſuch of his Friends laid things little to heart, and in the Evening with that Train at his Heels paſſed up the Streets from his Houſe toward the Palace, crying out that he was injur'd, and that the Empire of right deſcended upon him as being next in Bloud to the late Emperour. Coming to the Prætorium he broke open the Priſon, and let out the Malefactours to aſſiſt him, which he did alſo at Chalce. In the mean time the Eunuchs in the Palace having received the Alarm made what Preparations they could to ſuppreſs him, both by Land and Water, which he underſtanding turned from the way leading thither and went to the great Church where he hoped to be received and owned by the Patriarch and Clergy. But things fell out quite otherwiſe; for when he came to the Church, they ſhut the Doors upon him; and though upon occaſions of Innovation many people uſed to flock and run together, yet none now appeared, and on the contrary ſuch as had appeared for him began by degrees to deſert him and fall off. So that at length being by all deſerted he betook himſelf with his Son to the Church, not as a Prince but a ſuppliant, and was thence taken away very ſpeedily and confined to Pergamus as a place of Baniſhment. After which ſort the chiefeſt of thoſe who had taken part with him were puniſhed. And for his folly he became a Song to the ordinary ſort.

Againſt whom Theodoſius the Preſident ſets up.

But is puniſhed for his folly.

148. Stratioticus thus freed from this raſh Adventurer was Emperour without the contradictions of any. To ſhew that he was govern'd by thoſe that rais'd him, ſuch things as they underſtood he did very well, but in ſuch matters as he himſelf had been continually verſed none did ever worſe. The Senatours as they were Men of intereſt and influence he promoted, ſuch generally as were not fit for ſo great Employments as thoſe to which he preferred them; uſing the ſame courſe and method to Men of more ordinary Rank. But as to military Men, he acted quite otherwiſe, his own Companions, nay his equals once, Men of conſiderable commands in the Armies. To theſe Officers when they came into the City he did not ſhew the leaſt reſpect either by act or deed, and the two principal he much diſguſted, Men both of them of great Nobility, bearing the Title of Magiſter, and by their skill and actions having as much Reputation as their places were uſually capable of. Theſe were Iſaacius Comnenus and Ambuſtus Catacalo, the latter of which in a meeting of Officers in Eaſter (when the Emperour's bounty was wont to appear towards Men of this quality and Employment) he deprived of his Government of Antioch, and into his place immediately put Micha- el his Kinſman whom at the ſame time he preferred to the Dignity of a Magiſter, giving to him the ſirname of Uranus that he might ſeem to derive his Deſcent from that Noble Family. Catacalo he accuſed as having very badly diſcharged his Office, in that the Numbers of Souldiers were diminiſhed in his time, and he gave no content to thoſe that had buſineſs with him; and when the moſt Ancient and moſt eminent Officers of the Army ſtood up in his Defence he fell into opprobrious Language both againſt him and them, wherein he did not ſpare Comnenus. This carriage very much diſcouraged ſome and provoked others of the Army, who could hear of the Liberality of this new Emperour unto others but not receive ſo much as one good word from him themſelves, though Men of his own Profeſſion; yet did they not thence conceive ſo great Indignation as to Plot or deſign any thing againſt him till another Tryal. So Writes Zonaras, from whom Cedrenus differs in this that he gave Comnenus and Catacalo ill Language, for he Writes that he gave them two good words, but would not gratifie them in any thing they deſired. And he farther inſtances in others he diſobliged. Bryennius he recalled out of Baniſhment, gave him the command of the Cappadocians, and with the Macedonian Legions ſent him againſt the Turks, a Commander of whom Samuch by name, now much infeſted the Borders of the Empire. But when he earneſtly deſired him to have his Eſtate reſtored which Theodora had taken from him he refuſed, and when ſtill more importunately he urged him to it, he put him off with that Common ſaying, that Wages are not to be required till the work be done, whereby he ſo exaſperated him that he expected but an opportunity to be revenged.

The Turks infeſt the Borders of the Empire

149. Imprudent alſo was his carriage to Francopulus Erbebius who had done very good ſervice under Maniaces in Sicily, and ſtudied the Intereſt of the Empire. He deſired of him to be Honoured with the Dignity of a Magiſter, which he not onely refuſed to confer on him, but with Scoffs and much ſcorn rejected him, which Affront being a Barbarian (ſaith our Writer) and impatient in his nature, he took ſo heinouſly that not thinking what others were attempting, to be revenged he got him Home into Armenia, and drawing over to him three hundred of thoſe Franks that ſerved the Emperour went into Media and joyned himſelf with Samuch the Turk to make War upon the Romans. For ſome time they accorded, but at length as commonly it happens differences aroſe, and were multiplied betwixt the two ſeveral Nations, and they began to Plot, and contrive means how to affront and at laſt to deſtroy each other. Samuch ſeemed to carry it fair, but Erbebius never truſted him, but dayly expected the Turks would make ſome attempt upon him and his Men, whom he charged ever to look to themſelves, not ſo much as to Sleep or Eat but with their Weapons at Hand. At length the thing broke out and the Turks ſet upon the Franks as they were at Dinner who aware of their coming and having their Horſes ready, inſtantly mounted, fought with and defeated them, killing the greater part; the reſt eſcaped into a Town not far off called Chlear. Erbebius after the purſuit was earneſt for returning to their Camp, but it happening that there being a League and friendſhip betwixt him and the Ameras of that Town, his Men would needs go thither to refreſh themſelves. He moſt vehemently endeavoured to diſſwade them, urging that they were by no means to truſt thoſe that were of a different Religion and Nation, who would make no difficulty at all of breaking their Oath, they counting it a matter of Piety and Merit to kill as many Chriſtians as they could. But there was no good to be done, they continued obſtinate, and he was forced to go with them into the Town, all he could doe was to beg of them to be vigilant and carefull, always to be upon their Guard. But they once got in fell to their Baths and Cups which invited Aponaſar the Ameras to take the advantage offered him, ſo that Communicating his Deſign with Samuch and the Saracens living thereabouts, he gave ſecret orders to thoſe that lodged the Franks to lay hold of and bind faſt their Gueſts, or if that could not be done to kill them. The ſign being given, ſome accordingly they make faſt and others they kill; the reſt eſcaping by leaping down from the Walls. Erbebius was taken and kept as a Priſoner. This advantage the Ameras made of what he had done to curry favour with the Emperour. He ſent him word he was at his ſervice and in Teſtimony of the Reality thereof, had deſtroyed thoſe that had been Traitours to him, and at preſent had their Captain faſt in Priſon.

Erbebius Revolts to the Turks.

But is ſuppreſſed and taken by the Ameras of Chlear.

150. But Stratioticus his rough and crabbed Carriage produced ſuch effects in a ſhort ſpace that he had but ſmall cauſe to rejoyce at the Calamity of the Franks. The Eaſtern Officers being rejected by him as was ſaid now betook themſelves to Leo Straboſpondylus the Protoſyncellus and chief manager of affairs under

Michael's unkindneſs to the Souldiers makes them conſpire againſt him.

under him deſiring his mediation in their behalf that they might not be the onely Men that muſt be neglected, and not taſte of his Liberality, which they could not but take notice was very large towards others, who had neither watcht nor fought as they had done, and endured all manner of hardſhips from their very Childhood. Leo heard them and had ſo much of the Courtier as to commend every Man a part and ſpeak of his valour and Merits; but did nothing of their buſineſs, ſubmitting to the Emperour's humour who would neither allow them good deeds nor good words, which at a ſmall expence he might have done. This made them outrageous ſo as firſt to revile Stratioticus one to another, and from reproachfull words to paſs to exhortations to ſtand by one another, and revenge ſo great Injuſtice, which Combination they confirmed by Oath ſecretly in the Church. By the advice of Ambuſtus they Communicated their Deſign to Bryennius as one who could aſſiſt them with a numerous Army, and eaſily gained his concurrence. When they conſulted whom to prefer to be Emperour, Ambuſtus had all their ſuffrages, as one who by his Age, valour and experience excelled all others, but he really adverſe to the burthen; named Iſaacius Comnenus as the fitteſt Perſon they could chuſe, and to him they all aſſented; which done and confirmed by Oath they received Proviſions from the Emperour and departed each to his Quarters as was imagined. Amongſt the reſt Bryennius went to his charge and with him was ſent John Opſaras a Patritian with Gold to pay his Souldiers. Bryennius at the Muſter required ſo much to be given to every Souldier, which John refuſed, affirming he would fully obey the Emperour's Orders, and contending together about this matter Bryennius grew ſo Angry that he fell upon him and pulling him down to the Ground by his Hair and Beard ſoundly buffeted him, which done he committed him to Cuſtody and afterward diſtributed the Gold to his Souldiers as he pleaſed. At that time it happened that Lycanthes a Patritian who commanded the Licaonians and Pyſidians was near at hand with his Forces, and hearing what had happened, concluded with himſelf that none but one who Aimed at the Sovereignty it ſelf would have committed ſuch an Arbitrary and Inſolent Act, and being utterly Ignorant of what the other Commanders of the Eaſt had reſolved, with a ſufficient power fell upon the Camp of Bryennius, took him and delivered him into the Hands of Opſaras whom he had ſet at liberty, who colouring his Revenge with a pretence of Loyalty put out his Eyes and ſent him to the Emperour together with the Relation of what had paſſed.

Saluting Iſacus Comnenus Emperour.

151. But the chief Officers of the Eaſtern Parts, ſuch as Romanus Sclerus, Burtzes, Bataneiates, the Sons of Baſilius Argyrus and the reſt underſtanding what had paſſed, having hitherto concealed their Inclinations, and expected the time when to ſtir, when they heard what had befallen Bryennius concluded that upon Examination he would reveal the conſpiracy, and therefore thought it ſafeſt to prevent ſuch a diſcovery by a timely riſing. They all went into Paphlagonia to Caſtamo the Houſe of Comnenus, and compelled him to goe along with them to a ſpatious Plain called Guvaria, whither from all parts adjacent they ſent for the Souldiery, and then by univerſal conſent ſaluted him Emperour on the eighth day of June in the tenth Indiction. Having taken the Title he incamped himſelf as ſtrongly as he could in the place, expecting the forces of the reſt of the Conſpiratours, eſpecially of Ambuſtus, at whoſe ſlowneſs he conceived ſome diffidence, which was ſhortly changed into a ſuppoſed certainty by a Meſſage he received that he had changed his mind, broken his (unlawfull) Oath, and reſolving to adhere to Stratioticus was gathering together an Army for ſuppreſſion of the Confederates. This mightily perplexed Comnenus when he conſidered how dangerous an Enemy he ſhould have at his Back, and therefore fortifying himſelf in his Camp he reſolved not to ſtir till he heard farther. But Ambuſtus had not changed his mind, but miſtakes cauſed diſorder on both ſides. For Ambuſtus in his way from Conſtantinople meeting one of the Emperour's Meſſengers had ſent a blunt meſſage by him to Nicetas the Logotheta Dromi which ſufficiently diſcovered the Deſign; and when he came into the Eaſt and found not Comnenus ſtirring or as it ſeemed at all concerned, he imagined that he and the reſt had changed their Reſolutions and would declare nothing, ſo that he ſhould be left to ſhift for himſelf alone, and be condemned out of his own Mouth. Therefore he was much concerned how to avoid the Danger; for he neither had any Army in readineſs, thoſe Forts he had being unable to graple with the Emperour, neither had he had any Communication as yet with the other Souldiers of the Eaſtern parts that lay about his Government, therefore not knowing how to truſt them he had been very ſlow and wary in Preparations, and this was the cauſe of his Delay. Beſides, there lay near him in their Winter Quarters, two Regiments of Franks and one of Roſſians, of which he ſtood in great fear, leſt upon diſcovery of his Deſign they ſhould ſeize him, and ſend him to the Emperour. But when by Degrees he thought he had ſecured himſelf, then firſt he broke his mind to his Servants and Dependants, and having got about him about a thouſand Men, then he try'd the Inclinations of ſuch as he could leſs truſt, firſt to bring over the Officers and Governours, and then the ordinary ſort. He counterfeited Letters as from the Emperour, by which he was ordered with three Regiments of the Aſſociates, and two of the Colonienſes and Chaldeans, to go againſt Samueh. Thoſe with their Officers, he either by Promiſes or Threats procured to take the Military oath to him, and having furniſht himſelf with an Army of ſeveral Nations, then marcht towards Comnenus, having ſent to let him know he was on his way.

152. Comnenus diſtruſtfull and much out of heart before, was much elevated by this Meſſage, and having joined his Forces with his, now ſet about his Work as being out of Danger. Yet did he commit his Wife and his Treaſure, to his Brother John to be kept in a Caſtle called Pemoliſſa, ſeated on a Rock near the River Alys. He having taken order for raiſing of Money throughout the Eaſt, and appointed his Receivers, paſſed the River Sangarius, and being every where received with applauſe and acclamations by ſlow Journeys moved toward Nice, which he deſired to get into his Hands to be a Receptacle for him upon occaſion, and therefore he gave time to thoſe that had adhered to the Emperour to remove from it, which they did aſſoon as they heard of his coming, the Souldiers to their particular Homes to look to the Safety of their Houſes, Wives and Children, and the Officers to the Emperour with News of what happened, amongſt whom the moſt eminent was Lycanthes, Captain of the Eaſtern Troops, Theophylact Maniaces and Pniemius Iberus, Captains of the Troops of the Charſiani. Stratioticus having Intelligence of the Revolt made by almoſt the whole Force of the Empire, yet refuſed to offer any Conditions of Peace, but prepared for a vigorous reſiſtence. All the Weſtern Regiments he ſent for, and gave the Command of them to Macedonians, Perſons of greateſt Quality and Experience in matters relating to War, and now moſt wiſely he Courted both Officers and Souldiers, preſenting them with good Gifts. In the ſame manner he treated the Charſiani, and ſuch of the Eaſtern Forces as had not revolted, of whom he appointed Commander Theodorus the Domeſtick of the Eaſt, the Eunuch of Theodora the Empreſs, joyning with him Aaron Ducas the Magiſter, Brother to Comnenus his Wife, a Man of a very great experience. Theſe being ſent againſt the Revolters came to Nicomedia, and thence ſent ſome to break down the Bridge of Sangarius, that Comnenus being forced to go about, they might be ſure not to miſs him. From Nicomedia they removed to the Mountain Sopho, and there incamped themſelves, and prepared for Fight. Comnenus having notice hereof immediately got into Nice, and there left all his Baggage and Carriages, and having ſtrongly fortified the City, removed and incamped himſelf ſome twelve Furlongs diſtant from it towards the North. The Armies being near together, ſeveral Parties of them knowing one another uſed Arguments on both ſides to draw off their oppoſites, theſe of the Emperour's ſide reviling Comnenus as a Traitour, and they of his Party deſpiſing the Emperour, as a deſpicable doting old Man, ruled by Eunuchs.

Who marching towards Nice.

Cauſeth Michael the Emperour to ſend for the Weſtern Forces to engage him.

153. The Captains on both ſides at firſt incouraged this Diſcourſe, but when Comnenus found that it did no good, he would not permit his Men ſo freely to go abroad, which the Domeſtick and the Macedonians eſpecially judged to proceed from fear, and therefore reſolved to give him Battel. The reſt aſſenting, they removed and pitched at a Place called Petroa, ſome fifteen Furlongs diſtant from the Enemy. Comnenus his Men now calling for Battel aſwell as they he led out, and prepared to fight. The left Wing he committed to Ambuſtus, the right to Romanus Sclerus, and he himſelf led the middle Battel. The Domeſtick and Aaron in forming their Battalia committed their left Wing to Baſilius Trachaniotes, then Captain of the Weſt, and the moſt eminent of all the Macedonians, and the right Wing Aaron led himſelf aſſiſted by theſe Officers, Lycanthes, Pyemius and Randulph the Patritian a Frank. They fought in a Place called Ades by the Inhabitants, and at firſt Aaron ſeemed to have gotten the Day, for he beat the oppoſite Wing, took Romanus Sclerus Priſoner, and drove them back as far as their Camp, which he might have taken, and obtained a full Victory had he not been too cautious, for Comnenus had alſo the worſt of it, and had thoughts of flying back to Nice. But Ambuſtus bore down all oppoſite to him where he fought, Whom a Battel enſued.

and

In which Comnenus had the better.

and purſuing them to their Camp broke into it, and having plundered their Tents cut them down, which ſight ſo animated Comnenus and his Souldiers, and on the contrary diſcouraged the Souldiers of Aaron, that the Emperour's Party was defeated, a great Multitude falling in the Fight, and eſpecially of Macedonians both Officers and Souldiers; and not a few were taken Priſoners. This ill Succeſs ſo perplexed Michael, that he had ſent to Comnenus and offered to lay down, if thoſe about him had not kept him from it, and urged him rather to dye than quit the Supreme Dignity. However certain of the chiefeſt Senatours, and Men of the greateſt Wiſedom were ſent to treat with him, viz. Conſtantine Leichudes, Theodorus Alopus who had both the Title of Proedri or Preſidents, and Conſtantine Pſellus chief of the Philoſophers, who offered him to be adopted Cæſar, and Pardon and Indemnity to all his Followers. The Souldiers would not hear of this, nor permit as they ſaid, that their General ſhould be ſeen in an Habit inferiour to what he wore at preſent, which yet they were thought to ſpeak more out of Flattery than Deſign. However Comnenus took the Meſſengers aſide and told them as a ſecret, that he ſhould very willingly admit of their Propoſals, provided the Emperour would indulge him ſome of his Power, ſo as to be able to reward thoſe that had ſerved him.

The Emperour offering Conditions to him.

154. And Zonaras reports, that to deceive his Souldiers he gave them two ſeveral Anſwers in Writing, of which that which was made known, with Scorn rejected the Conditions, but the other accepted them. The old Man was overjoyed to hear of his Acceptance, and returned, that it ſhould not be long before he took him to be his Collegue in the Empire, though for ſome Reaſons at firſt he muſt defer it. With which Meſſage he ſent the Senatours back together with Promiſe of Confirmation of what had been granted before, and of eſtabliſhing the Officers of Comnenus in their preſent Employments. Comnenus and all the reſt liked well enough of it, and required a Confirmation by a Golden Ball; onely Ambuſtus oppoſed, who would by all means have the old Man depoſed, and contended that whom they had already depriv'd by Oath, they could not without Perjury re-admit to the Throne, and he urged that if they laid down their Arms, the Iſſue would be that Comnenus would be poyſon'd, and they for their ſhares ſhould have their Eyes pull'd out of their Heads. And to this Cedrenus adds, that the Senatours themſelves did prevaricate and perſwade Ambuſtus, that he ſhould thus oppoſe the Articles of the Treaty, and moreover made Comnenus to believe, that the People at Conſtantinople did greatly affect him, where ſhould he but once ſhew his Face, the old Man would quickly be depoſed, and he be put into his place with univerſal ſatisfaction and applauſe. While thus the Negotiation was diſturbed, the Emperour himſelf by his falſe and underhand dealing, went about to prevent what he had ſo readily promiſed, and by endeavouring to keep by deceitfull means loſt all. By gifts aſwell as good words and promiſes, he now endeavoured to oblige all the People, and having ſo made his way cauſed both Senatours, and the Citizens to ſubſcribe a Writing, and take an Oath with direfull Imprecations, that they would never give to Comnenus the Title of Emperour, nor own him for their Sovereign Lord, which they took being overpowered, and Comnenus far diſtant as yet from the City. But he being now come nearer, and lodging at Damatrys within leſs than a Days Journey, by break of day ſeveral Senatours and others came to the great Church, and required the Patriarch to come to them to conſult of an important Affair. The Patriarch ſhut his Doors, and refuſed to come to them, but ſent two of his Kinſmen to know their buſineſs, on whom the Company by this time much increaſed laid hands, and threatned to ſtrangle them except he would come down. Hereat he came down in Pontificalibus, as he pretended unwillingly, though ſome were of opinion that he did but counterfeit, and they compaſſing him about required him to go from them to the Emperour, and demand back again the Writing which they had ſubſcribed, for ſeeing he had declared Comnenus ſhould be his Succeſſour, they muſt either incur Perjury or very much danger by oppoſing him. The Patriarch bid them be of good chear, and gave them good words, and this appeared alſo to be a pretended and feigned buſineſs. For omitting this they ſhortly after declared by Common conſent, Comnenus to be Emperour, and all that oppoſed him ſhould loſe their Eſtates, and be accounted Enemies of the Roman Empire. This the Patriarch procured and decreed in the Church, and ſent Meſſengers both to Comnenus and Stratioticus, to the one that he would haſte to the City, and to the other that he would reſign, and depart from the Palace which did not belong to him; whereby he ſhewed that he had been the

But not intending to perform them.

But is forced to it by the Revolters and the Patriarch.

the Authour and Principal cauſe of the Revolt. The Biſhops or Metropolitans, as Cedrenus calls them, that went to Stratioticus, delivering their Meſſage, he demanded what the Patriarch would give him in exchange for the Empire, to which they replied The Kingdom of Heaven, whereupon he put off the Purple and Violet ſhoes, and took the Habit of a private Man; although Cedrenus idlely thinks the Patriarch's promiſe to have been ſcarcely valid, except he had returned to a private Life at the beginning of the Defection, and thereby prevented the effuſion of ſo much Bloud as had been ſhed before his conſtrained Reſignation; as if a lawfull Prince was bound to give way to an Uſurper. Stratioticus being departed to his own Houſe in the Caſtle, after he had Reigned one year, Ambuſtus Curopalates by order of Comnenus, the next Day being the laſt of Auguſt, in the Tenth Indiction, A. D. M.LVII. together with many Noblemen took poſſeſſion of the Palace. At Evening Comnenus himſelf made his Entry, and the next Day being the firſt of September, in the Eleventh Indiction, going in a ſolemn Proceſſion to the great Church, and there being on a Scaffold crowned by the Patriarch, was declared Emperour of the Romans. Here the Hiſtory of Cedrenus leaves him and us.

Upon which Michael Stratioticus reſigns, and Iſaacius Comnenus aſſumes the Government.

155. Iſaacius Comnenus having obtained the Empire, is ſaid to have aſcribed it not to Almighty God but himſelf, and his military skill, which they thence gather, becauſe he immediately cauſed Money to be ſtamped with his Image, holding a drawn Sword. But ſuch Men as had aſſiſted him he largely rewarded, and took care when they had their Money that they departed home, leſt being together in the City they ſhould deviſe ſome new thing, and make any Commotion amongſt the People. The Patriarch he exceedingly Reverenced, and highly preferred his Nephews. Whereas the proviſion of things for the Church formerly belonged to the Oeconomus, and Keeper of the Veſſels, whom the Emperour was wont to Name; for his ſake left the Diſpoſition of theſe matters abſolutely to the Patriarch. His Wife he now named Empreſs, and to his Brother John gave the Offices of Curopalates and Grand Domeſtick. Whereas he took notice that his Predeceſſours ever ſince the time of Baſilius Porphyrogenitus, had ill diſtributed and employed the Revenue, making odd Aſſignments, as of ſome to Monaſteries and the reſt to the gratifying of their pleaſures and Appetites whereby the Treaſury was ever kept empty, he would doe this not by degrees, as a good States-man imitates a skilfull Phyſician, but on a ſudden and all at once, as if he had ſtamped the Sword in his Hand upon the Coin, not ſo much to ſignifie what a Fighter, but a Reformer and Cutter of ill Members and Diſtempers from the Commonwealth he meant to be. The Acts of Stratioticus he abrogated without deſtinction, took away all he had given, and not onely his, but the Acts of other Emperours he reſcinded, therein ſparing neither the Senatour, if concerned nor thoſe of the Common ſort. Daily in thoſe courſes he grew more ſevere, and at length fell upon the Monaſteries to which he aſſigned onely Neceſſaries, and took the reſt of their Revenues to his own uſe. By theſe means he incurred the Odium of all ſorts, and forgetting on what Rock his Predeceſſour had ſplit of Souldiers as well as of the reſt, no advice, reprehenſion, fear or hatred being of power ſufficient to reſtrain him. As for reprehenſions he wanted them not, the Patriarch being very inſolent in that Point, that if he had not what he asked he would not onely upbraid him, but threaten as he had ſet him up to pull him down again, which he not brooking, and to prevent miſchief Baniſhed the Prelate together with his Nephews, whom yet he reſtored to their former Dignities again, when ſhortly after their Uncle died. He preferred to be Patriarch Conſtantine Lichudes the Preſident and Protoveſtiarius, but not till ſuch times as he had wrung out of his Hands the Charter of Privileges and Immunities granted by Monomachus, to his Monaſtery of Mangana.

Zonaras.

He is very ſevere.

He had ſome Skirmiſhes with the Hungarians and Patzinacæ.

156. He had ſome Bickerings with the Hungarians and Patzinacæ, both of whom without much trouble asked Peace. But as he lay at the end of September at Lobrius, ſo great a quantity of Rain and Snow fell, that he and his Army were both in danger to miſcarry, and he was juſt but removed from under a great Oak when the Tree fell, for which to teſtifie his Deliverance he built a Church to St. Theila, on whoſe Day he eſcaped the Danger, but ſuch a Building as teſtified the meanneſs of his Spirit, which his Couſin and Succeſſour John the Son of Alexius afterward repaired moſt Magnificently, in the Name of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Not long after Comnenus deveſted himſelf of the Empire, which how it came about, Writers do not agree. Moſt ſaid that as he was Hunting he was blaſted with a Wind or with Lightning, and thence contracted ſuch a Diſtemper,

Comnenus lays down, and chuſes Conſtantine Ducas for his Succeſſour.

Diſtemper, that deſpairing of Recovery, and ſenſible how he came by his Power, to Obliterate his Offence in ſome manner, he laid down what he had unjuſtly taken up. And in the choice of a Succeſſour he would not be ſwayed by any carnal report, neither making choice of John his Kinſman, Theodorus Docianus his Siſter's Son, nor his Daughter's Husband, but pitched upon Conſtantine Ducas the Preſident, whom he thought very fit and able for the diſcharge of ſo great a Place, and then retired into a Monaſtery, where he diſcharged all the meaneſt Offices, and lived the remainder of his Days, after he had Reigned two years and three months. A Man, to ſpeak of his good aſwell as bad qualities, very Stout, arrogant in his Diſpoſition, very quick in diſpatch of Buſineſs, and moſt skilfull in Military matters; not Learned himſelf, but a lover and encourager of Learned Men. A Man exceeding Chaſt, inſomuch as being from Home falling ill, and told by Phyſicians that the Company of a Woman would relieve him, he refuſed utterly to meddle with any other than his own Wife, whoſe Name was Aecatharina, a Lady very Vertuous and Religious. When his Ambitious affecting the Empire was objected to him, he ſaid, that, He could not bear the Reign of a Fellow-Servant who denied him his juſt Reward.

Conſtantine Ducas Emperour.

157. Conſtantine (Ducas) the Twelfth of that Name, thus without any trouble became Emperour of Conſtantinople, in the thirteenth Indiction, A. D. M.LX. He began his Reign with a Promotion of ſeveral Perſons, and Reſtitution of thoſe whom Comnenus had ſpoiled of their Dignities. Yet was his Life preſently laid at by ſome Conſpiratours, who to make him come by Boat out of the Countrey where he was diverting himſelf, made a ſtory be told him that there was an Inſurrection in the City; and then had corrupted the Maſters of his Gally, called Protocarabi to Drown him. He hearing of the Tumult haſted indeed to Conſtantinople; but it happened that his Gally was not then at Hand, ſo as he took another Boat, and the Conſpiratours meeting it reſolved to run over his Boat, and ſo to ſink him, which they were attempting, when thoſe in the Veſſel with him by their loud cries and warning ſo affrighted the Rowers, that they had no power but to obey. Yet upon Diſcovery of the Treaſon, he contented himſelf onely by confiſcating the Eſtates of the Traitours. He boaſted himſelf to be Deſcended of the Family of the Ancient Ducæ, Andronicus Pantherius and Conſtantine, but that Family when Conſtantine affected the Empire, was ſubverted in the Reign of Conſtantine the Son of Leo the Philoſopher, yet under Age, no Heirs Male being left; ſo that his Anceſtours were ſaid to claim from a Woman, and he was thought no Genuine and true Ducas, but as it were ſuch by adulteration, and therefore by moſt was by way of Diminution not called Duca but Duciza. But he was a Man Pious towards God, of good Morals, and a lover of Juſtice: of none of the quickeſt Wits, but a lover of plain dealing and ſincere Men, but loved Money exceedingly; and it was his care how to invent ways of encreaſing his Treaſure. Two things therefore he eſpecially employed himſelf in: in encreaſing the Publick Revenue, by ſelling Places, and new farming out the Cuſtoms: and in hearing of Cauſes and deciding Controverſies, wherein he did not always obſerve the Preſcript of Laws, but ſometime uſed his Will for Law, and otherwhiles had reſpect to Perſons. And as he was hard and tenacious, this was his Maxim, "By no means to make War, but by fair means to take off all Nations "from their Hoſtilities, both to ſave the great expence of Expeditions, and that "he might not be diverted from attending the Trade of getting Money. This cauſed him to neglect his Muſters, and even to Disband the moſt Valiant and fit for Service, as it happened, whereby the Barbarous Nations grew more bold, and got Ground of this Roman Empire.

A Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon, but puniſhed.

He is exceeding Covetous even to the almoſt ruine of the Empire.

158. In the Eaſt ſome of the Provinces were haraſſed, and ſome ſubdued by the Neighbouring Nations: neither were thoſe of the Weſt in a good condition, becauſe the Souldiers were both few and lazy. The Vzi a Scythian People having Beaten and taken Priſoners Magiſter Nicephorus Bataniates and Magiſter Baſilius Apocapes paſſed the River Iſter, and having waſted all the Countrey near to it, proceeded into Macedonia, and thence into Greece, making havock of all things, which though it much troubled the Emperour, yet that he might not ſpend any thing would he not raiſe any Forces, ſaying, that The Enemy could not be Beaten back, but endeavoured by Gifts to take off their Captains. But being reviled for ſuffering the Empire out of his miſerableneſs to miſcarry, he marched out of the City againſt the Enemy, but as is reported, with no more than an hundred and fifty Men, and for getting more, and Conquering the Barbarians, betook himſelf rather to his Prayers than any other means, and they ſo well ſucceeded,

The Vzi infeſt the Empire.

that

But are deſtroyed by the Patzinacæ and Bulgarians.

Conſtantine being Sickly appoints his three Sons, Conſtantine, Michael and Andronicus under the tuition of their Mother Eudocia to ſucceed him.

And dies, A.D. M. LXVII.

that when he was conſidering how to raiſe an Army, News was brought, that there was no Enemy left againſt which to ſend it; for the Patzinacæ and Bulgarians had faln upon the Uzi, wearied and weakned, and had utterly cut them off, their Captains hardly eſcaping over Iſter. This happened in the ſixth year of his Reign, preceded by a great Earthquake which happened on the twenty third of September, by which many Churches and Houſes were overturned. In the month of May, the fourth Indiction appeared a Comet, following the Sun, at firſt of the bigneſs of the full Moon, but as its Tail encreaſed, ſo the Body of it ſeemed to diminiſh: it was ſeen for forty days with its Tail turned toward the Eaſt. By this time the Emperour had contracted a Diſeaſe, which made him deſpair of life, and to apply himſelf to ſettle matters relating to the Government and Succeſſion. By Eudocia his Wife he had three Sons, whereof Michael and Andronicus when a private Man, but Conſtantine after he was Emperour, who upon this account was the onely Porphyrogenitus, and for that cauſe was firſt adorned with Enſigns of Empire. Afterwards he named Emperours the other two, and left the Empire to them all, but Named his Wife their Empreſs and Lady, and left the management of Affairs to her, for which ſhe ſeemed to him fit, aſwell as for the Education of her Children: but firſt he took an Oath from her committed to Writing, and left with the Patriarch, that ſhe would not Marry again: as he exacted the like from the Senatours, that they would admit none but his Sons for Emperours. He had made his Brother Cæſar, and uſed him as his Councillour and Aſſiſtant in his moſt important and ſecret buſineſs. Though he himſelf was unlearned, yet he reverenced Learned Men, being wont to ſay, that He had rather been enobled by Learning than Sovereignty. For ſuch as Conſpired againſt him he ſaid he would uſe them no worſe than to uſe them for Slaves, the Laws having deprived them of Liberty. Dying after a Reign of ſeven years and ſix months, leaving (as we ſaid) the Adminiſtration to his Wife, ſo that as we began the Second Part of our Hiſtory with a Conſtantine, we conclude this with one; and as we began this Part with a Woman, at the Time of Charles the Great, ſo now we end at one in the Year M. LXVII. the year following the Conqueſt of England by Duke William the Norman.

FINIS.

THE
TABLE.

A.

ABaſgians are forced to ſubmit to the Romans 422, Renew the League 425.

Adaluald King of the Lombards in Italy 44, is depoſed 45.

Africk ſubject to the Saracens is ſeiz'd by the Turks 447.

Ægypt ſubject to the Saracens 446, is overrun by the Turks 447.

Ælla arrives in Britain 95, is King of the South Saxons 139, begins the Civil Wars 170, dies 140.

Agilulf King of the Lombards 40, Demoliſheth Padua and other places 42, Crowns his Son 43, dies 44.

Aiſtulf King of the Lombards ſeizes on the Exarchate 62, invades the Roman Territories 63, but is forc'd to quit them by Pipin.

Aldermen the ſeveral ſorts of them 275, and 281.

Ale and Alehouſes the Antiquity of them here 317.

Allalengium what 416.

Alexander Emperour his Character and Death 380.

Alfred the firſt anointed King of the Engliſh Saxons in Britain 197, his Wars and Peace with the Danes 198, is depoſed by them 199, recovers his Kingdom and renews the Peace 200, dies 203, his Character 204, his Wife and Children 207, his Laws 297.

Amalus 11.

Amalaſuntha 35.

Amazons why ſo feigned 15.

Amphibalum what 103.

Angli their firſt Seats where 123, the Name whence 124, their Poſſeſſion here 132.

Angles-Eaſt their Kingdom here 157, to the ruine of it 158.

Angles-Mercian their Kingdom here 159, to the end of it 167, the valuation of them 307.

Angles-Northumbrian their Kingdom here 143, the diviſion of it 145, and end 156.

Arabians invade the Empire 343, making other inroads are ſuppreſt 416, again 427.

Aremorica ſeiz'd on by the Britains 107, who fix there 108.

Aribert the firſt King of the Lombards 47, who divides the Kingdom and dies, ibid.

Aribert the ſecond 53, is drowned 55.

Arioald 45, dies 46.

Arthur King of the Britains 97, his Wars 98, 99, death and interment 101.

Aſgardiani who 8.

Aſpracavia or upper Media ſubmits to the Empire 419, is invaded by the Turks 447, again 448.

Aſpurgiani who 8.

Aſſyria ſubject to the Saracens 446, is overcome by the Turks 447.

Athalarick King of the Oſtrogoths in Italy 34, dies 35.

Athelſtan Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 216, invades Scotland 217, kills the King thereof 218, forces the Welſh King to pay him Tribute 219, dies 220, his Laws 304, &c.

Attrebatii who 133.

Aurelius Ambroſius King of Britain 92, his Wars with the Saxons 93, he dies 95.

Auſtria what 56.

Authari King of the Lombards in Italy 38, his Conqueſt 39, Death 40.

B.

BAbylon inhabited by the Perſians 410, but ſtill ſubject to the Saracens 446, is ſeiz'd on by the Turks 447.

Bardanus the Uſurper is ſhaven 342.

Bardas Phocas General of the Eaſt uſurps

401, but is forced to take Orders 402, recall'd 409, and made General againſt Sclerus 410, is ſaluted Emperour 411, but poiſoned 413.
Bardas Sclerus uſurps 407, defeats the Emperour's Forces 408, ſeiſes on the City of Nice 409, is beaten and impriſoned at Babylon 410, releaſed 412, ſets up again, but after quitting his pretenſions 413, is kindly received by the Emperour 414.
Baſilius his Pedigree 367, made Emperour 368, waſtes the Territories of Militene and Manichees 369, invades Syria 370, relieves the Weſtern part of the Empire 371, his Wars in the Eaſt 372, Crimes laid to his charge 373, he dies 374, new models the Civil Law 380.
Baſilius Son to Romanus crown'd 393, ſucceeds with his Mother 394, begins to reign 407, invades Bulgaria 411, defeats their Army 416, his Character 417, after ſeveral other expeditions he reduces Bulgaria under the obedience of the Empire 420, returns to Conſtantinople 422, forces the Abaſgians to ſubmit, ibid. dies 423.
Belgæ who 133.
Bernicii the ſeveral Kings thereof 145, its Limits 155.
Bertarid King of the Lombards in Italy 47, dies 51.
Bocland what 283, the manner of paſſing it, and by whom tenable 285, its difference with Folcland 286, its juriſdiction and privileges 287.
Boetius his Character 31.
Breden what 209.
Brigantes who 133.
Britains their Character then 83, and 111, their Language 106, their famous Men 112; their Countrey how then call'd 114, an account of them that were expelled by the Saxons, Angles and Jutes 133, their Countrey called England 187.
Bulgari invade the Roman Pale 343, fall upon Meſymbria 346, and defeat Michael the Emperour 347, are beaten by Leo 348, raiſe the ſiege of Conſtantinople for Michael Balbus 354, quarrel with the Empire 375, which ends in a Peace 376, another quarrel with them 381, incamping near Conſtantinople 382, beſieging Adrianople 383, thence to Conſtantinople again 384, they make freſh incurſions 386, laying ſiege to Adrianople 387, invading Macedonia are met and a League ſtruck up with the Romans 388, Civil Wars at home 389, the League with the Romans renewed 394, their Countrey invaded by the Ruſſians 340, ſeiſed on by them 400, invaded by the Empire 401, their King taken and Countrey ſubdued 403, they invade the Weſtern parts of the Empire 410, are invaded by the Emperour 411, they again infeſt the Empire 415, but after ſeveral expeditions their Countrey is wholly reduced to the obedience of the Empire 420, they revolt 434, but are reduced again 436, ſome bickerings with them 462, they defeat the Uzi, who return from waſting the Empire 464.
Burghmote what 282.

C.

Cantium whence ſo called 133.
Celtoſcithæ whence ſo called 120.
Ceorles who 285, the value of their Heads 306.
Cerdick lands in Britain 5, begins the Kingdom of the Weſt Saxons 168, dies 169.
Charles King of the Franks invades Italy 68, makes a new donation to the See of Rome 64, conquers Deſiderius King of the Lombards in Italy 70, is crowned King there 75, ſettles the Government 76, makes his Son his Collegue 77, is created Emperour by Pope Leo 80.
Chatzaria the Region ſubmits to the Empire 419.
Chicheſter when and by whom built 141.
Clito and Clitunculi who 273.
Cnute King of the Danes 238, waſtes England 239, is Collegue with Edmund King of the Engliſh Saxons 141, is ſole Monarch here 242, divides the Kingdom into four parts 243, beats the Swedes and Norwegians 245, ſuppreſſeth the Rebels in Scotland 247, his Character and Death, ibid. his Laws 322, &c.
Conſtantine Porphyrogenitus Emperour 382, recalls Zoe his Mother 383, is ſeis'd on by Romanus 384, depoſeth Zoe his Mother and marries 385, admits Romanus to uſurp 386, depoſeth him 390, aſſumes the Government 391, dies 392.
Conſtantine X. ſucceeds 394, begins to reign with Baſilius 407, is ſole Emperour 423, his management of affairs and death 424.
Conſtantine Monomachus Emperour ſends an Army againſt the Trabelli 440, ſuppreſſes Maniazes the Uſurper in Italy 422, defeats the Roſſians 443, takes Anium and Armenia the Great 444, ſuppreſſes another Civil War 446, his Dominions invaded by the Turks 447, taking one of his Generals which he redeems 449, defeats the invading Patzinacæ 450, oppoſes the Turks 451, and Patzinacæ 452, with the whole force of the Empire 453, another expedition againſt them, and then a Truce for thirty ty years 455, his management of affairs and death 456.

Conſtantine Ducas XII. Emperour 463, dies 464.

Corbati ſubmit to the Roman yoke 422.

Coritani who 133.

Counts the antiquity of them 278.

Cunibert King of the Lombards in Italy 51, kills Alachis the Vſurper 52, dies 53.

D.

Danes a Catalogue of their Kings 125, their Wars with the Saxons 126, an account of their firſt arrival in Britain 183, the time when 185, ſeveral Battels fought with various ſucceſs 190, they ſack Wincheſter 192, invade Mercia 123, forcing the Saxons to purchaſe peace 198, which they break 199, a League enſues 200, other Companies arrive 201, more 208, but are warmly received 210, moſt of them ſubmit 214, they ſeize on York 216, waſting Eaſt England and other parts 229, which they conquer 235, and at length become Maſters of all England 242, the beginning of their Monarchy here 243, domineering over the Engliſh 251, till the end of it 252, the Laws made by their Kings here 322, &c.

Danegeld what 236, remitted 355, the original of it 328.

Danmonii who 133.

Deiri the ſeveral Kings thereof 145, its Limits 155.

Deſiderius King of the Lombards in Italy 66, invades the Exarchate 67, is beaten thence 68, delivers up himſelf and Kingdom 70.

Diceratum what 342.

Dikes four of them and where 209.

Dimetæ who 133.

Dower the form thereof 314, how much was wont to be aſſigned 315.

Drinclean what 328.

Dubonii who 133.

Durotriges who ibid.

E.

Edgar Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 222, his Naval preparations 223, he deſtroys the Wolves 225, dies 226, his Laws 316.

Edmund Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 220, is ſtab'd at Puckle-Church in Glouceſterſhire 221.

Edmund ſirnamed Ironſide Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 240, fights with the Danes 241, but divides the Kingdom with them and dies 242, his Laws 311, &c.

Edred Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 221, dies, ibid.

Edward the Elder conquers the Eaſt Angles 158, joyns the Mercian Kingdom to his own 167, is Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 207, quells a Rebellion at home 209, forces the Danes to truckle 214, ſubdues the Scots 215, dies, his Wife and Children, ibid. his Laws 301.

Edward Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 226, being ſtab'd obtains the ſirname of the Martyr 227.

Edward the Confeſſour Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 252, Marries 253, baniſhes the Danes 254, remits the tax of Danegeld 255, is kind to Foreigners, ibid. upon which civil Commotions ariſe 256, which end in the baniſhment of ſome Normans 258, he dies, his Character 264, being the laſt King of the Weſt Saxon Family, ibid. his Laws 329, &c.

Edwi Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 222.

Egbert King of the Weſt Saxons in Britain ſeizes on the Engliſh Kingdom of the Jutes 138, on the Eaſt Saxons 143, and on the Northumbrian Angles, is the firſt Engliſh Monarch 187, dies, ibid.

England when firſt ſo called 187.

Engliſh Saxon Monarchy begun 187, overrun by the Danes 243, reſtored 252, Conquered by the Normans 270, their Government what 272, their Governours who 273, in Parliament 275, out of Parliament 276, the publick Diviſion and Government of the Land 278, the Government of Cities and great Towns 281, the private Diviſion and Government of the Land 282, the original of their Laws what 290, their Laws made by ſeveral Kings 291, &c. their valuation of Mens Heads 306, of Mens Oaths 307, their puniſhment for Crimes, and ſatisfaction what 308, their Money 309, Theft made capital by them 311, their manners & rites of Marriage 313, their form of endowing 314, what, and how much they gave to their Wives 315, Ale and Alehouſes in uſe with them 317, Juries 318, & 321, their Wealth and Taxes what 334, their Cuſtoms, Diſpoſitions and Courage 335, their computation of Time 336, their manner of paſſing Lands and Writing 338, the antiquity of their Language 339.

Ethelred Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 192, oppoſes the invading Danes 195, dies 196.

Ethelred Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 227, buys off the invading Danes 228, pays a ſecond ſumm to them 229, a third 230, maſters them here 231, pays a fourth ſumm 233, raiſes a Tax for Shipping 234, quits his Kingdom 237, recovers it and dies 240, his Laws, 316, &c.

Ethelwolf Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 188, his Genealogy 191, and Wealth 192.
Eudocia Empreſs 454.
Exarchate ſubject to the Empire 38, ſeiſed on by the Lombards 62, delivered up to the Biſhop of Rome with an account of Cities 65, invaded by the Lombards 67, but a new Grant thereof made to the See of Rome 69.

F.

FEE what 282, the antiquity of them 283.
Feoda whence ſo called 70, its Origine 71, the forfeiture and ſeveral ſorts of them 73.
Fee-tail the antiquity of it 300.
Fewds deadly or enmity the Law of them 312.
Folkland what 28, by whom tenable 285, its difference with Bockland 286.
Folcmote two ſorts of them 282.
Franks invade Italy 64, give up the Exarchate and Pentapolis to the Pope 65, another expedition thither 68, making a new donation to the See of Rome 69, they ſeize on Italy 70, ſettle the Government there 76, their King crowned by Pope Leo 80, they take all Italy except four Cities from the Empire 441.
Friburg what 288.
Fridgild what 308.

G.

GAdani who 133.
Gani who 238.
Gaſtald what 283.
Gepidæ who and why ſo called 12.
Geſithcundmon who 295.
Gild the ſignification of it 299.
Gildwite what 323.
Gloceſter whence ſo called 171.
Godabert King of the Lombards in Italy 47, is ſlain by his Brother 48.
Godwin Earl of Kent 284, is privy to the death of Alfred 249, is made Earl of the Weſt Saxons 251, aſſiſts in reſtoring of Edward 252, Marries his Daughter to him 253, he and his Sons take up Arms 256, and go into Flanders but are reſtored and he dies 258, his Iſſue 259, his obtaining of Boſeham 262.
Gothi minores who 16.
Goths the original of them 7, their firſt excurſions 10, their Habits 18, their Kingdom in Italy wholly deſtroyed 36.
Gregory Biſhop of Rome 41.
Gregory II. abſolves the Subjects of the Emperour from their Allegiance 58.
Gregory III. 59.
Greves who 281.

H.

HArdecnute King of Denmark 248, viſits his Mother at Bruges 249, is the laſt King of the Daniſh Monarchs in Britain 250, dies 251.
Harold Monarch of the Danes in Britain 248, his way to ſecure himſelf 249, he dies 250.
Harold the Son of Godwin takes up Arms againſt King Edward 256, runs for Ireland, ibid. returning is reſtored to his Eſtate 258, chaſtizes the Welſh Rebels 260, is Shipwreckt 262, his Engagement with Duke William of Normandy 263, he is choſen Monarch of the Engliſh Saxons 265, defeats the Norwegians and Toſti his own Brother who invaded the Land 267, he ingaging with Duke William is ſlain 269, ſeveral miſcarriages of him 271.
Healsfange what 313.
Heaſten the Dane arrives in Britain 201 but is cut off 202.
Hengiſt and Horſa with their Saxons arrive in Britain 90, & 130, when and where they landed 131, begin the Kingdom of the Jutes in Kent 133, cauſe a Maſſacre and are ſlain 134.
Heregeld what 334.
Heretocks who 277.
Heriot the rates of them 326.
Heruli their Kingdom in Italy 1, to the ruine of it 6, their original 13.
Hide of Land what 279.
Hildebrand King of the Lombards in Italy 61.
Hinguar and Hubba the Danes arrive in Britain 83, the reaſon of their coming 184, the time 185, where they landed, 193, are ſlain 199.
Hornegeld what 335.
Howell the Welſh King 219.
Hundred what and whence ſo called 278, the occaſion of it 279, the Government thereof 280.
Hunns their original 14, the deſcription of them 15.

I.

ICeni who and whence ſo called 133.
Ida begun the Kingdom of the Northumbrian Angles in Britain 143, his Character 144, Death 145.
Ina ſeiſes on the Kingdom of the South Saxons in Suſſex 141, being King of the Weſt Saxons in Britain 177, unites the Britiſh and Engliſh by Marriage 178, his Laws 292, &c.
Indictions what 23.
Infangthef what 287.

Inguinaria Peſtis what 39.

Inundations moſt ſevere 301.

Ireland invaded by Egfrid King of the Northumbrian Angles in Britain 152, the cauſe of it 153.

Irene the Empreſs dies in baniſhment 341.

Iſaacius Comnenus ſaluted Emperour by the Army 454, aſſumes the Government 462, lays it down 463.

Italy overrun by Odoacer King of the Heruli, who is beaten by Theodorick King of the Goths 6, who reigns there 19, but are wholly driven thence by Narſes the Roman General 36, ſeized on by the Lombards 38, invaded by the Saracens 47, an expedition made thither by Conſtans the Emperour 49, Stirs among the Lombards there 56, invaded by the Franks 67, again 68, who ſeize on the Kingdom of the Lombards there 70, ſettle the Government 76, and their King being created Emperour reduces it into the form of a Province 80, all of it taken from the Roman Emperour except four Cities 441.

Jutes their original 8, their firſt Seats 123, their name whence 124, their poſſeſſions in Britain 132, the beginning of their Kingdom in Kent 134, the end of it 138.

K.

Kent whence ſo called 133, the Kingdom of the Jutes begun there 134, ended 138.

Kings of England how they ſtyled themſelves 273, the valuation of their Heads then 306, their uſual Subſidies, Revenues and Profits 334.

Kingſton whence ſo called.

L.

Laſhlite what 304.

Laws of the Lombards the firſt model by King Rotharis 47, the ſecond by King Gremoald 51, the third by King Liutprand 55, the fourth by King Lachis 61, their cuſtomary ones 70, &c.

The original of the Engliſh Saxon Laws what 290, of the Common Law 291, written Laws made by ſeveral of the Engliſh Saxon Kings 292, &c.

The Civil Law new modelled by Baſilius and Leo VI. 379, 380.

Leiden whence ſo called 110.

Leo V. Emperour beats the Bulgarians 348, his character 349, he is murthered 350.

Leo VI. Emperour 374, hath his Forces defeated by the Bulgarians 375, his Wives 376, he ſends a Land Army into the Eaſt 377, is excommunicated for marrying thrice, ibid. which is taken off 378, his Death 379, he new models the Civil Laws 80.

Leth or Laths what 304.

Liutprand King of the Lombards in Italy 55, invadeth the Exarchate 56, turns it into a Dukedom 57, he beſieges Rome 58, raſes it 59, makes a League with the Church for twenty years 60, invades the Exarchate again and dies 61.

Lombards their original 14, their Kingdom erected in Italy 38, their Habit what 41, their Kingdom in Italy wholly deſtroyed by the Franks 70, they revolt from the Romans 417.

M.

Mægbote what 308.

Man the Iſland 147.

Mancheſter whence ſo called 214.

Manichees being perſecuted revolt from the Empire 363, waſting the dominions thereof 369, but are wholly overcome 370.

Meanvari who 161.

Michael Rangabes Emperour 345, repells the invading Saracens 346, ingaging with the Bulgarians is defeated 347, and turns Monk 348.

Michael Balbus forceth Leo to uſurp 347, is made Patritian and Comes Excubitorum 348, conſpires againſt Leo 349, is ſaluted Emperour 350, his Character 351, a Rebellion againſt him 352, being beſieged in Conſtantinople 353, is relieved by the Bulgarians and puts the Rebels to death 354, finiſhes the Civil War 355, Marries a veil'd Virgin 356, dies 357.

Michael III. Emperour 363, makes War upon the Saracens but with ill ſucceſs 364, his Character 365, and death 368.

Michael IV. Emperour 430, makes his Nephew Cæſar 431, makes a Truce with the Saracens in Ægypt for thirty years 432, is very ſickly 433, goes to Theſſalonica 434, dies 436.

Michael Calaphates Emperour 437, turns Monk and hath his Eyes put out 439.

Michael Stratiaticus Emperour 457, his unkindneſs to the Souldiers 459, makes them conſpire againſt him, which ends in his depoſition 462.

Mortagon Prince of the Bulgarians relieves the beſieged Emperour 354.

N.

Neuſtria what 56.

Nicephorus Emperour 341, makes War upon the Arabians 342, makes an expedition into Bulgaria 343, but is there overthrown and ſlain 344, his Character 345.

Nicephorus Phocas ſaluted Emperour by the Army 344, crowned at Conſtantitinople 395, makes War upon the Saracens 346, leads an Army into Cilicia 397, ingages the Ruſſians to invade Bulgaria 398, is murthered 399.

Nova Scythia whence ſo called 8, & 120.

O.

OAths how valued by the Engliſh Saxons 307.

Odoacer King of the Heruli in Italy 1, takes courſes to ſecure his Intereſt 2, Conquers the Rugi 3, is beaten by Theodorick the Oſtrogoth 4, burns the Suburbs of Rome 5, is ſlain 6.

Offadini who 133.

Ordeal what 257, the manner of Examinations by a three-fold Ordeal 324.

Ordovices who 133.

Oſtrogoths whence ſo called 11, their Territories 17, their Kingdom begun in Italy 19, wholly deſtroyed 36.

Ouſe what 209.

P.

PArliament Engliſh of whom it conſiſted 273, when ſummon'd 474.

Patzinacæ invade Bulgaria 424, infeſt the Roman Coaſt 427, again 432, their Countrey where 449, quarrelling with the Empire are beaten 450, which ends in a Truce for thirty years, ibid. but they break it 452, defeating the Emperour's Army ſent againſt them 453, but come ſhort home 454, another Army ſent againſt them and a Peace for thirty years 455, breaking it are forced to ſubmit 462, they defeat the Uzi 464.

Peace of the King what 329.

Peuda 149, begins the Kingdom of the Mercian Angles in Britain 154, his management of affairs and death 160.

Pentapolis the Cities thereof 65.

Pipin the Father of Charles the French King invades Italy 64, whoſe Son is crown'd King thereof 77.

Port arrives in Britain 95.

Protoſtrator what 274.

R.

RAchis King of the Lombards in Italy 61, turns Monk 62.

Ravenna ſeiſed by Odoacer II. blockt up by Theodorick 5, the Goths are Maſters of it 19, recovered for Juſtinian the Emperour by Narſes 36, Governed by Exarchs 38, beſieged by the Lombards 56, taken and turn'd into a Dukedom 57, recovered 58, once more beſieged by the Lombards 61, and taken by them to the ruine of the Exarchate 62, which they could not long keep 63, being forced to quit it to the Pope 64, the Cities thereof 65.

Reafau what 199.

Regni who 133.

Relief what 327.

Repandune who 163, 198.

Robbers when ſo called 292, how many make a Troop of them, an Army how many, ibid.

Rollo with his Normans and Danes invade France 198, which they haraſs till Neuſtria is aſſigned them which they call Normandy 201, they come hither 208, but are warmly received 210.

Romanus ſeizes on Conſtantine the Emperour 384, Marrieth his Daughter to him 385, is crown'd Emperour himſelf, 386, crowns his Sons 387, is depoſed and ſhaven 390.

Romanus the Boy ſole Emperour 392, crowns his Son 393, dies 394.

Romanus IV. Emperour 424, makes an expedition into Syria 425, but returns with loſs 426, which alters him for the worſe 427, he is poyſoned by Zoe the Empreſs 429.

Roſſi who 365, invade Bulgaria 398, ſeize on the Countrey 400, but are defeated by the Emperour 404, cut off by the Patzinacæ 406.

Rotharis King of the Lombards in Italy 46, his Laws and Death 47.

Roxilani or Ruſſi who invade the Roman Coaſts 389.

S.

SAC what 287.
Saiſon and Saiſoneag what 114.

Saracens invading the Eaſt are repell'd 346, again 352, they ſeize on the Iſland Crete 356, Sicily and Calabria 357, defeat Theophilus the Emperour 359, invade the Territories of Cermatæ 360, beat the Emperour's Forces 361, and raſe the City Amorium 362, waſte the Eaſt 363, make another Incurſion on the Roman Coaſts 364, but in the next are beaten themſelves 365, they of Tarſus renew their hoſtility 370, Dalmatia waſted by thoſe of Carthage 371, thoſe of Tarſus and Crete infeſt the Empire 372, they of Africk take Syracuſe 373, another Incurſion 375, one more 376, they infeſt the Sea Coaſt 377, renewing their excurſions are defeated 378, but in the next adventure remain Victours 379, they make Peace with the Empire 383, they of Tripolis infeſt the Sea Coaſt 387, thoſe of Syria defeated 388, they of Chalope beaten 391, their Countrey invaded but with loſs to the Romans 392, they are beaten on all ſides by the Romans 393, & 397, endeavouring deavouring to revolt are ſuppreſſed 400, they joyn with Bardas Sclerus the Uſurper 408, pay tribute to the Romans 409, they ſuppreſs the rebelling Perſians 412, infeſting the Sea Coaſt are defeated by the Roman Forces 424, they beat Romanus the Emperour 426, and walte the Empire 427, thoſe of Africk infeſt the Iſlands 428, again 431, thoſe of Sicily renew their Inroads 433, hire the Turks to help them againſt the Arabians 446, but are conquered by thoſe Hirelings 447.

Saxons their Original 8, their ancient Seats 122, their Name whence 124, a Catalogue of their Kings 125, their Wars with the Danes 126, and others 128, they take Ship for Britain 130, when and where they landed 131, their Poſſeſſions here 132.

Saxons Eaſt their Kingdom here 142, overrun by Egbert King of the Weſt Saxons 143.

Saxons South their Kingdom here 139, ſeized on by Ina King of the Weſt Saxons 141.

Saxons Weſt their Kingdom here 167, from Cerdick the firſt King to Egbert 187, from him to the death of Edward the laſt of that family 264.

Scandia its ſeveral Inhabitants 7.

Scœte what 309.

Secundine 163.

Servi their Countrey where 440.

Shire what and whence ſo called 278.

Shiremote 282.

Silures who 133.

Simeon Prince of Bulgaria quarrels with the Romans 375, and in Battel defeats them 376, then makes peace 381, but upon an Affront incamps near Conſtantinople 382, lays ſiege to Adrianople 383, thence to Conſtantinople again 384, defeating the Emperour's Forces 386, lays ſiege to Adrianople again 387, dies 388.

Skioldinger what 9.

Slaves two ſorts of them 284.

Soc what 287.

Stauracius Emperour 342, marries another man's Wife 343, invades Bulgaria 344, where being wounded turns Monk and dies 345.

Stephen Biſhop of Rome goes into France 63, receives the Exarchate and Pentapolis from Pipin 65, dies 66.

Stonehenge 93.

Suevi their Seats where 17.

Suones Sittones whence ſo called 7.

Swane King of the Danes depoſeth his Father 220, invades England 229, waſtes it 235, becomes Maſter of moſt part thereof 236, is killed 237.

T.

TAinland what 286.

Team what 287, 302.

Thanes who 276, 286, the valuation of their Heads 306.

Theatres their Original 25.

Theft made capital 311, the chiefeſt vice of the Engliſh Saxons 334.

Theodora Wife to Theophylus 358, raiſes perſecution in the Eaſt 363, gives an account of the Treaſury 564, is ſhaven, ibid.

Theodora married to Zimiſces 402.

Theodora Daughter of Conſtantine 424, is ſaluted Empreſs 438, raigns with her Siſter Zoe 439, alone 456, dies 457.

Theodorich King of the Oſtrogoths invades Italy 3, overthrows the Gepidæ and Bulgari 4, is made Collegue with Odoacer 6, ſole Maſter of Italy 19, his way of Government 20, his acts of Mercy and Munificence 25, 26, he ſubdues the Allemans 30, turns cruel 31, dies 33.

Theophilus Emperour 357, his Character 358, ſends an Army into Lombardy 359, is beaten by the Saracens 360, turns Melancholy and dies 362.

Theophano her Parentage 391, being Empreſs marries Nicephorus Phocas 395, diſlikes him 398, is baniſhed by Zimiſces 400.

Thrihingas what 281.

Thrymſa what 308.

Tithing what and whence ſo called 278.

Titiones who 36.

Toll what 287, anciently payable 314.

Triballi their Countrey where 440.

Trenobantes who and whence ſo called 133.

Turkill and other Danes arrive in Britain 234.

Turks aſſiſt the Saracens againſt the Empire 361, invade Bulgaria 375, invade the Empire 389, the Original of them 446, they defeat the Saracens and Arabians 447, ſend an Army into Media 448, which returns with a Roman General taken captive 449, make freſh Incurſions 450, but with ill ſucceſs 451, Civil Wars at home 454, they invade the Roman Territories 458.

Tuſcia the Lombard Dukedom its demeans 70.

V.

VAluation of mens Heads 306.

Veſuvius its eruptions 26.

Villains whence ſo called 283.

Viſigoths whence ſo called 11, their Kings and progreſſes 11, 16.

Vortigern King of the Britains 89, invites the Saxons hither 90, dies 92.

W.

Wales the King thereof 103, the diviſion of it 104, its ancient Inhabitants 133, the value of a Welſhman's Head 293, 306, ſubject to the Engliſh Saxons and Danes 206, 247, Laws concerning them 321.
Wandals the Original of them 18.
Wapentack what and whence ſo called 280.
Were what 307.
Weregild 308.
Weſtrogoths whence ſo called 133.
William Duke of Normandy makes a viſit to Edward King of England 257, ingages with Harold for this Crown 263, ſends to Harold to make good his promiſe 265, which being refuſed he intends to viſit him 266, Lands, makes propoſals and prepares for Battel 268, obtains the Victory 269, is crowned King here 270, turning out the Engliſh and preferring his Normans 271.
Wite what 307.

Z.

Zimiſces Emperour 399, reduces the Saracens to obedience 400, makes War upon the Bulgarians 403, conquers them and the Roſſians 406, is poyſoned 407.
Zoe Empreſs 424, poyſoneth Romanus her Husband 429, Marries Michael IV. 430, is depoſed by Michael Calaphates 437, reſtored 438, Married to Conſtantine Monomachus 440, dies 455.

FINIS.

UMI